is that of a young lady who traveled upwards of two thousand miles, within about a month's time, to attend three one-day meetings at different times. When we made some inquiry of her about such a long trip, for only one-day meetings, and the attendant expenses, etc., she made light of it, notwithstanding she walks for her living. This same young lady wrote us not very long ago that her mind was as completely taken up with spiritual things that she was actually fearful of neglecting her daily routine work. There are not many of us who have this kind of worry. The church at Sardis was commended for having a few names which had not defiled their garments, and we are truly thankful that there are still a few, one here and there, who continually think upon the name of the Lord and meditate upon his word day and night. We are deeply grateful to God for the fact that the churches we try to serve are in peace and were so highly favored by him during the past year. The December Signs sets forth in part the manifold goodness of God to us, for which we humbly desire to praise his most holy name.

The diligence with which Roman Catholics attend their meetings is something which Old School Baptists might do well to consider and emulate. Too many of our brethren are inclined to let matters of little importance interfere with their meetings. Sometimes we fear they actually push the ox into the mire in order to have a plausible excuse to stay away from meeting. The brethren would not like it if the minister remained at home on some flimsy excuse. There may be some justification for one absenting himself from meeting where the minister spends the time that should be rightfully devoted to solenm and sacred worship in ranting and villifying some fellow minister with whom he disagrees. If the brethren, after laboring with such an one, cannot prevail upon him to refrain from such things, perhaps it would be good for his poor soul to have him go to meeting a few times and find only vacant seats before him. In most instances, we believe that God has placed gifts in the church who are able to discern between the flesh and the spirit, and when they see that a minister, even though he be the pastor, is motivated by a fleshly spirit, they should be faithful to their charge and do all within their power to discourage him in his course. Perhaps they may be able to save a soul from death, his usefulness to the church, while if they shut their eyes and neglect their duty the whole body, or church, may be cast into hell fire, or the candlestick removed altogether. The world to-day is in the depth of despond and misery because of bad leadership, and the church should beware of those undershepherds who appear to have so little regard for the peace and welfare of Zion.

We do not feel that the condition of our churches on the whole is as bad as some would have us believe. From time to time we are receiving encouraging reports from various sections of our country. One brother writes as follows: "We are having some wonderful meetings with some of our churches in this association. It seems the Lord, as he has promised, is visiting Zion again. A good many little ones are coming home to their friends, asking for a home." We truly hope that God will make us mindful of the manifold blessings which we are constantly receiving from his hand, and that he will at the same time be pleased to awaken us anew to a full realization of the fact that without him we can do nothing, thereby causing us to cry mightily and fervently unto him for that peace and tranquility for which Zion daily mourns. Of a truth, there is salvation in none other than the God of spiritual Israel. We rejoice that it is written, "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea: Though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof. Selah," Psalm 46:1-3.

Finally, dear readers, not only for the ensuing year, but throughout all the years to come, may "the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen."

DEAR SISTER KENNEDY: I received your good letter and was glad to hear from you. Dessie Mae had just written you. We planned to go to meeting at Rehobeth yesterday but the buses were snow-bound and we did not get to go. We have not been since last third Sunday and I am very anxious to attend again. Sister Kennedy, I will be very glad to send in your remittance to the Signs of the Times for you and I will do it as soon as I can get to it. I have been so busy lately that I have not had time for any corresponding. I like my work very well but I have to work night and day and then it seems I never catch up. I am teaching science, but the trouble is that when I am preparing for class I am thinking of the only true Scientist, "Declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times, the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and will do all my pleasure." It was he who fixed the earth, stars, sun, moon, and everything else so that all things move precisely in their predestined paths. The minds and environment of all human beings, as well as animals, are so fixed that everything, act and thought, comes into reality just as God has fixed it. He has so arranged all this so that everything works together for good to those whom God has chosen in Christ before the foundation of the earth. I am teaching arithmetic, but the trouble is that when I am preparing for he next class am thinking of how God enabled his little children to add to their faith, virtue, and to virtue, knowledge, etc., etc. I think of Paul's words that were addressed to Timothy when he said: "Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." I think of how that God will multiply the peace and grace of his children. I think of how that he will take away their sins, and will remember no more their transgressions. I am teaching typing, but the trouble is when I am preparing for an assignment I am thinking of the types and shadows of the Old Testament. I think of the Typist who makes no typographical errors, but who reveals the true meaning of these types to his servants whom he has qualified and sent out for the purpose of making plain these things to his children. I am teaching bookkeeping but the trouble is when I am preparing for the next class, I am thinking of a partnership of Christ and the church where all the assets are in Christ Jesus and the liabilities are in the people but the liabilities all sink into oblivion through the proprietorship of God, the Father; Christ, the Son; the Holy Ghost; dissolved into the church. We have no merits to list as assets. All we have is debts which were well disposed of when Jesus' obedience of the law was credited to our account. I am teaching history, but the trouble is. when of I am preparing for the next lesson. I am in thinking of the history of the world and church. I think of Adam, the first man, of Abraham. Isaac, Jacob, Noah, David, Solomon, the flood. the old covenant, the new covenant, Jesus, the great Ambassador from the Father. I am also made to meditate upon the terrible chaotic condition of this sinful, warring world. Were it not for the confidence I have in the Upholder and Disposer of all things, I feel that I would sink by the wayside. I am made to be comforted with the thought that God controls every bullet, bomb, cannon and all destroyers. He controls all generals, kings, governors and presidents, as well as, each and every soldier, marine, sailor, wave, waac, and even the hairs of the heads of each and every one who is engaged in this terrible and awful war. I believe God has a grand and noble purpose in each and every battle, and that he will take care of all his children and nothing can befall them beyond his determinate counsel. I believe God's people will be brought closer to their Maker, and be made to depend entirely upon him for all things. I believe the nations will all be made to bow to His Majesty. Now, sister Kennedy, I realize that I have written far more than I felt that I could when I started, but I hope that you have not been too wearied reading this. I realize that it is very imperfect, but I hope you will at least forgive me for relieving my mind. It is late now so I will let Dessie Mae finish the letter. Let me say, however, that it is always a pleasure to read a letter from you.

DEAR BROTHER DODSON, if one so unworthy as I feel to be should be allowed to address you as brother: While attending a meeting at Dallas, Texas last week, some five hundred miles from here, two of the Lord's little ones asked me to send in their subscriptions for the Signs of the Times. I have been reading the Signs for about forty-eight years, and still look forward to its coming. O, how the Lord has blessed it all these years, to hold up for an Almighty God, an all wise God, and a God that purposed all things and has power to bring them all to pass. Yes, dear brother, he never tries anything to see if it will work, there are no doubts in his mind. It is one eternal now with him. The same to-day, yesterday and and forever. The Prince of Peace, the mighty God. He is the first cause of all causes; and everything bows in submission to his will, and at the right time in order to bring about his decrees and purposes. When he begins a good work in your heart he will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ. I remember back when I was just a boy, how I would hide the Signs in my shirt and slip off to the woods on Sunday and read it, trying to find some comfort for my poor soul, and when I would get home with my eyes red from crying, my father would scold me be for staying in the river too long. I would take the scolding and not tell him I had not been near the river. Sometimes I hope when reading those experiences back there I could shed tears for joy for God's little ones when they would tell about the Lord speaking peace to their troubled souls. I longed for some bright evidence like theirs, and am still hoping for more and more evidence all the time. We are never satisfied. The Lord works in a mysterious way, his wonders to perform, and sometimes we get a blessing from the least expected source. Some time back I was going to my appointment two hundred fifty miles from home, and as I drove along the highway I got into a depressed condition of doubts and fears that it was all a mistake, my going so far to meeting. It seemed that I ought to stay at home. I was just fooling the people, an old hypocrite and it was all of the flesh. While in this condition I was tempted several times to turn back and not go on. O, if I had just the least bit of evidence from heaven that God was in the matter it would be alright. Meeting passed off as usual, and as we left the church a friend got into the car with me. As we drove up in front of the home of his mother-in-law he put his arm around me and began crying, saying, he did not know why he kept going to these Old Baptist meetings, that the Lord showed him over 30 years ago his place was in hell. Then he said last week while he was plowing in the field he said to himself, why did Eugene bring all those good people and come to my place before the meeting? Then he said a voice spoke to him saying, he did not do it, he was sent. Then I broke down and cried for that was the unexpected. comfort I was longing for, just to know I was sent and that it was not of myself. That did my poor soul so much good, and ever since it is a sweet memory to think about. How blue I was and on the same trip so wonderously blessed through a friend that did not even belong to the church. Last September will be a long remembered month with me. I baptized two into the church here and two into the church at Stockdale and attended an Association about eight hundred miles from home. All was peace and harmony. Brothers and sisters were there from Arkansas, Louisiana and Texas. Surely the Lord has a remnant yet in this part of the world that is declaring for the same old doctrine that Jesus set forth some two thousand years ago. These are perilous times and transportation is a serious problem, but if any of the readers of the Signs are coming south for the winter we want them to come see us. We are only five miles from the Mexican border in the center of the Rio Grande Valley. A poor dependent sinner, saved by grace if saved at all.

ROMANS 8: 27-28.

And he that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God.

And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.

ISAIAH XXVI. 19.

"Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead."

We have understood this passage to express a glorious promise given in prophecy, to the church of God, assuring her that her dead men should be quickened simultaneously with the resurrection of the crucified body of our Lord Jesus Christ. Some of our brethren however, have taken a different view of the subject. We do not claim to be wiser, or more infallible that they, but whether this text be applicable to the resurrection of Christ from the dead, and the life of his church in him or not, the apostles by inspiration have established the certainty that the church are risen with Christ, and that God who is rich in mercy, for the great love wherewith he hath loved us, hath quickened us together with Christ, and has raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places, in Christ Jesus. We do not, however, understand that this, or any other passage, implies that the resurrection of the bodies of the saints should be simultaneous with the resurrection of the crucified body of our Lord, for the inspired apostles have, since the resurrection of Christ from the dead, assured us of a resurrection at the last day, when these mortals shall put on immortality, and these corruptibles, incorruption, and the saying shall be brought to pass, That death is swallowed up in victory. Then shall the last enemy be destroyed, which is death, and the kingdom of Christ, in all its fullness and glory, shall be delivered to God, even the Father. But in the subject which we understand to be contemplated in our text, and in parallel texts, the Mediatorial union of Christ and his church is strongly implied. As Christ has carried and borne his members all the days of old so he carried and bore them when he poured out his soul unto death, when his body slumbered in the grave, and when he burst the bars of death and triumphed over the grave. It was our death which he died, as it is his life which we live. Zion's dead men were quickened together with Christ, and they were raised up together, and sit together in heavenly places.

Omitting the italicized words used in this text, by the translators, it will read, "Thy dead men shall live, my dead body shall they arise," &c. If this be the correct rendering of the text, the promise which it contains would seem to us to apply either to the regeneration and ingathering of the saints as the members of his mystical body, and the bringing them into the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, to a perfect man; to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ, or to the final resurrection of the bodies of his redeemed people. Which of the three applications is correct, if any, we leave to our readers generally to judge, as in any or all of them the doctrine is established by the plain Scriptures. Therefore, "Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust." God's people while here in the flesh, dwell in the dust, for their mortal bodies are of the earth, earthy, even as the Lord said to Adam, "For dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return." And Paul said, "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life which I now live in the flesh [or the dust], I live by the faith of the Son of God," &c. In this sense God's quickened children, while in the house of their pilgrimage, dwell in the dust, and are called on to awake and sing. But there is another sense in which the words are sometimes, and perhaps more generally used in the Scriptures, as signifying a low condition, captivity and worldly afflictions, and this seems to harmonize with the state of the church as set forth in the chapter of which our text is a part. All their own efforts for deliverance had proved abortive, and they are represented as discouraged, but the word of the Lord comes to them in their lowly condition with consolation, turning their mourning into joy, saying, Awake and sing, thou that dwellest in the dust. As in Isaiah lii. 1, 2, "Awake, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion: put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city  shake thyself from the dust; arise and sit down, O Jerusalem: loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion." As her day of joy and gladness dawns upon her, she is called upon to arise and sing. Let her tears be dried, and let the bands of her captivity be removed from her neck, let her put on her beautiful apparel, and be clothed with her strength. "For thy dew is as the dew of herbs." The doctrine of God our Savior is compared to dew. Deut. xxxii. 2, "My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distil as the dew." The doctrine expressed in the speech of our Lord, has the reviving effect on the disconsolate saints, that rain has upon grass, and dew upon the tender herb. It revives, quickens, invigorates the saints, as the rain and dew causes the earth to develop its vegetation. When the precious seed is buried in the earth, it remains there concealed, until the earth is moistened by the showers of rain, or refreshed by the gentle dew. Under the influence of the heaven inspired doctrine of Christ, the saints arise from the dust, they awake and sing, they arise and shine, the lame man leaps like the hart, the tongue of the stammerer speaks plainly, and the dumb shout for joy. "And the earth shall cast out the dead." As the parched ground which contains the precious seed, when cheered by the dew, casts out the tender blade, and finally the full corn in the ear, so shall the earth cast out, make manifest and fully develop the sons of Zion, when the seasons of refreshing came from the presence of our God. And so the fruits of the Spirit are made to appear in the saints who dwell in the dust, when the doctrine of our God descends on them, and their fruit is unto holiness, and the end everlasting life.

HOSEA VI: I.

"Come and let us return unto the Lord: for he hath torn, and he will heal us; he hath smitten, and he will bind us up."

The language of Ephraim and Judah in the text, implies a confession that they had departed from the Lord, and had gone into idolatry, and that the Lord in covenant faithfulness had humbled them by sore chastisement. As he had said in chapter v. 14, "For I will be unto Ephraim as a lion, and as a young lion to the house of Judah; I, even I, will tear and go away; I will take away, and none will rescue him." These fearful judgments had been felt, and being thus abased before the Lord, their language is, "Come, and let us return unto the Lord." They acknowledge that the hand of the Lord had been upon them, and that he alone could heal them. In the prophetic import of the subject, Judah and Ephraim appear to represent the church of God in her gospel organization, who, like the type, manifests a strong inclination to run into idolatry, by departing from the Lord in doctrine, in practice and in the discipline and order of his house. In all such cases, God is faithful to the provisions of his covenant. He will, and he does, visit the transgressions of his children with a rod, and their iniquities with many stripes, until they feel suitably humbled, feel a contrition of heart for their follies, and a desire to return to the order of the gospel. Then their language will be like that of Judah and Ephraim, "Come, and let us return unto the Lord." They understand that afflictions have not arisen up out of the dust, nor their troubles come upon them by chance. The Lord has torn them, and he alone can heal the breach. When churches forsake the laws and ordinances of the gospel, depart from the simplicity of the doctrine and practice which he has laid down and enjoined, they soon become torn, divided and scattered, they lose that heavenly love and unity, so far as the sensible enjoyment of it is considered, and they are made to feel the folly of their course. With deep repentance they are then heard to say, "Come, and let us return unto the Lord," for it is his hand that is upon us, and he alone can heal us. An assurance springs up in their heart; faith in them revived, lays hold of the new covenant promise that he will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and iniquities he will remember no more.

HYMN

FATHER, we bow before thy throne
With hearts oppress'd with grief
Our pastor's gone; we're left alone;
Where shall we find relief?

Thy word he faithfully proclaimed,
His doctrines from it drew;
Regardless whether praised or blamed,
So he thy will might do.

Nor did he merely preach alone;
Obedience marked his way;
His holy life, as well as tongue,
Inclined to endless day.

We feel the loss of such a guide;
And now, before thy throne,
We pray his loss may be supplied,
Supplied by thee alone.

Give us a pastor in his room,
To wipe our falling tears;
And guide and guard us safely on
From all our rising fears.

"But the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." Proverbs 4:18.

Elder J. B. Farmer

This scripture was brought to my attention and made precious to me some years ago and it still is precious. We had started from home before daylight, in thick darkness, on our way to a Church meeting in Virginia. Traveling mostly eastward, after a while we began to see a faint glow of light in the distance before us. As we traveled, the light became brighter and brighter very slowly until the sun finally arose to completely dispel the darkness. This scripture, which I had read many times, came to mind, and it appeared to be an indication or a figure of the journey of God's little children here in this world.

I have thought of this scripture many times since, and have mentioned it from the stand occasionally. But here recently it became the central thought in my mind while standing to speak. I don't know if any of the things that appeared to me there will come to mind again as I sit down to write. Or if they do, I wonder whether they will appear with the same sweetness and power as they did then. I am persuaded of this: anything spoken or written, that is a comfort to the Lord's people, is a gift and it must be revealed from above. "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." The blessed apostle said that he was not taught the gospel of men and did not learn it from them, but that it came by the revelation of Jesus Christ. The one who speaks or writes must be inspired of God and the one who hears or reads must be inspired also for there to be any real profit.

All of the sheep of God's pasture come into the world as sheep. And before the birth, each little one was shut up in complete darkness. But when that one is brought to the birth, he is delivered into the light where he begins to see and hear and feel things he never experienced before. In the beginning he only knows how to cry when in distress, whether it be because of physical discomfort, or hunger, or fear or any other thing that troubles him. The Lord is the Good Shepherd and He cares for His sheep. And His eye is upon each little one in mercy and compassion. He gently supplies the needs and wants of each one of His precious flock according to His abundant mercy and grace all the days of its life.

Jacob, at the commandment of God, returned from his father-in-law Laban to his homeland with his family and flocks. After many fears and dreads he met his estranged brother Esau and was reconciled to him. Esau told Jacob that he would go before him and would lead the way back. Jacob said unto him,

"My lord knoweth that the children are tender, and the flocks and herds with young are with me: and if men would overdrive them one day, all the flock will die. Let my lord, I pray thee, pass over before his servant: and I will lead on softly, according as the cattle that goeth before me and the children be able to endure, until I come unto my lord unto Seir." Genesis 33:13-14. Is this not a beautiful example of how the Lord ministers unto His little ones? He will not suffer them to be overdriven one day, lest they all die. But He leads on softly as they are able to endure the difficulties of the way. How sweet it is to be made to remember the promise of God to His little ones. He said, "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. For he knoweth our frame and remembereth that we, are dust." And the apostle, by revelation, said, "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." And in another place it is written, "Hearken unto me, O house of Jacob, and all the remnant of the house of Israel, which are borne by me from the belly, which are carried from the womb: and even to your old age I am he; and even to horry hairs will I carry you: I have made, and I will bear; even I will carry, and will deliver you." He provides all our needs and considers us to be as little lambs, even when the gray hairs adorn our heads and even to death — and beyond.

The Lord teaches his people precept upon precept, line upon line, here a little and there a little. And when He teaches one a portion of His truth, that truth remains. When one is established in a point of doctrine, all the demons of the kingdom of the devil are not able to move him from it or it from him. What God has done is done forever, and no one can add anything to it or take anything from it. But it is not all given at once. The little ones are taught as they are able to receive it. David said, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." As God reveals His word to one, the path begins to be illuminated. And as the little one is blessed to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, his way is made brighter and brighter. Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." On our life's journey, we are traveling along the way home to God our Father. The Lord is with us all the way, and shall be revealed in all His glory at the end of our course. As we are blessed to follow on after the Lord, and as we are taught, and as we are given to trust Him, we have no doubt His word is true. The Holy Spirit said through Solomon, "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths." And David said by the Holy Spirit, "He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake." And he also said, "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

When Stephen came down to the end of his journey, as he preached the gospel, the unbelievers hated what they heard and hated him. They gnashed upon him with their teeth and began to stone him to death. He was given grace not to condemn them, but to pray that this sin not be laid to their charge. But an amazing thing is recorded in this event. As Stephen was dying, the heavens were opened unto him and he was blessed to see the glory of God and Jesus standing on the right hand of God. "But the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." I cannot help believing that this account of this revelation to Stephen was preserved for and given to us that we might understand that the journey's end of each little child of grace is to see Jesus in His glory. I am made to believe that when we shut our eyes in death here, they are opened to the beauties and wonders of heaven and immortal glory. When we die, the body returns to the dust according to the scripture. But the spirit returns to God who gave it.

I do not believe in the teaching of soul sleep. But I do believe the doctrine of the soul that returns to God with the spirit at the death of the body. I believe that the Lord gives us just enough knowledge to assure us of the estate of the just and the unjust after death. He gave us the story of the rich man and Lazarus — and I do not believe it is a parable, but an actual event because Lazarus is named. I cannot think of a single parable where a person is named. The rich man died and was buried, and in hell lift up his eyes being in torments. But when Lazareth died, he was carried by the angels into the bosom of Abraham (the name Abraham means Father) where he was comforted. For one to be comforted he must be aware. The apostle said, "To be absent from the body is to be present with the Lord." I cannot help believing that the part of man that sleeps in death is our bodies that return to the dust. And I must also believe the spirit and soul are alive and awake with God in glory immediately after death. Some might say, why then is there a need for the resurrection, if the children of God are already with Him? I believe they are with Him in Spirit as observers only. When the body shall be raised and made spiritual, and the body, soul and spirit are united, the child of God shall be a complete spiritual man (body, soul and spirit) and a full participant in heaven and heavenly things forever.

The child of God is referred to as the just. To be just is to be justified, or made free from sin by the sacrifice and blood of Christ. The child of God, or the just, is brought from darkness into His marvelous light. That light shines on his path and gets gradually brighter and brighter along the way, and shines even more as the end of his journey draws near. And as the Sun rises in its full glory at sunrise, so shall the Lord appear when we lay our heads down in death. And in the fullness of the glory of the Lord shall all the little lambs of God dwell in the house of the Lord forever. "But the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." This is my hope and my trust.

ROMANS 7:22-25.

For I delight in the law of God after the inward man:

But I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members.

O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?

I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin.

If I Knew

If I knew how to thank Him
For my very breath of life
And for His care keeping me
From a world full of strife

If I knew how to thank Him
For my first and second birth
That taught me very early
His merits and His worth

If I knew how to thank Him
For fellowship with His sheep
The joy of Churches visited
And His Blessing our faith to keep

If I knew how to thank Him
For His son and precious blood
The full expression of His love
That binds us safe to God

If I knew how to thank Him
For a hope so pure and strong
For tender mercies and handfuls of purpose
I have reached as I humbly press along

If I knew how to thank Him
For His suffering on the cross
For His tears, persecution and death
That I would suffer no loss

If I knew how to thank Him
For His life after He died
Fulfilling a will when all things end
We shall with Him in Glory abide

If I knew how to thank Him
For but just a few of these
Or more of His Blessings my heart knows
I would be forever on my knees

VOICES OF THE PAST

Dear Ones In Christ,

I have been asked by several to write what I see in a few verses of The Word. I will attempt to do so with fear. I shall not be able to convey the fullness of beauty and therefore come short of my endeavors and be open for much criticism.

In the 24th Chapter of Genesis the third and fourth verses read - "And I will make thee swear by the Lord, the God of heaven, and the God of the earth, that thou shalt not take a wife unto my son of the daughters of the Canaanites, among whom I dwell. But thou shalt go unto my country and to my kindred and take a wife unto my son Isaac." This was the command of Abraham to his oldest servant. We might note here that Isaac was born to Sarah when she felt she was beyond age for such. Sarah laughed when the Lord told her she would bring forth a son, thus the name Isaac in the Hebrew tongue means "laughter." Let us here remember that the Lord told another that she would bear a son and she (Mary) also thought it impossible for she said "she knew no man."

I feel this servant is typical of God's ministers who are not told to go to the world (Canaanites) to seek The Bride but to go to His people. I'm sure this servant began in great fear the journey set before him as we (if I might include myself) go with much fear and as he, with a prayer in our hearts. We must consider he was going to a place that he had not gone before and to visit a people he didn't know.

The prayer in the heart of this servant was that when he reached a certain well he would rest and seek water for himself and his camels. We note there were ten camels thus seeing the ten laws that in essence were conveying him (and us today) through Christ. For we each know the command of the master is perfect and just. He desired of God that a damsel would meet him at the well and give him water and also his camels (this water typical of communion embodies the law as well as the servant and bride). He saw his prayers answered in the person of Rebekah meaning flattering or to please and gratify.

Rebekah went down and drew water and gave the servant drink and also his camels. How often do we receive of the church something that refreshes us along the way? He asked her who she was and she replied she was the daughter of Nahor, brother of Abraham. She surely typifies the church who is truly related to Christ through His blood for it is His blood that makes us all relatives in spirit.

The servant relates to Rebekah his business (as we do also) to the church, and she told him there was room in the house of her family and also room and provender for his camels. We find always when the will of God is manifest that our prayers are answered and there is room and sustenance.

The servant and Rebekah leave the well and go to meet her people. This servant states his business to her family and tells them of his prayer and how he surely feels it is answered. There is no doubt or fear now (as it was in the beginning) for he sees the journey has prospered. God's true ministers can feel the journey has been worth it all when they can feel for a few moments that truly there is communication between them and the House of Faith.

Let us now behold what it is all about. This servant states that his master (God) is rich (verses 35 & 36) and hath given his all to his son Isaac (Christ) and he must have Rebekah return with him to be wife to Isaac. We as servants cannot carry you to Christ but we can indeed tell you where He dwells and that He is rich, in mercy, love, compassion, any and all things needed by the church (bride).

We note that Rebekah is a virgin and as Mary, said she had known no man. The church cannot be adulterated because it is preserved in the blood of Christ. It knows no man (worldly) as its designer and are we not glad this is truth? We know that she (the church) is virgin because she has the love of and love for He who rules all. She has not and cannot be polluted by the cunningness of the mind of man. Thanks be to God she shall remain virgin until the wedding is performed before the Throne of God.

Rebekah's family is concerned about her going and asks that she remain ten days at least. We see again the ten laws which must be gone beyond in order for the Master and Bride to come together; thus Christ fulfilled such that we may meet him some day. Her family is told so and that they must leave as soon as possible. We say to you of God's love that Christ waits today for the coming of the Bride and the same feeling of longing to go, fills the heart of the Bride.

The servant and Rebekah make their journey together. God's ministers and the Bride are truly traveling together going to a home the Bride hath not seen. I feel that sometimes ministers see through a glass darkly that home and encourage the Bride along the way. The journey is often hot (Satan is along) and dry (thus we thirst) and there are storms that except for God's grace would cause us to flee and seek shelter. We have been taught, however, that we already are sheltered underneath His wings.

They now approach home and Rebekah sees walking in a field a man and asks of the servant who he is. We know who He is for as we have seen Him (spiritually) walking the fields of Grace with handfuls of purpose we feel sure we shall see Him walking the fields of Salvation and Deliverance. The servant tells her it is the husband to be and with joy she alights from the camel (the law) and leaves worldly goods and the servant to meet this man face to face. My dear ones we shall leave everything here before we approach the One whom our souls lovest even the body of flesh that has carried the spirit all the way until death.

We as mortal beings cannot comprehend the joy and ecstasy Rebekah surely felt as she ran to meet her husband to be. It is my prayer that we who are on a journey like unto this one (with which we can relate) will surely see our Savior in the realms of Glory and there know Him as the true Son to whom the Master (God) gave the wealth of salvation. He now in being the Husband, hath given wealth as inheritance and a home of glory where we shall dwell forever.

Now my dear readers if you find there is merit in my thoughts give the Master all the praise for I am but a lowly servant. If you find fault and do not agree then blame me for it is because of my weakness and not the Master's.

SOLOMON'S SONG 8:1

"O that thou wert as my brother, that sucked the breasts of my mother! When I should find thee without, I would kiss thee; yea, I should not be despised."

"O that thou wert as my brother."

This is a desire on the part of the church, the bride, for a closer and more intimate relationship with Christ. It is the longing expressed by the elect of God all through the Old Testament for the coming of their Redeemer in the flesh, that he might become as one of themselves, incarnated in the flesh for the purpose of redeeming his people from sin and death, and corruption into the kingdom of God. As our Elder Brother, Christ, was born of a woman, was made under the law to redeem them that are under the law. Inasmuch as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also likewise himself took part of the same that he through death might, destroy him that had the power of death and deliver them who through fear of death were all their life time subject to bondage. The eternal Son of God became Son of Man, he became a member of the human family with his people, thus manifesting himself as the Elder Brother of those he came to save. Throughout the former dispensations, this was the desire and longing on the part of those, who by faith, hoped for the coming of the Lord who, coming in the flesh without sin, should deliver his waiting ones from the bondage of sin and corruption. This hope, Abel confessed when he offered the slain lamb in anticipation of the coming, centuries hence, of the Lamb of God who should take away the sin of the world of his elect. Likewise, Noah when he builded an ark to the saving of his house, and Abraham when he left his nativity and became a stranger and sojourner in hope of the promised Seed in whom all the families of the earth were to be blessed. Also, old Simeon, when he came into the temple and taking the Christ child in his arms, rejoiced thus: "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word: For mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people." However, the meaning in this text looks farther than the longing of the elect of God under the legal and prophetical dispensations, for the first coming of Christ when he came to accomplish redemption for his people; it also expresses the hope and longing of God's people in this present age for his second coming, at which coming his people raised from the dead completely, and glorified in the image of Christ their Head and Husband, shall go with him into the marriage supper of the Lamb to enjoy a fuller and more complete intimacy with this Elder Brother than ever has been theirs on earth, a blessed and blissful communion which shall know no end. To be sure, the saints of God enjoy through the sweet offices of the Holy Spirit, seasons of communion with this Brother of ours who occupies the throne in heaven. A veil shuts him from our sight, but then the veil shall be done away, we shall see him as he is and be like him. This is the hope that supports us under life's trials and temptations, the blessed hope that we shall behold him for ourselves and not for another. But let us pass on to he next phrase of our subject.

"That sucked the breasts of my mother"

That is, that Jesus and his people should be nourished at the same source. Primarily, the church in view in this text is the church as it was under the law, which church was then enclosed in the Jewish economy, and Jesus, himself, came as a Jew He said: "Salvation is of the Jews" meaning that himself, the bringer of salvation, was a Jew. The Jewish church was at that time under the legal covenant, that covenant which Moses was the mediator, he having received that legal covenant for Israel from the hand of God and having delivered it unto them. Under this covenant, not only in the letter but in the spirit of it, Christ came. Hence, the word "mother" would indicate the "covenant." But not merely so. Christ was the minister of a better covenant than that which stood in meats and drinks and holy days, although he in himself fulfilled every type and shadow pictured forth in the blood of bulls and goats which, of themselves, could not remove guilt. The law was a transcript of the revealed will of God, and this will Jesus delighted to do, it was his meat and drink. Hence, not merely the legal covenant which was the expressed will of God, but the everlasting covenant ordered in all things and sure which was contracted in the council of eternity with the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, was the breast from which the Son of Man drew his sustenance as well as did those he came to save. Both church and Savior are nourished at the breast of the same everlasting covenant. All the blessings which any and all believers enjoy either in time or in eternity, flow out of this everlasting covenant. The same may be said of Jesus, not as he was the eternal Son of God, but as he was our Elder Brother who took our human nature on him to come! where his people were under curse and condemnation, that he might deliver them. According to that everlasting covenant, the Father promised to support the Son, to uphold him, to be his strength, to deliver him from his enemies, to not suffer him to see corruption, to show him the path of life and to prolong his days in resurrection. Hence, from this breasted everlasting covenant, every true believer draws the milk of his consolations and his hope, and so did our Elder Brother in his incarnation from the same fountain draw his sufficiency for all he had to undergo. For while as the eternal, Son of God, he needed no per fecting outside of his own perfect Diety, yet as One' with his people in their trials and temptations, he needed to be succored even as they. While he was made perfect as the captain of our salvation, he himself needed no perfecting as regards his Godhead. But as captain, he is the forerunner for his people, and so ahead of them suffered, all things for them. He was often hungry, weak, weary, sorrowful and in agony even unto death. In all these things, we see his perfect humanity sorely tried, not for himself but for his people. The secret of his human ability to stand all this, was that intimacy between the Father and the Son by which the Son drew his consolation from the will and promise of his Father according to the everlasting covenant between them entered into in the ancient of eternity.

"When I should find thee without"

That is, that word "without" means "outside." The bodies of those beasts which were made a sacrifice for sin, were burned without, or outside, the camp. "Wherefore, Jesus also, that he might sanctify the people with his own blood, suffered without the gate." And there the church goes forth unto him. In her salvation, she finds him outside Judaism, outside self-help, outside any merit or strength or goodness of her own. She will never find him until she is brought without the camp unto him. Jesus came to a defunct and an apostate Judaism and led His OWN SHEEP out of it. He called them by name and they left all and went after him. Matthew left his tax-collecting, Peter and Andrew their boats, others left houses and lands and natural relationships and found him outside all these. No sinner ever finds the Savior on their own bed, not in the place where they have been at ease: they must pass beyond all that, then they find him. How many who read this, know this by experience? No man, of himself searching, can find out God; yet there is a blessed seeking and a knocking that does find him, to which the Lord graciously opens. No beggar yet was ever turned empty away from the door of mercy. If we come in idle curiosity, we find the door shut and barred; but if we are blessed to come with hungry hearts and longing souls, as perishing sinners, we find an open door, and Jesus is that door by which if any man enter in he shall be saved and shall go in and out and find pasture. Dear reader, is there a crumb for you in all this? "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth." The "ends of the earth" are not a matter of geography, they cannot be located on any atlas of the world. The "ends of the earth" are spiritual. These "ends" are those Who have come to the end of themselves, to the end of all self-right eousness. The soul has, in despair, come to the end of a dead-end street. It had thought this to be the way of life, it now sees that way to end in death. There must be a turning around. Isaiah heard the voice behind him saying: "This is the way, walk ye in it." And, O blessed truth,

Jesus is exalted at the right hand of God a Prince and Savior, to grant this repentance, this "turning around", to those who come to him by faith. For he that cometh unto him, Jesus will not cast out; and those coming to him are drawn of the Father. Verily the church, the bride, find her Beloved "without" or "outside" the camp of Judaism. As the offal of the. slain beasts was taken outside the camp and burned, so our blessed Jesus was led forth through the north gate outside Jerusalem to be crucified, and there also his people find him as they too pass outside all that an apostate and wicked and self-centered Jerusalem signified. He was counted as the off-scouring of all things, as mere dung and offal; and so his people pass out to him in a kindred experience in fellowship with him. And this brings us to the next:

"I would kiss thee"

The "kiss" is significant of love, of fellowship, of holy intimacy and com munion. In proportion as we are led into the fellowship of Christ's sufferings and are experimentally conformed to his death, do we "kiss" him, have fellowship with him. Above we spoke of passing outside an apostate Judaism in order to find salvation, but are we not today living within a period which witnesses an alarming decay of Christianity? Does not Christianity today stand in about the same relationship to Christ as Judaism did at his first coming? There is very much, yes very much, today in Christendom that one must be outside of if one truly desires fellowship with Christ. A defunct Judaism crucified our Lord, and an apostate Christianity would today crucify him if he were to return and submit himself to it. The word of command for us who believe is; "Be not conformed to this world". The friendship of the world worketh death. "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." Those are burning words, words such as search the hearts and minds of those professing to be followers of Christ. There is very much spiritual adultery in the lives and professions of those who hold on to the world with one hand while they try to serve God with the other. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." "No man can serve two masters." God will not accept divided or half-hearted loyalty. Ye shall love the Lord, thy God, with all thy and and heart and strength, and thy neighbor as thyself. Christ did not come to void this commandment but to make it effectual in the lives of his people. The righteousness of the law is fulfilled in those who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit. At the time of the protestant reformation, there were many who passed out of a Christdenying God-dishonoring Roman Catholicism and stood outside all that Rome signified, in order to have sweet fellowship and communion with the God of their salvation. They found they could not stay inside Roman Catholicism and have any "kiss" of their Beloved. The word of command was given them: "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord. Almighty." Plainly showing that there must be a going forth unto Christ outside the camp, not only of Judaism but also of Catholicism and of Protestantism, if there is to be any "kiss" or communion with him. The Laodicean church was about to be rejected by our Lord because she was altogether worldy, rich and self-sufficient, not needing anything. The bulk of Chris tian profession is like that to-day. I am today blessed to be acquainted with some precious and choice souls who are living outside all church affiliations because of the fact they cannot fellowship teachings and practises "inside the camp." These who are thus aloof from all they believe to be false and disloyal to Christ, do not feel themselves to be above their brethren or better than their brethren, but for conscience sake they must dwell outside the camp or else compromise their faith which they cannot do. These "outside" cases are enjoying some sweet "kisses" and some precious communion with their Beloved. Can we not bring this matter nearer to our own hearts? Ought we not ask ourselves if we are honest in these things? Have we left all for Christ? or do we hang on to the treasures of self and of the world, having great posessions, while yet hypocritically professing to have kept the whole law, that is to have done all that is commanded us, as his followers, to do. Are not we Old School Baptists too loath to give up secret societies and all other worldly affiliations in order to live with Christ? Are we not too prone to harbor prejudices, envy and even malice and anger, against those whom we should esteem as brethren? Are we not biting and devouring one another and thus being destroyed one of another? And dare we expect the "kiss" of our beloved unless we pass outside all this and eschew it entirely? Dear reader, we each need to examine our own hearts in these things and not seek to remove the mote from another's eye unless the beam is out of our own.

"Yea, I should not be despised"

She, the bride, cares nothing that she is despised in the eyes of men and of this present evil world, she counts that an honor for Christ's sake. But the rejoicing to which she voices here, is that she is not despised in the sight of God and of all the holy angels. Christ having come in the flesh as her Elder Brother to redeem her from all iniquity, he and she having been nourished at the breasts of the same mother-covenant, he has found her and led her into communion and fellowship outside the camp of all false profession and teaching, has brought her unto himself, having purified her unto himself as being a people zealous of good works, she is no longer a condemned sinner under the curse of a holy God, but is purified and made white in the atoning blood of Christ, hence she says: "I should not be despised." God despised her not, he accepts her in his Beloved. The angels despise her not, they rejoice each time one of her members which was lost is found. "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect?" Will God himself do it? No, for it is God who justifies her through the imputed righteousness of Jesus Christ. "Who is he that condemneth?" Will Christ condemn her? No, for it is he that died for her and who is risen again for her justification and it is he who, at the right hand of God, now makes intercession for her. "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?" Those things which of themselves might, if they could, separate us from him, such as tribulation or distress or persecution or famine or nakedness or peril or sword, all these are made to be our helpers to forward our passage from earth to heaven, so that we are more than conquerors through all these things. Those blessed words, "I shall not be despised," sing out from the lips of the Bride, the Church, welling up out of her thank-joyful heart as a paean of victory. She shall shortly tread under her feet her old arch-enemy, Satan, triumphing in Christ who hath led even captivity captive, having abolished death and brought life and immortality to our knowledge and understanding through the gospel. At the forthcoming future appearing of Christ, at the time of the resurrection of the just for which we hope, when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, then shall the glorious Bride be admired in all that believe in that day. Then shall her Redeemer, her nearest of kin, the Elder Brother, vindicate her cause before an assembled universe, for she shall be seen to be perfect in his holiness without, spot or blemish before God himself and in the sight of all dominions, principalities and powers. For it is written, Ephesians 3:10, that unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places, by means of the redeemed, justified, risen and glorified Church of God, the manifold wisdom of God is to be known in the ages to come when all things both in heaven and in earth shall be gathered together one in Christ. Indeed, the elect of God shall not be despised in that day. She shall be owned and honored in that day.

Dear brother Simpkins, I submit this to you for your reading and consideration. It is yours to dispose of as your judgment decides. I have been so long complying with your request because not until this morning did I feel I could write. Our love and fellowship in the truth, which rejoices both our hearts, is a great comfort to me. Your presence in our midst has often refreshed my spirit. May the Lord graciously be pleased to continue you and me, with his people, in the one bundle of life in vital union with the Lord our God until the time of his coming for which we hope, and toward which we press with fervent desire to see him as he is and be like him. Yours in covenant bonds.

ST. MATTHEW 11: 28-30.

Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls.

For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.

Dear Brother and Sister Barrow,

As I sat here in my hospital room this morning, my mind was called to remember you dear sweet people who believe in salvation by Grace and Grace alone. How few we are that believe that God does all the saving and we do all of the sinning. But we know that God said only a few would be saved according to the election of Grace. Dear one, how I long to be with you this weekend but it is not in the arrangement of the Great God who rules all things. I do hope and pray that you will have a sweet association in peace and love. Hoping the elders will be used to the maximum of their gift, knowing that if they are, then Jesus Christ will be preached and the believers will be comforted. What a blessing it is to hear Jesus Christ preached as the saviour of those given Him by the Father, also, what a joy it is to poor wayfaring strangers. If I had the strength, my desire would be to shout His blessed name from the housetop for what He has done for poor undone sinners which I am chief. How sweet the name of Jesus sounds in a believers ear.

Dear one, pray not for my natural sickness but pray that God will have mercy on this poor sinner and will lift his mind up above this low ground of sin and sorrow. My natural condition is not good but God moves in a mysterious way His will to perform. What ever happens it is for the good of God's people and He will not put more on us than we are able to bear. What is death but the door way to heaven for them that love God. How sweet it is when we are made satisfied to God's will even if in the time of death. Only the children given to Sweet Jesus are ever satisfied with anything in this life. How glad we are that God has done everything for our salvation!

Be not concerned as those without hope but be comforted in what God does because He does everything well. Fear not for this one, for as the Apostle Paul had yet to preach the Gospel at Rome, so does this one if not deceived because of sin that dwells in me. That's the surety that God has given me concerning my natural condition. Yes, this morning (5 a.m.) as I write to you my thoughts are how much sweeter it would be to be with Jesus than to stay on this earth. Yet, how sweet and what peace I feel this morning just as if sweet Jesus had visited me and lifted me up from my trouble and sorrow. I feel just like Paul did, I hope, when he was lifted up into the third Heaven. I cannot tell the comfort and peace that I feel this morning. How I long for that feeling to last the rest of my life but knowing it will soon fade away as we cannot live on the mountain all our life but must go again to the valley. Then, we must suffer again because of our sinful nature.

The best the doctors know now that I am not getting enough blood to my heart which means that some of the arteries are closing up. This can be fixed by taking medicine if the arteries are not too bad. If too bad, then an operation will be required. The doctors are going to run several more tests before they will know what to do.

I hope this finds you feeling as well as usual. I know that you all are happy to have Sister Mary with you at this association time. She is so sweet and so much help. Forgive the writing and spelling and remember this sinner when at the throne of Grace.

In love,

ELDER R. LESTER DODSON, MY DEAR BROTHER:

I think the enclosed letter would be of interest to many of God's humble poor, and while I do not have the consent of the writer yet I think I know that Elder Hunnicutt would not object to having his letter published in the Signs if in your judgment you think it worthy. Elder Hunnicutt is a brother I esteem very highly, whose manner in preaching and writing is so smooth and inoffensive, yet so pointed and clear. His is indeed one of the rare gifts of our God. He has come by the rough way and I would enjoy seeing his experience in the Signs at an early date; telling how the Lord has led him both into and out of Babylon. May the blessings of the Lord continue with the Signs, its God given Editor and Associate Editors, together with all who write for its precious columns, and even those who are made to believe and love the living truths of a living God published therein. Yours in bonds of love.

(Elder) G. B. BIRD
Webbville, Ky.

ELDER G. B. BIRD, DEAR BROTHER BIRD:

Your letter came to-day and I have read it more than once with deep interest. It gives me great pleasure to know you cherish a memory of us. I could never tell you how much we all enjoyed having you and sister Bird with us in our humble, home. Also Elders Staten, Chapman, H. J. Bird, Tilly and Elder Hammonds and all the rest whom the Lord had made humble enough to put up with the fare.

We enjoyed having them all and my humble prayer is that our gracious Lord may be pleased to send you all back to us again. You ask for the definition of the Greek word translated "lust" in the King James version. Well, my dear brother, the Lord forbid that I should set myself up to try to teach a man like you. I am not able for that, nevertheless, I will give you the Greek word and its original definition which you will see is about the same as given in our English dictionaries. The definition as given in Thayer's Greek Lexicon is as follows: "A desire, craving or longing for what is forbidden." Now brother Bird, I wish to make just a few statements. Not because I think you need my little, puny, frivolous thoughts but I beg you bear with me for a few moments just once. The definition I have given here is correct, and it has been a club in the hands of the better educated Arminians from time immemorial. They are still using it and will continue to do so as long as their foolish hearts are darkened. They have ever used it to knock grace baptists and all others who ever trusted grace alone for salvation. They themselves, of course, deny that they have a lust for what is forbidden, and so they use this definition to condemn genuine old grace baptists who alone are willing to acknowledge to the truth. Now we go to the context, James, 1st chapter. To begin my remarks allow me to say, the Holy Spirit did not inspire James to write this glorious chapter just to inform us that the whole world is full of lust, as the Arminians including the soft limited or nonpredestinarian baptists would have us believe. All would know that anyway, but he wrote to tell us, God's dear children, just what we have all experienced, that we are all full of lust by nature, having a desire, craving or longing for what is forbidden. It is humiliating to acknowledge this, and no one will ever do it until given that experience of grace which brings us low at His feet, and conquers our carnal pride and ambition. Not until the last shred of carnal hope is vanishd will any one acknowledge to this truth. But in our experience (if we have had an experience) we are taught for the first time in life just what we are by nature, that we are born, not only full of lust, but also go forth speaking lies, seeking for those things for which we have a desire or craving. "We have seen not only shapen in iniquity and conceived in sin, but sin has been so completely finished in us that it brought forth death, and nature is still dead in us, (God's children) . It is not just an enemy of God's, but "enmity (itself) against God." In God's children "the natural man receiveth not things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." So all men by nature are in a bad predicament as we learn from our own experiences and the Scriptures. James 1:12 says, "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation." So if we have had a fair degree of success combatting lust, let us not gloat over it, it is only because we have been blessed of the Lord to do so or we would have failed and fallen by the way. It is certain we have received no help from nature (old Adam) to stand up under temptation, and put up a fight against sin. This is just what James says he does not want us to err about, verses 16-17. Here he tells us that all the ability we have to combat the desires, cravings or longings of our nature comes down from above, not up from beneath.

God's people all know just what we got from Adam. We got his shameful, sinful, lustful, depraved image, and must carry it about for the duration of our allotted time here on earth. We got trouble as surely as the sparks go upward. We got sickness, sorrow and death, then down to dust with him. Contrast to what we got in Christ "Predestinated us unto the adoption of children;" "Chosen us in him before the foundation of the world;" "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound;" Freely justified from all things which includes the lusts of our nature; "Kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time." That is here and now. The weak kneed baptists say we must take care of our own time salvation, but the Bible knows nothing of any such time salvation as they refer to. There is just one salvation, and it is eternal and all of grace. Grace predestinated us, elected us, inscribed our names in His eternal book. Grace quickens our dead souls into life, gives us faith in our redeemer, all the repentance we have or need, gives us power to combat the lusts and sinfulness of our natures, though often allows us to fall into it for reasons best known to himself. Grace restrains sin in the lives of his children, and when not restrained he gives us the assurance that he works it for their eternal good. It is found to be one of the all things that work together for good to them that love God. Grace takes care of us in the hour of death and wafts our souls on high. As our old corruptible body is sown in dishonor with Adam, we shall be raised in glory with Christ. Having borne the image of the earthly, which certainly includes all of his (Adam's) characteristics, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly (Christ) which just as certainly includes all of his characteristics, and all because of the grace which was given us in Christ, Jesus before the world was.

Now, brother Bird, I did not think of writing so much when I began, and I do not think you need what I have written, but just felt I wanted to say it this way. Write me any time you have a mind. I am yours in a precious hope.

(Elder) J. S. HUNNICUTT

PSALM 127:1

"Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain."

As our text is divided into two parts we will endeavor to treat upon it in the same manner: (1) We wish to present some thoughts upon the building of the house and (2) upon the keeping of the city. In both instances we believe the church of the true and living God is under consideration. In the Scriptures are presented different similies of the church, and in this instance the figure of an house is used to typify God's building. In I Kings 6:7 the following is said concerning the temple which Solomon built: "And the house, when it was in building, was built of stone made ready, before it was brought thither: so that there was neither hammer, nor axe, nor any tool of iron heard in the house, while it was in building." In the fifth chapter, verse six, we read: "Now therefore command thou that they hew me cedar trees out of Lebanon; and my servants shall be with thy servants: and unto thee will I give hire for thy servants according to all that thou shalt appoint: for thou knowest that there is not among us any that can skill to hew timber like unto the Sidonians." This last quotation appears to be the message which Solomon sent to Hiram, king of Tyre. The Tyrians were friends of Israel and in type they may represent the great host of friends of the Old School Baptist Church throughout the country who, for some reason or another, are not identified with the visible church. Solomon, who in type represents our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, in whose hands God delivered all power, both in heaven and in earth, in the building of the temple built it according to the wisdom which God gave him. His word was absolute and his will sovereign in all that pertained to the building of it.

All of those who had any part in the matter, not only of the Israelites but also the subjects of Hiram's kingdom, were made willing in the day of God's power, and as Solomon compensated the Tyrians for their labours, even so does God in this day and time compensate or reward those who follow after the cause of truth by feeding their kids by the Shepherd's tents. As they hunger and thirst for the bread of heaven and for the pure water of the river of life, which alone can satisfy their longings, crumbs of mercy fall from the Master's table and streams flow out to those who are in desert places until their souls are fed and they can want no more. We may be assured that more than the natural ties of relatives and friends bind their hearts in christian love and fellowship for the visible church, which causes them to do as much, and in some cases more, for the cause by way of attending meeting and ministering to the needs of God's people by lending a helping hand in entertaining, where that is necessary and desirable. We only meant to touch upon this in passing.

To come back to I Kings 6:7 and 5:6 we note that "the stone was made ready before it was brought thither: so that there was neither hammer nor axe nor any tool of iron heard in the house while it was in building." How truly and beautifully this sets forth the work of God in the hearts of poor sinners, independently of the help of man. Paul in the tenth verse of the second chapter of Ephesians says: "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." This workmanship consists of living, or lively stones, manifested here in the world as sons and daughters of Adam, but at the same time chosen of God and precious in his sight. This material is first prepared, or made ready, before it is brought together to be assembled in the niche or place which God in his infinite wisdom hath designed. Please note that Solomon commanded that "cedar trees out of Lebanon" be hewed, or cut down, so that they could no longer receive nourishment from the earth, or the arm of flesh. The "cedar trees of Lebanon" signify God's forest where only evergreens, or characters who have received eternal life, grow. Before these are brought into the church they have to be hewn by God's workmen, and that times no doubt he is pleased to use his gospel ministers through the preached word to bring this about, or it may be his pleasure to send forth trials and afflictions, for the smith and the coals are instruments in his hands, to fashion and to consume them before they are qualified to serve wheresoever and in whatever capacity he has purposed. The workmen who were employed in the building of Solomon's temple were the most skilled obtainable, in every branch or phase of the work, and of a truth there are none today so well skilled in the preaching of the gospel as those whom God calls and qualifies. With these labourers there is no such things as "strikes" for higher wages, for all who labour in God's vineyard receive the same pay, their penny a day, whether they come in at the first or the eleventh hour; they all receive grace sufficient for their needs regardless of whether they serve one year or an hundred. It is written that "the house, when it was in building, was built of stone and made ready before it was brought thither," and it is also said that there was "neither hammer nor axe nor any tool of iron heard in the house, while it was in building." Again, let us quote from Paul's epistle to the Ephesians. He says to those who are a part and parcel of the workmanship which he declared to be God's, "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief cornerstone; In whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord: In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." Eph. 2:19-22. While we understand we were chosen in Christ before the world was, or that all of our names were written in the Lamb's book of life before time began, being unper-fect, in these last, or gospel times, we are manifested as being the children of God and members of the mystical body of Christ. During this gospel dispensation the Lord is carrying on his work of grace and his children are being prepared and brought together by the working of his mighty power, that they might be assembled or fitly framed together unto an holy temple in the Lord. It is through the workings of his Holy Spirit that they are builded together for an habitation of the Lord. Such characters are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God. No one except the chosen ones know anything of this work and they can testify that while it is in the building there is no sound of a hammer, nor axe, nor any tool of iron, which are implements that men use; these shall not be used in the building of the house, the church of the true and living God, where it is well known that salvation is all of grace, for the inhabitants of Mount Zion know that nothing can be added to or taken from the perfect work of God in the house which he builds, and they know further that "Except the Lord build the house they labour in vain that build it." There may be some Marthas who feel the creature still has some chores to perform in order to share fully in the benefits of salvation, but all the Marys will be found to have ceased from their labours and to have entered into gospel rest, or in the house where all sit at the feet of their Lord, adoring and worshipping the Saviour of sinners. We like to think of Mary as typifying those who are truly prepared and set apart in a church capacity to worship God in spirit and in truth and have no confidence in the flesh. At the most we can but touch upon our subject, so we will have to pass along and content ourself by, saying as did the Queen of Sheba, "The half was not told me," for Zion in all of her beauty and grandeur cannot be fully described.

We have endeavored to present in some measure our thoughts concerning the vain labour that is spent by those who attempt to aid God in his work of building his house, and we hope that there are no real Old School Baptists who disagree with what we have said, but when we come to the second part of our text, if we are to judge by the actions of some, even though they be ministers of many years standing, we are made to wonder whether they really think that God, who unquestionably builds his house alone, needs their assistance in keeping the city. We most certainly do not believe that God Almighty has delegated to any one or more individuals the task of keeping his city, or church, and any watchman, whosoever he may be, who appropriates this job unto himself will sooner or later discover that he is not sufficient for it and that he waketh but in vain. God needs no man to aid him in steadying the ark even if, as some appear to think, it is shaking. This may be at least one of the times when we who speak and write should take heed unto ourselves and unto the doctrine, lest having preached to others we ourselves become castaways. While God's ministers should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints they should do so in love and in a manner that is "apt to teach."

Among the things which Paul says a bishop must not be is "no striker." A true minister of God is a servant or under-shepherd of the church and should not under any circumstances undertake to lord his ideas over God's heritage. We have seen the evil, we believe, of this fact being lost sight of. While we like to see a minister, in whatever capacity he may serve, esteemed for the truth's sake, if we are not deceived we have known of cases where the minister was put upon a pedestal and to some extent at least worshipped. Such things ought not to be. When we first began to exercise our gift publicly, if we really have one, we were backward in many respects and had to be encourged to stand before the people. On one occasion we were admonished by our pastor, who said in substance that we should be in subjection to the wishes of the brethren in these things, and the question has some times arisen in our mind, is the only time that a minister should be in subjection to his brethren, when he is young and inexperienced? Not so long ago one of our able ministers said in substance in a letter to us, that the churches having ministers among their memberships should watch over them, and when they stray too far, either in word or in deed, call them to account. We are thoroughly in accord with this idea, not with standing so far as we know it is seldom done now-a-days. Churches in far too many instances, in our humble opinion, have been negligent and entirely too lenient concerning those of their memberships, and this may also include the lay members as well as the various gifts that the Lord has placed in their midst. Just one saying from the mouth of Jesus will suffice to set forth our meaning. In Matthew 5:29 we find his words recorded as follows "And if thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell." We have Scriptural authority for the brethren taking even a minister in hand and instructing him more perfectly. In Acts 18:24-28 we read: "And a certain Jew named Apollos, born at Alexandria, an eloquent man, and mighty in the scriptures, came to Ephesus. This man was instructed in the way of the Lord; and being fervent in the spirit, he spake and taught diligently the things of the Lord, knowing only the baptism of John. And he began to speak boldly in the synagogue: whom when Aquila and Priscilla had heard, they took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly. And when he was disposed to pass into Achaia, the brethren wrote exhorting the disciples to receive him: who, when he was come, helped them much which had believed through grace: for he mightly convinced the Jews, and that publicly, showing by the scriptures that Jesus was Christ." If that was necessary and profitable concerning one as important and gifted as was Apollos, is it too much to ask of the churches today that they watch over for the good of the cause their members, regardless of the position they may occupy in the church?

As Jesus said, if it be a right eye that offends, pluck it out and cast it from thee, if need be. How vain is man when he feels that he can aid the Lord either in the building of the church or keeping it. The Psalmist not only said, "Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it," but he also said, and with equal force, "Except the Lord keep the city, the watch rose waketh but in rain." We are convinced that do all we may and the very best we can we shall have to confess that we are unprofitable servants, and we shall be made to know by better experiences perhaps, that it is only through the workings of God's Holy Spirit that we can and do mortify the deeds of the body, or flesh, and keep the old man under. We earnestly hope that we may be found to be among those referred to by Peter, "who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time." If, indeed and in truth, we belong to the spiritual family of God, we are persuaded that nothing will ever be able to separate us from his love permanently. We take comfort at times in the declaration of the apostle where he said: "Being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ:"

The doctrine of the final preservation or perseverance of the saints by and with God, to dwell with him in eternal glory is sublime and beyond language to describe and we should cling to it through all the shifting scenes of time and the vissitudes of this life. Our subject is inexhaustible and full of glory but all we can do is to drop a few hints to the wise and leave them to be pondered over and meditated upon with such wonder, amazement and understanding as God may, according to the riches of his grace, as it is in Christ Jesus, be pleased to grant unto us, and whether it be little or much, we desire that his name shall have all the praise.

Elder R. L. Dodson

PSALM 41: 1-4.

Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble.

The Lord will preserve him, and keep him alive; and he shall be blessed upon the earth: and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies.

The Lord will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing; thou wilt make all his bed in his sickness.

I said, Lord, be merciful unto me: heal my soul; for I have sinned against thee.

HEBREWS 2:15.

We confess that we have no special light upon the text proposed. From the context, however, it will be seen that the text relates to the object of the incarnation and death of our Lord Jesus Christ. He did not visit our guilty world, and suffer on the cross, without having an object to accomplish, and that object was, to deliver those who through fear of death, were all their lifetime subject to bondage. In order to do this, he took on him the seed of Abraham. Not the children of flesh, for Paul says, Romans ix. 7, 8, Neither because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children; but in Isaac shall thy seed be called: that is, they which are the children of flesh, these are not the children of God: but the children of the promise are counted for the seed. Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham; who is the father of us all. As it it written, I have made thee a father of many nations. — Romans iv. 16, 17. And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise.

The seed of Abraham therefore, thus defined, were taken on the Redeemer when he came in the flesh, and for them he suffered on the cross. They are spoken of in the connection of our text, as his many sons, which he was to bring to glory, and for whom, by the grace of God he tasted death. And they are also in this connection called the children, and his brethren. These were subject to bondage through fear of death. For the wages of sin is death, and they had all sinned, and had just cause to fear the execution of the sentence which was against them. The object of Christ's coming and suffering, was to save them from their sins, to bear their sins in his own body on the tree, and to put them away by the sacrifice of himself, by tasting death for every one of them. And thus was he, through death, to destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil, and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage.

In this work of redemption and deliverance, he hath triumphed gloriously; and upon this ground they receive the spirit, not of bondage, again to fear, but the spirit of adoption, whereby they cry, Abba, Father. And they are exhorted to stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ has made them free, and be not again entangled with the yoke of bondage.— Gal. v. 1. The perfect love of God commended in the gift of his dear Son, and communicated to the saints by regeneration, casteth out fear. Fear hath torment, but the perfect love of God shed abroad in his children, overcomes it, and casts it out. The object therefore of Christ's life in the flesh, and under law, and of his death and suffering in the flesh, is attained. The great trumpet is blown; the jubilee proclaimed; the prison doors are opened, and the prisoners are brought out of their prison houses. And there is therefore no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. (Rom. viii.)

Jehovah has triumphed, his people are free! "Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all." And we brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of the free woman. (Gal. 4:26.) "Loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion." — Isa. 52:2

OBITUARIES

IN REMEMBRANCE
Ruby Pauline Queen

Our dearly beloved friend and fellow believer passed away this year at age 91, the day before we met together for the Little Vine Olde Association. She was well known and loved by all who knew her among our fellowship. She was faithful in attendance with the Lost Creek Church for the past thirty some years and was always a willing helper in all the things in which the church was involved. She entertained the brethren in her home along with her beloved husband Byron while he lived, who was also a faithful believer, and she continued to receive the brethren as long as her health permitted. She made dinners and invited and received the brethren in her home for church meetings. She travelled to other states for Old Baptist Church meetings, which she greatly enjoyed. She is indelibly written in our memory because of her humility and kindness toward her family and her dear friends of the faith. Ruby had two daughters and two granddaughters who were greatly loved by her and us. She loved to read the scriptures, and from time to time would quote verses that were precious to her. In her was the evidence of a child of God. She bore the fruit of the Spirit which is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness and temperance. She was always a proper lady and conducted herself with honor by the grace of God.

Ruby is already missed in our meetings and among our fellowship. We will no longer see her face, but her precious memory is with us. We have been given the strong assurance that for the Lord's children to be absent from the body is to be present with the Lord. In His presence is light, eternal life, and joy unspeakable. She has ceased from her labors, sorrows, and pains, and we believe is basking in the light of God's love forevermore. It is our hope and trust that our hearts may be comforted toward her since she has fought a good fight, finished her course and kept the faith and henceforth is laid up for her a crown of righteousness which the Lord the righteous judge shall give to her, and not unto her only, but unto all who love His appearing. This was written by one who loved her, I trust in truth.

HYMN

A crumb of mercy, Lord,
I crave, Unworthy to be fed
With dainties such as angels have,
Or with the children's bread.

Have pity on my needy soul;
Thy peace and pardon give;
Thy love can make the wounded whole,
And bid the dying live.

Behold me prostrate at thy gate;
Do not my suit deny;
With longing eyes for thee I wait;
O, help me, or I die!

When thou dost give a heart to pray,
Thou wilt incline thine ear;
From me turn not thy face away,
But my petition hear.

So shall my joyful soul adore
The riches of thy grace;
No sinner needed mercy more,
That ever sought thy face.

"We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body and to be present with the Lord." 2 Corinthians 5:8.

Elder J. B. Farmer

For some time now my mind has been occupied with thoughts about what it means to be absent from the body and to be present with the Lord. This is a profound subject about which there are many opinions. But opinions will not suffice for the children of God. I am made to believe that they can only be satisfied with the truth, and that by the grace and mercy of God they shall reject all error. The carnal mind is strong in its thinking and will resist and oppose the truth until the end. According to the scriptures it is "enmity against God." So, for one to receive the truth, the carnal mind must be subdued and revelation must be given from above. This is altogether the powerful work of God, and will result in His praise and glory. I greatly desire that the wisdom from above will be given to me and to His children who read this, and that I might be blessed to set forth the truth as it is in Christ, and be kept from misrepresenting any point of doctrine to the praise of His grace.

It seems that as age advances we become more concerned about what lies ahead. We know that a natural man cannot live forever. We see our dear friends passing from this life, and we see our bodies becoming weaker and wearing out. These things make us consider the fact that we also are approaching the end of our journey here on earth. We know that God has said through His prophet, "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." Ecclesiastes 12:7. We have much evidence to show what becomes of a natural creature after death. It returns to the earth, and if left long enough becomes indistinguishable from its surroundings. But the pressing question to me is --- what shall be the state of the spirit of the child of God when it returns to God? The answer is a great mystery, but God has been merciful to reveal some of His mysteries unto His saints for His glory and for their comfort and edification. We hope He will show us mercy in these things.

Some think the spirit, at the death of the body, will be absorbed into some universal unknowable space and become, for all practical purposes, nothing. Some think that for one's spirit to return to God is the same thing as being resurrected from the dead, and that there is no need for the resurrection of the body. Some think that when a believer dies his spirit falls asleep and continues in a peaceful rest until the resurrection of the bodies of the saints. Some think that the spirits of the saints are in heaven and are looking down on those below, and have an interest in their activities. Some think there is an intermediate place between heaven and earth where all are taken and held until the resurrection of the dead. These ideas or some combination of them all appear to me to be false.

Others believe that the spirits of all saints are awake and aware of heavenly things after death, and that the spirit never dies or sleeps. They also believe in the future resurrection of the bodies of those who die before the second coming of Christ. And they believe that those who are alive at His coming shall be instantly changed and made altogether spiritual — body, soul and spirit. And they believe that all these shall be caught up together unto the Lord, and they shall ever be with the Lord. I am made to believe that those who are given to perceive these things have been blessed with a good understanding, and will not be disappointed when they pass from this life to their eternal home.

What is the earnest expectation of His saints? I believe their earnest expectation is that they might some day see Him as He is and be made like Him in glory. God said through His apostle, "The earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God." When a saint dies, I believe he (his spirit) shall be immediately carried, by the angels, to the bosom of Abraham, (the name Abraham means father) where he shall be comforted, as was Lazarus, according to the Lord. For one to be comforted he must be aware of his situation and feelings, or else he could know nothing of comfort. Stephen, just before he was stoned to death, was given to see Jesus, the Son of man, standing on the right hand of God. What a great comfort for the children of God to have on record that the Lord appeared to Stephen in his great time of need. And I must believe that the Lord shall show similar mercies to each of His little ones in their time of need as death approaches. I not only believe that He appears to them, but that He is also in charge of them being ushered fully awake into the eternal heavenly kingdom where they shall at last be blessed to look upon His face.

The spirit that returns to God — is it earthy or is it heavenly? If it is heavenly, which I believe it must be to exist in the presence of God, it must be eternal as God is. God is the eternal Spirit and He neither slumbers nor sleeps. This is part of the character of God. The spirit of God's children is also heavenly, therefore I believe that their spirit is eternal and cannot die, neither can it slumber nor sleep. What then is meant when we hear or read that the saints die in the Lord, or that they fall asleep in Christ. Since the spirit cannot die or sleep, what is it then that dies or falls asleep except the body? The body falls asleep and becomes sleeping dust, to be awakened and to be raised in the likeness of the Lord's glorious body at His appearing. David said, "I shall be sa-tisfied when I shall awake in thy likeness." God said about the body of the saints through the apostle, "It is sown in corruption: it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power: it is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." And he was also blessed to say, "And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."

Since the spirit that returns to God is awake and aware, it must be seeing, hearing, feeling and knowing heavenly things there, but being without the body it must be only a passive observer and not an active participant in the heavenly realm. To my understanding, the reason the body must be resurrected is so that the child of God might be made a whole spiritual man—body, soul, and spirit. And being a whole spiritual man he may be fully active in heavenly spiritual things.

We read of the prophets and the apostles, while here on earth, being caught up in the spirit from time to time to observe heavenly things in dreams and visions. Isaiah wrote, "In the year that king Uzziah died I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple. Above it stood the seraphims: each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly. And one cried unto another, and said, Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory."

And John, when he was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, also saw and heard many glorious things. He saw one like unto the Son of man in all His glory. He saw a throne set in heaven and the One who sat on it. He saw the four and twenty elders sitting on seats round about the throne. He saw the four beasts with each one having six wings. He was blessed to see many wonderful things in the vision. I am made to believe that these experiences were much the same as what one must see after departing this life and after his spirit is carried to heaven. But after one dies and is brought into heaven in the spirit, what he sees shall not come to an end, as the visions of the prophets and apostles did. His vision will be eternal. All his attention shall be continually upon heavenly things, and there will be no remembrance of former things, according to the scriptures. All sorrow, pain, fear, disappointment, sin or anything that troubles or defiles shall not appear there. All shall be peace and joy forever.

The scriptures are available to almost all religious people. Many think that by accumulating scriptures on a certain subject and comparing them and then reasoning about the probable meaning of them, the truth may be discerned.

However, the truth cannot be discovered in this way. God has fixed things so that no one can by taking thought find out any of His mysteries. This is why there are so many different religions. Strong-minded men and women have hit upon special theories, and have promoted their ideas to draw away following after themselves for their own glory. But God reveals His truth only to His little ones, and hides it from the wise and prudent. It is a good thing to search the scriptures as God gives the mind and strength. But we must acknowledge that only God is able to shed light on them for our learning and edification. God must be glorified in all, or else it shall prove to be a futile endeavor to attempt to know the truth. The wicked are, "Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth."

There is only one truth. There is only one doctrine. "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye, are, in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." And the elect children of God are above all the families of the earth in that they, although knowing they are unworthy, are given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven --- and the rest are blinded. The children of the kingdom are not only given to know the mysteries of it, but are also given to know the Father, as the Son graciously reveals Him to them. And to know Him is eternal life. The apostle John, by the Spirit said, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."

1CORINTHIANS 3:1-7.

And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ.

I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able.

For ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men?

For while one saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not carnal?

Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man? I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase.

So then neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase.

DEAR BROTHER DODSON:

Enclosed is a copy of an article written by Elder L. L. Schenck, Williamstown, Kans. It was read to our people and I asked his consent to send it to the Signs to which he assented. We should be pleased to see it published. Yours in hope,

H. F. CATE.

"Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us, even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eyewitnesses, and ministers, of the word; It seemed good unto me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee in order, most excellent Theophilus." It is not mine to make the same claim of a perfect understanding in all things as our beloved brother Luke made, and rightly too; but I hope I am given that same desire to set forth in order those things which are most surely believed among us. When I was young I had no thought that the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead would ever become an issue among the Baptists, but time has developed that very thing. Some who either by design or through ignorance have raised the question foreseen and foretold by the apostle to wit: "How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" In the days of the apostles there were two men, Hymenaeus and Philetus who preached the resurrection was past already and overthrew the faith of some. I hope there will be no such tragic culmination of this current controversy now going the rounds. If I might be indulged for a few moments I would like to try by the help of the Lord, to set forth (in order) my own views on the resurrection of the dead; and I mean "The resurrection of the dead." That which the apostle is pleased to designate as the first resurrection we trust the people of God have all experienced and for that reason it seems less difficult to write upon a subject which is clearly set forth, not only in the written word but also by the witness within us. The first resurrection blended so sweetly with the doctrine of salvation by grace. As it is written "By grace ye are saved; and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ." I think the definition of the word resurrection cannot be successfully disputed. It means a raising up and in the scriptural terms it means the raising up of the dead. Thus in the first resurrection it no doubt refers to those who are dead to the law by the body of Christ. "For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead." This gracious truth also inspires us with a blessed assurance that if this same one who died for all be risen again, then those for whom he died are also raised up together with him. Raised up from under the curse of the law and made to sit together in heavenly places with him. "Not under the law, but under grace."

This to my mind is the first resurrection and blessed and holy are they who have part in the first resurrection, upon such the second death hath no power. We read in the scripture of the first resurrection and of the second death. Now if there be a second death there must of necessity be a first, but I don't think we are justified in saying the first and second resurrection but rather the first and the last. For Christ is indeed the resurrection and the life. He is "Alpha and Omega" "the first and the last." Now as concerning the last resurrection we have not yet experienced that. But Christ and the apostles and prophets have dealt very elaborately upon the subject. The apostle has said we believe in the resurrection of the dead both of the just and the unjust and this is one of the things most surely believed among us. The potter has power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor and another unto dishonor. Then "what if God, willing to shew his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction; and that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory," "not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles?" This is the Lord's work and it is marvelous in our eyes. All made of one lump, all alike must die and all must be raised from the dead. Those that have done good to the resurrection of eternal life and they that have done evil to the resurrection of damnation. Because some were afore prepared unto glory there is no power in heaven nor in hell nor in the earth beneath can hinder one of these from entering into that glory for which they are prepared. They are the "vessels of mercy otherwise called "earthen vessels, the natural man, the man which must die, the man which is not quickened except it die; which being quickened he is raised a spiritual body. The vessels of wrath fitted to destruction must also come forth from the grave to receive their inevitable doom for to that end they were fitted. To have it otherwise would be to frustrate the grace of God which, the apostle says, we do not do. Who would deny the adoption of God's people to which they were predestinated, the redemption of the purchased possession, or who would deny the quickening of our mortal bodies which must and will be accomplished by the same power and the same spirit that raised up Christ from the dead? Whom he raised not up if so be that the dead rise not. Yet some man will say, "How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" Here the apostle interjects: "Thou fool, that which thou sowest, is not quickened, except it die: And that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain." In the case under consideration it chances to be, not wheat but some other. Even our mortal bodies and God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him. The fruit springing from it is multiplied a thousand fold. None of us will contend that we sow a spiritual body but we sow a natural body and the devine record tells us it is raised a spiritual body. Let those dispute this who will. Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead? Did he not form man of the dust of the ground and breathe into his nostrils the breath of life? Is it a thing incredible with you that he call forth our sleeping dust and form it anew? Each transaction involves nothing short of a miracle but there is nothing impossible with God. It is a matter of apostolic preference that they have often referred to death as a sleep. Christ and the prophets also referred to it as the same. Then the psalmist proclaimed, when I awake in his likeness then shall I be satisfied. The apostle declared Christ was seen after his resurrection by about five hundred brethren at once of whom the greater part remain unto this present but some are fallen asleep. Upon this basis he argues the resurrection of the dead and the changing of those who are alive when that great and notable day shall come. "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." And here is the change. "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality," No subtle theorizing can change the meaning of that. And when this unspeakable feat shall have been accomplished then will be brought to pass the saying that is written, "Death is swallowed up in victory." Where is the comfort in the thought that the saints shall enjoy no victory over death. Our Captain, having gone before, having himself died and rose again a mighty conqueror over death and the grave, this is a guarantee that every child of grace must follow him in victory or else Christ shall have died in vain. How could we point in triumph to the cross of Christ and say: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" The sting of death, even sin, was washed away in the blood of Christ, and the victory, of the grave is only temporary to say the most for it. Our captor, the grave will be not only defeated but utterly destroyed, for God hath spoken it "O grave, I will be thy destruction." "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." We cannot too strongly stress the purpose of God concerning these vessels of mercy which he hath afore prepared unto glory. To say that one of these shall fail to attain unto that glory for which they were prepared and which is also prepared for them, I say to deny this is to deny the ability of God Almighty to realize upon his eternal designs, and the adoption, to wit: the redemption of our body. To deny this is to not only deny the power of God's predestination, but to preclude the realization of God's eternal purpose toward every child of promise. Being sealed with the holy spirit of promise they must be redeemed from the grave or else the promise of God is rendered quite impotent and the seal of God is proven to be no guarantee to a perfect salvation.

All the promises of God in him are yea and in him Amen unto the glory of God by us. Pause and consider some of the promises of God to us. In the Psalms it is written "Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; and their beauty shall consume in the grave from their dwelling. But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave: for he shall receive me. Selah." This is in sweet ac cord with the promise of Jesus. I will raise him up again at the last day. This, again, would signify that those who come unto him have experienced the: first resurrection and they now stand in a blessed anticipation of the last. How very striking is the language of the apostle. Drawing upon the storehouse of inspiration he makes this comparison: "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon and another glory of the stars: for (one) star differeth from (another) star in glory." I hope whoever may read this will not overlook the fact these two words inclosed in parenthesis are supplied words and to my mind destroy the meaning of the original text. The saints of God no doubt are denominated as the stars, as for instance Job said "When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." Thus to contend that one saint shall differ from another saint in glory seems absurd to me for this is the promise, "We shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." I anticipate no difference among the saints in glory. If they shall be like him they will have attained absolute perfection. I do not criticize the wording of the scripture, however, the translators were not inspired but were men the same as we and it is quite possible they may have erred in some of their interpretations, but we must commend their honesty in putting all supplied words in italics. Hence to read this text omitting those supplied words we have "For star differeth from star in glory." So also is the resurrection of the dead. The star or saint on earth differs from that same star in glory. The difference is quite apparent. "It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption: it is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power: it is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." The difference would baffle all human imagination but so is the resurrection of the dead. It is a most glorious and unspeakable transition that we hold in anticipation and it doth not yet appear what we shall be but we know that when Christ who is our life shall appear then shall we also appear with him in glory. And we have his gracious promise that he will doubtless come again with rejoicing bringing his sheaves with him. When he ascended unto his Father it is providential that his angel tarried long enough to assure us saying "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same, Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." When Christ was here in person he taught his disciples some very extraordinary lessons. "Verily, verily," said he, "The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live." This no doubt refers to those dead to the law by the body of Christ. These have part in the first resurrection. "The hour is coming, and now is." They hear his voice — they live.

The second death hath no power over them. The blood of Christ has sealed their ultimate salvation. It was a stupendous achievement. Yet the Master says "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." Here is apparent the glory of the sun and the glory of the moon; The moon, the law, has faded into obscurity while the Sun of righteousness has arisen with healing in his wings. His glory can never be dimmed and he will gather his elect from the four corners of the earth. The sea shall give up the dead that is in it, and death and hell shall deliver up the dead that were in them. Hence to conclude: "I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep, For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

All hail the day, when, Christ shall say
Awake! ye sleeping nation;
Come view the place where sovereign grace
First ordered your salvation.
Then will our sleeping bodies rise,
In tender love he'll seize us;
And we shall mount the upper skies,
Safe in the arms of Jesus.

PSALM 67

God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us; Selah.

That thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations.

Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

O let the nations be glad and sing for joy; for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth, Selah.

Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our own God, shall bless us.

God shall bless us; and all the ends of the earth shall fear him.

"Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Phil. 2:12-13.

Noting a request from Elder J. J. Musgrove that someone give their views through our family paper, the Signs, I will endeavor to give some thoughts regarding it, hoping to be guided by that unerring Spirit. The apostle addressed this admonition to obedient people, whom he speaks of as beloved. In the first of this epistle we note the letter addressed to all the saints in Jesus Christ which are at Philippi with the bishops and deacons. The church at Philippi was commended more than one time by the writer for their obedience, but in his absence he knew there would be certain things they would have to work out for themselves, their own salvation. The salvation under consideration could not have been salvation from sin, as something dead sinners could work out, because they were obedient people. Neither could it have been what is sometimes called, conditional time salvation, if so God would only have worked in them the will, and the matter of doing would have been left to them. The church is reminded that whatever is worked out by them, it is God who worketh in them both to will and to do of his good pleasure. The working out of one's salvation with fear and trembling is more or less comparable to one working out a problem to find the sum. Something must be provided to work with and that something is the various experiences wrought in the life of a child of God, by the power of God, bringing them to one acknowledgment, that salvation is of the Lord. Without going into the mighty deep, being swallowed by a great fish and learning that he was beyond the help of man, Jonah would not have confessed that salvation is of the Lord. "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." One may talk much of God's grace and the way of salvation, but if he has not learned this in some way except hearing others tell it, the matter will never be worked by him with fear and trembling, "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation," but by revelation. The life consists not in what men behold in the outward man. The real life is in his prayer, praises, groans, sighs, hopes, fears, and trembling. "They that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters; these see the works of the Lord, and his wonders in the deep. It is by these things men live. No amount of listening to another tell of his weakness, his doubts and fears, his unworthiness, crying unto God for the joy of salvation, or any other christian experience, will convince one that this is all a part of salvation. He must learn these things for himself before he has that fellowship for others of like experience. "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children." No wonder the hymn says, "'Twas grace that taught my heart to fear; and grace my fears relieved." No one could have convinced the apostle Peter that he could not walk on the water, except the Savior. His avowal that he would never forsake the Savior, though all others did, was only to teach him how weak he was, yet in each new experience two things are learned — the weakness of men and the power of God. The power of God is never known, until the weakness of man has been manifested. The cross and the crown are both willed by my God. That is what brings about that love and sweet fellowship among God's poor people today as in all ages of the world. The walking together in the things of God's spirit. Surely, "all thy works shall praise thee, O Lord; and thy saints shall bless thee." It is as if the apostle is saying unto them, in my absence you will be surrounded by many adversaries; there will be temptations, without and within; many things will befall you that you never expected, temptations that you never thought would be yours. You will find out for yourselves how weak you are, yet by these things you also learn that God is the only deliverer of his people, that he knows your downsittings as well as your uprisings. All our times are in his hand. Deep calls unto deep, thy "tears are thy meat. In all these things there is a working out one's salvation with fear and trembling, learning that it is God who worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure, that no flesh should glory in his presence.

"Though storms his face obscure,
And dangers threaten loud,
Jehovah's covenant is sure,
His bow is in the cloud."

This makes the children of God so dear unto one another. Often when they meet in the house of God, clasp the hand of one another in sweet fellowship, it is with that knowledge that the Salvation of another has been worked out like their own, with fear and trembling.

Elder D. V. Spangler

MILLENNIUM

So many of God's children are disturbed at this time regarding world con ditions that I desire to write a short article using that as my subject. Many Old Baptists have listened to the radio and newspaper type of preachers until they have imbibed the modern doctrine that there is to be a return of Jesus to the earth to reign here as a king for a thousand years. In connection with this is the equally fantastic doctrine that the Jews are to return to Jerusalem about this time, become Christians, and receive Jesus to rule in the flesh over them, together with the Gentiles. Let me say that I find but just one kingdom spoken of in the Scriptures. I have never believed nor do I now believe that that kingdom comes by observation. It comes alone by faith to every subject of that kingdom. The eyes of the worldling never has nor ever will see this kingdom any more than the wisdom of this world has or can understand it. "When Daniel was given to see the setting up, breaking in pieces and standing forever of this kingdom, I do not have the least idea that he was speaking of a kingdom by any name that came by observation. As far as the literal fulfillment of the prophecy is concerned, there has not been a single event or era that could be referred to as such. Even the triumphant work of Jesus cannot be used as proof because his own people, the Jews, did not believe by and because of it, although they were looking for a literal, worldly king. To me, the kingdom is set up in the hearts of God's children. I do not have any way of telling who has had that work done for them. The Old Baptists have some foolish traditions about this. I have heard some say they could pick them out in a large crowd. Some have said they could tell them by their walk, and some say that they were the ugliest of all people. None of these things do I believe. Some of the homliest people in my town are anything but Old Baptists. Some that have nice, clear cut features belong to them. I want to emphasize the fact the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ is a spiritual kingdom, and that the work done for a sinner is a work in the heart. Some greatly fear the future and what it holds, some are afraid of this thing and some of that, but there is not a thing to be afraid of now any more than the time of the resurrection of Jesus Christ. Personally, I have always believed that God's children were clear of everything. Not only are their sins and iniquities covered by the blood, but everything is subject to Him now. To me, the devil has not had any power except that which was delegated to him. Apart from the power of God he would have become a nonentity. If the devil ever was able to be self-existent, I am sure that he would have exercised that power on the Son of God. The riches of this world were in his hand. Did that prove effectual in harming Christ or his people? It certainly did not!

I am sure that the riches of this globe are not in Satan's hands. But suppose they were, since he was in sufficient control of them to use them as a temptation to Jesus and failed, is there any room to believe that he ever could do any better? Since Christ received all of the evil treatment of Herod, Pilate, the Jews and the Gentiles and came out of the grave victorious over it all, how can anyone look for him to lose his power? Who is it to be lost to? Not to the devil, not death, not the grave, not the world. Well, let but, he skeptics say what they will! I just believe that Christ finished the work that he came to do. I do not think that he has any governments enlisted in furthering his kingdom. This idea that the christian (?) nations, and the anti-christian are to meet in conflict just does not ring true. Even if such a fantastic thing was taught in the Scriptures, things must have a terrible readjustment, because the world has not a single christian nation on the horizon now. But, dear brethren and sisters let us not look for any such. The kingdom of Jesus Christ is not maintained by bullets, tanks and other equipment of war. If Jesus conquered the howling mob, the cross, the grave, death, hell and every other devilish trick, was he not then and there a reigning king? Just when will he have more than all power? How can the children of God have any more than they have now? If God takes that which he hates and makes it work for the good of his children, and all of their needs are supplied according to the liches of his grace, does it not sound fantastic to suppose that his kingdom, and the heirs of that kingdom have yet a great battle to fight with such things as money, guns, tanks and aeroplanes, and there is yet an era for that kingdom and the heirs of it, to enjoy more than plenty, fullness, completeness!

(We believe the following article written by the late Elder Silas H. Durand and published in the Signs January 1, 1887 will be of special interest to our readers — R: L. D.)

CONTROVERSY

To a certain extent there is controversy in the presentation of any religious sentiment, for all opposing sentiments are controverted by it. The truth on any subject cannot be declared without controverting every erroneous view. In the discussion of subjects by brethren there must necessarily be controversy whenever different views are entertained, as there will be on many subjects while we are in the flesh. I cannot see any harm, but often much good, in controversy, so long as those engaged in it are directed by the right spirit. It is the sharpness and bitterness of personal allusions that worry and distress the tender spiritual mind, and came many to regard controversy among brethren with dread. It is, perhaps, in our nature to resent any opposition to sentiments that we entertain; and when not under the control of the meek and gentle Spirit of Christ, one is very apt to think it necessary to sternly rebuke those who hold views contrary to his own. When we are in that state of mind we ought not to write, but wait till we can feel sure that a kindly and loving spirit is prompting us, before we undertake to correct what we deem to be errors in the sentiments of a brother. The apostle uses the expression, "Speaking the truth in love" (Eph. 4:15); and I think, when the Lord calls one to speak or write upon these heavenly things, he gives; him the spirit of love to control him. "The love of Christ constraineth us," says the apostle. We may feel very backward about claiming for ourselves such an exalted and holy motive, yet I am sure that if we cannot have some evidence. that we me speaking or writing in love, we are out of place in attempting to discuss such sacred things.

It does not seem to me necessary that one should say offensive things to or of another, in giving a different understanding of a subject from that which he has expressed, only so far as the very fact of holding and expressing a different view may itself be deemed an offense. The object of one in any controversy should not be merely to defend his own view, and sustain his character as a correct thinker and a clear and deep writer or speaker, but to present the truth that has been made precious to his soul, with a humble desire to glorify God and comfort his dear children.

If it is really the truth one is contending for the real meaning of the Holy Spirit in the portion of Scripture under contemplation, there will be more than a mere array of proof texts in presenting and confirming that truth. It will have come unto the one who is speaking of it, "Not in word only, but in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance;" and that power will be witnessed by those who have been taught in their experience the same truth, as they hear it from him, and the speaking of such truth will be a comfort to such, although, it may be the first they have ever heard it. The "form of sound words" which we heard from the inspired writers is to be held fast, and no experience can be regarded as genuine which is not in accordance with the letter of the word.

But we are to remember that it is in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus, that the Lord's people hold fast the form of sound words to their profit and comfort, and not in the carnal mind. The mere arraying of proof texts in defense of a point of doctrine is dry reading for one who is hungering and thirsting after righteousness. One who knows nothing of grace, may take great delight in bringing forward the strong and clear declarations of Scripture concerning any point of doctrine, and may exhibit great skill and zeal in defending the doctrine; but his discussions will not feed the sheep. Although he may speak or write strictly in the letter of the truth, his words will not come into the hearts of the living family of God with the comforting, trumpet sound of the gospel. I have known a number of such, and I would have to say of them what a dear brother once said to me with reference to a sermon we had just listened to, "Well, if he said anything that was not true, I was too dull to see it; but he did not speak as though he felt it, and I did not feel it." The doctrine is not merely important, it is everything; but it is doctrine that has life in it to us; doctrine that is felt in the heart, not merely held in the mind. In salvation, the doctrine and experience cannot be separated. The doctrine is the foundation; it is also the house that is built upon the foundation. But what can we know of the foundation, unless we have been favored to rest upon it? What can we know of the house, if it has never given us the comfort of its shelter and protection? The doctrine is the rock; but what is the rock to us, unless it has poured out to us the water of salvation? unless we have been blessed to suck honey and oil out of it? If the doctrine is the honeycomb, the experience is the honey; and when the Bridegroom comes into his garden, which is his sister, his spouse, he says, "I have eaten my honeycomb with my honey." In salvation, the honey is never separated from the comb but they are eaten together. "When either is exhibited separately, it may possibly be counterfeited; but when a piece of comb filled with honey is shown us, we know it is real. When the doctrine comes to us from God, every word is filled with sweet experience of love, and peace, and joy. We do not want one merely to tell us what the Bible says. That is not necessarily preaching the gospel. An infidel can do that as well as one of the Lord's servants. But when we are before the Lord, as Cornelius and his household were, we want to hear from the Lord's servant what is commanded him of God. We want to hear the word of the Lord that has come to him, and which is in him as a fire shut up in his bones, so that he is weary with refraining, and cannot stay. "Preach the word," writes the apostle to Timothy; but that word which he is to preach, is what he has seen with his eyes, and looked upon, and handled, of the word of life. — 1 John 1-3. Preaching is more than merely giving one's views. When the gospel is preached, there is power, authority, in it; for "it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." I remember once at an association, when a dear brother who had never been there before, and whom a very few present had ever heard preach, took a text that led at once into a subject upon which there were very different sentiments held by different ones present, and concerning which there had been much fruitless discussion. This brother, in the simplicity and power of true gospel preaching, went right through the controverted ground; preaching the word out of his own heart, and in humble confidence opening the Scriptures, and declaring the doctrine of Christ; and all the brethren met together at once in the truth he proclaimed so boldly, humbly, and sweetly. All with one accord said, "That is the truth." They recognized and felt the authority of the word preached, and their differences of views were for the time so far below them as to be lost sight of. His text was, 1 John 3:9, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God."

On the day of pentecost, the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and one mind. But that one mind was the mind of Christ, the understanding of which the Son of God gives his people. That one heart was the new heart which is given them. In that divine life the saints are one. By one Spirit they are all baptized into one body. But they are as diverse in the flesh as they ever were. They all have yet a carnal mind, in which they are no more one than they were before being born again. It is from this source that differences arise among the saints, bringing wars and contentions. This carnal mind strives to impose itself upon them as that mind in which all the saints are, or ought to be, one. It is because of this that the apostle more than once exhorts them to be of one mind and of the same judgment. It is not only not wrong, but it is their duty, to strive to bring all their differences of view, in regard to divine things, to the infallible test of the Scriptures, seeking in solemn humility and brotherly love to discover and holdfast only that which is truth. That which is of the flesh is easily known by many remarks, if we are only made willing to acknowledge them. All the various passions and evil propensities, as anger, envy, wrath, levity, hatred, covetousness, and the like, are of the carnal mind, and that position in defense of which they are enlisted is very apt to prove the wrong one. The power of the truth and of the love of God felt in the heart holds these fleshly propensities for the time in subjection, as the power of light causes darkness to disappear. The true weapons of our warfare are then at our service, which "are mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds, casting down imaginations in our own minds, or in the reasoning of others, and every high thing that a exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into subjection every thought to the obedience of Christ."- 2 Cor. 10- 4. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." With this blessed privilege of access at the only source of true wisdom, it would appear that the dear saints might easily be of one mind. In order to endeavor to be of the same mind and judgment in regard to the things of the kingdom of God, it is necessary that the saints should, as often as may be, speak one with another of these things, and not only present to each other that in which they do see alike, but that also in which their views are of any difference, in order to see if the Lord will show them which is of the flesh and which of the Spirit. This is controversy.

But it really seems as though there is no need that there should be bitterness in it, or striving for the mastery, or angry, sharp or reproving words. Why should not brotherly love continue perfectly while each expresses simply and freely what he understands as the truth of the subject, setting forth such testimony as the Lord has, in his estimation, given him, and while each gives kind and careful attention to the views presented in opposition to his, ready and glad to acknowledge candidly anything that appears well supported in those views? This is striving together for the faith of the gospel; striving to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace: striving to be of one mind. It should be our anxious desire that this one mind, when we find ourselves agreed, should be the mind of Christ, rather than the mind of any one of us.

While many dear saints have been much troubled by controversy, because they fear that the asperities so liable to be indulged in by the parties disputing, will tend to interrupt brotherly kindness, and because any expressed differences among the dear saints hurt them deeply, others seems to be opposed to controversy because they are not willing that any position which they hold as correct should be disputed. Sometimes one will present his views very elaborately and positively, and then declare it as his opinion that controversy is not good, but rather detrimental to the cause; implying that the presentation of an view opposing this would be controversy. Such an one forgets that he who presents a point concerning which there is a difference of opinion among brethren, himself has begun the controversy, and would be doing injustice to himself, as a fair minded man and christian, to wish to suppress such reasons as a brother might be able to present in favor of an opposite view. If he is absolutely sure that he is in the Spirit, and therefore right, he need have no fear; for whatever could be urged against the truth, would but set it more clearly on the minds of those in whom God has shined, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. If he should happen to be wrong, it would be good to have the error shown.

If I should venture to give any advice to an editor of a journal of truth, which I would do with great hesitation, it would be to allow candid expressions of the views of brethren of good standing in the churches to be published, but never to allow one single word expressing reproof to one for holding different views from the writer, nor one acrimonious expression or unkind personal reflection to appear. Everything calculated to give personal offense, everything that intimated a desire to have dominion over the faith of a brother, I would have rigidly expunged, One cannot always see what manner of spirit he is of while writing, but the reader can see very clearly; and almost any one, when in his right mind, would be thankful to the editor who should with a stroke of the pen prevent him from appearing before the multitude of readers with anger, contempt, jealously, hatred, plainly expressed, as they most surely will be when they are rankling within him while he writes.

Elder R. Lester Dodson,
Dear Brother in Christ:

Enclosed you will find a copy of the writing of Elder G. A. Reid which was published in "Landmark" in 1929. There have been many Old Baptists requesting me to have this copied and sent you to have published in the Signs of the Times. Now for the purpose of satisfying some Old Baptists in this community that you are not biased in publishing each one's thoughts concerning the Resurrection, will you please publish this as early as you can? Hoping that you and yours are well and enjoying all good things of the Lord. Yours in tribulation as well as in hope of eternal life. B.V. Helms

For sometime I have been impressed to present some of my thoughts and meditations on the subject of the resurrection of the bodies of the saints and will use for a subject the 26th chapter and 19th verse of the prophet Isaiah, which reads: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." This is a subject the brethren do not all seem to understand the same way, and I would not desire to write in a way that would lead to controversy, but simply to present my views as I understand them according to the Scriptures.

I am nearing the close of my seventieth year and as I grow older I am more impressed with the future realities that await us just beyond. "For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face." How the mind searches to comprehend the things between the now and then, but God has chosen not to reveal to me, and also to you no doubt, many things we think we would like to know. But remember, we live by hope and walk by faith. It is said by the apostle Paul "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." 1 Cor. 15:19.

If I know anything of the doctrine of God our Saviour, I am a predestinarian Baptist, believing fully that he is a God of purpose, a God of love and mercy, who has all power; and that his eternal wisdom and foreknowledge comprehended all things from eternity, that all things were, and ever have been present and visible with him; and that nothing at any time has or ever will take place that his divine wisdom and foreknowledge had not seen and known before time, for there is nothing new or old with him. He created all things and I conclude he has a special purpose in all created things; and as he has a purpose in all his creation, he most assuredly rules it all; for he does his pleasure in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of earth; and so overrules all things, that he causes them to work together for good to them that love him, to them who are the called, according to his purpose. So in the beginning God created heaven and the earth. Let us not lose sight of his purpose. The heaven is God's throne, the earth his footstool. The earth is the dwelling place of all God's earthly creation. The earth is where man lives and where man dies and where man is buried. Man lives of the earth, because he is of the earth, an earthly man, bearing the image of his Creator in his form or fashion. To my mind the man was passive in his creation. He took no part, asked no questions, gave no advice, he was dead. He was but clay in the hands of the potter; but God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life (not life, but the breath of life) and man became a living soul.

"Known unto God are all his works from the beginning." But to proceed with the subject above quoted, we believe the prophet Isaiah was inspired of God to use the language, and as "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works." It is not to the man of the world, because it is foolishness to him.

Inspiration is to the living man, one who has been quickened and made alive. The dead in trespasses and in sins are carnally minded, and "to be carnally minded is death," and the carnal mind can not discern spiritual things, neither can it know them because they are spiri tually discerned. If we have not the spirit of Christ, we are none of his; but if we have the spirit of Christ, or Christ is in us the hope of glory, we have that life, or spiritual mind, by which we know, or discern spiritual things. But the children of God are not of the world; Jesus says "ye are not of the world, (even as I am not of the world,) but I have chosen you out of the world." So the redeemed family of God have their citizenship in heaven, from whence they look for the Saviour. Then they "are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people." As their citizenship is in heaven their heart is there, their treasure is there; for wheresoever the treasure is there will the heart be also, and they were waiting the adoption, to wit, the redemption of their body. We know our body is mortal, we know also the body must die. We fully realize that sin is the transgression of the law, and by the transgression of the law, the sentence of death was pronounced, for since by man came death, by man also came the resurrection of the dead; so by the disobedience of one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, so death has passed upon all men, for that all have sinned, (not the sentence of death only) but death passed upon all men; for as in Adam all die. The entire human family all died in Adam, from Cain to the last one that ever will breathe the breath of life of Adam's posterity, dead in trespasses and in sins. There is another sentence passed upon Adam and his entire posterity, dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return. The dead in trespasses and in sins are made alive only by the hearing of the voice of the Son of God. For the hour is coming and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live. "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth."

This is the resurrection of the corporeally dead, which we have under consideration. The creature was made subject to vanity, susceptible to sin, of the earth earthy. He was mortal, not immortal. If he had been immortal he could not have sinned, but being mortal having flesh and blood he could not inherit the kingdom of God and having a body of flesh, which is corrupt, or corruptible, it is also said neither doth corruption inherit incorruption.

Then the death, dying, the process by which the body returns to dust, as prescribed by Job takes place. "For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed with in me." Job 19:25-27.

As God created the heaven for his throne, John says in Revelation 21:27, "And there shall in no wise enter into anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." Earth is a death bed. It is a place of change, it is where all nature changes; all natural life ends here. Job further says; "If a man die, shall he live again?" Job 14:14. We answer yes, the proof is too positive to doubt: but what it is that is resurrected from the dead, is what men differ upon in their opinions; and why are we writing this article, not to try to force our views on any one; but to give our views as we see and understand them, according to the Scriptures.

The apostle Paul in 1st Corinthians 15th chapter, gives a clear and concise analysis and he speaks according to the Scriptures and affirms that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, and that he was buried; and that he arose again the third day according to the Scriptures, and that he was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve, after that he was seen of five hundred brethren at once; and the greater part of them remained at the time of Paul's writing. After that he was seen of James, then of all the apostles; last of all says Paul he was seen of me. All eye witnesses to Jesus resurrection from the grave. Christ became the first fruit of them that slept.

Christ is the head, the church is his body, and if the first fruit be holy, the entire lump is holy. If the head be holy, so also is the body. Jesus said I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me, and this is the will of the Father which sent me, that of all he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day. This raising up again has reference to the resurrection of the saints.

There must be a sacrifice for sin. Sin must be put away, must be atoned for. The offerings under the law could not take away sin, the law could not give life there must be a perfect offering, an offering without spot to God. So Christ was made a little lower than the angels by the suffering of death. He put away our sins by the sacrifice of himself. So then Christ hath redeemed us unto God by the blood of the everlasting covenant; which was ordered in all things and sure. No failure about it. Ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God and when Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. No wonder Isaiah could say: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." I said the earth was a death bed. It is the place where man has always dwelt. The scenes enacted by man have been many and varied, but the most far reaching to my mind, was the transgression of God's law, with the penalty of death, which has involved all mankind. It was man that was created of the dust of the earth. It was man that breathed the breath of life. It was man that received the commandment to not eat of the tree of knowledge of good and evil; it was the man that disobeyed, that sinned. It was the man that sinned that died. It is the man that dies that is buried, and if it is not the buried man that is resurrected, pray tell me what it is. Paul says if the dead rise not, then is our preaching vain, and your hope is vain, and we are yet in our sins. 1st Corinthians 15. But Paul further says, "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept." And the apostle Peter says, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time." 1 Peter 1:3-5. It is the doctrine of the surety and undeniable resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, that begets within us a lively, or living hope, that we, though we go into the grave shall not forever remain there; but as Jesus is both the resurrection and the life, our hope is of a blessed immortality beyond the grave. The sea gives up the dead which are in it, and death and delivered up the dead which were in them. Rev. 20:13. What is it that is buried in the sea? What is it that goes down into the grave? Is it the body of man? Is it the spirit of man? Is it the life? Is it some principle of man without form or shape? What is it, if it is not the man that was born of flesh? Man that is born of woman, of which it is said dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return. What part of Christ was crucified, was it the body, the humanity? What rose from Joseph's tomb, if it was not the same body that Joseph of Arimathea took down from the cross, wrapped in linen and laid in the sepulchre? In what form did he appear to his disciples? In what form did he ascend into heaven, was it without the body? What did the angel say? "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1:11. We also have as proof of the resurrection of the body, in connection with the crucifixion of Christ the following scripture, "And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many." Mat. 27:52-53. Also read Ezekiel 37:1st to 15th inclusive. I have long believed in the resurrection of the body. This has been my hope and the doctrine I have preached for many years; and if it is not this way, I am a poor deceived mortal and if the mortal body is not changed and fashioned like unto the glorious body of Christ, (not exchanged but changed) then the doctrine of the resurrection has lost all its sweetness to me. But Paul so fully established this view, that we feel safe in our position; for he says "the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." 1 Cor. 15:52. Changed yes, I remember no scripture that teaches or has any reference to being exchanged. Changed how? This our mortal body is sown in corruption, in dishonor, in weakness and a natural body. It, the same body, is raised in incorruption, in glory, in power and a spiritual body. 1 Cor. 15:38 to 45 inclusive. "We inherit our mortal, dying, corruptible, changeable bodies, from the first man Adam and bear his image. So in the resurrection our mortal bodies are changed and fashioned like unto the glorious body of Christ the second Adam the Lord from heaven and bear his image; for as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly: we shall see him and be like him, for we shall see him as he is. For when we awake in his likeness we shall be satisfied, blessed thought. For this corruptible must put on incorruption and this mortal must put on immortality, so when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written: "Death is swallowed up in victory." The end will be attained for which we have been seeking and the victory will be given us by our God, for thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Humbly submitted for your consideration.

Elder G. A. Reid
April, 1944.

"All thy children shall be taught of the Lord." — Isaiah liv. 13.

The teaching of God can only be known and realized by those who have seen an end of all creature perfection, and who are completely and experimentally destitute of all wisdom in the flesh. And God's teaching does not leave a man where it found him, dead, stupified, worldly, unfeeling, and carnal. If he is in distress, it does not leave him in distress; if he feels guilty, it does not leave him guilty; if he is in darkness, it does not leave him in darkness; but it lifts him out of these evils. Thus God's people are continually led to come unto him for his instruction, because they feel that without his special teaching they can know nothing as they ought to know. Nay, the more they have, the more they want to have; for no sooner is the light withdrawn, than the darkness is more sensibly felt. If any text of Scripture has been opened up to them, it makes them want to have others made known in a similar way; if they have had any consolation, and it is taken away, it makes them want it again. So that the more wise and spiritual God's people become, the more foolish and carnal they appear in their own eyes; the stronger they are in the Lord and in the power of his might, the more sensibly do they feel the weakness of their flesh; and the more they are enabled to walk closely with the Lord, the more they discover the wretched wanderings of their base and sinful hearts.

ROMANS 15:13-15.

Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost.

And I myself also am persuaded of you, my brethren, that ye also are full of goodness, filled with all knowledge, able also to admonish one another.

Nevertheless, brethren, I have written the more boldly unto you in some sort, as putting you in mind, because of the grace that is given to me of God.

HYMN

God shall alone the refuge be,
And comfort of my mind;
Too wise to be mistaken, He,
Too good to be unkind.

In all his holy, sovereign will,
He is, I daily find,
Too wise to be mistaken, still,
Too good to be unkind.

When I the tempter's rage endure
Tis God supports my mind;
Too wise to be mistaken, sure,
Too good to be unkind.

What though I can't his goings see,
Nor all his footsteps find,
Too wise to be mistaken, He,
Too good to be unkind.

"Behold, the days shall come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord. And they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east, they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it. In that day shall the fair virgins and young men faint for thirst." Amos 8:11-13.

We understand that this scripture applies naturally to the Jews under the law, but what has been its spiritual meaning to the family of God through the ages? And now, what does it mean to us? We must enquire of the Lord and wait until the answer is given. God's children believe in revelation. The word of truth is given among men but not by men, but by every word which proceeds out of the mouth of God. The inspired apostle Paul said "If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord." And the apostle Peter was blessed to say, "If any man speak [according to the Spirit of truth], let him speak [he must speak] as the oracles [utterance] of God." The apostle Paul also said in another place, "For I neither received it [the gospel] of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." Therefore, we are made to see that no one is able to write or to speak or to understand anything of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, except by revelation from God.

We have seen, within our fellowship over many years, many church members and friends aging and dying, with but few being added to the number. We have seen that a large number of the elders have passed away, with but few to follow in their footsteps. We have seen the churches closing as the members have become infirm, and not able to continue as before. Nevertheless, we have seen the remaining churches still being provided with enabled ministers, and being kept in love; and faith, and order. God has not forgotten His people, and has promised to never leave them nor forsake them, but that He would be with them even until the end of the world. David was blessed to say, "Once I was young, and now I am old, and I have not seen the righteous forsaken, nor thy seed begging bread."

When the Lord told of that great tribulation which should come at the end of the world, He said of those days, that if they were not shortened, no flesh would be saved. And He said that those days would be shortened for the elect's sake. We are made to see from this that some of the elect shall continue here until the end of the world. Also the inspired apostle said that those saints who were alive and remained at the Lord's coming would be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and would be caught up together with all saints to meet the Lord in the air, where they shall ever be with the Lord. The Lord shall not be left without a witness. Some of God's faithful witnesses shall be kept here upon the earth until the end of time, and His word proves it.

In the world around us, we cannot find the word of the Lord. It cannot be found in any of the places claiming to be Christian, nor in any other religion or philosophy of the world. It cannot be found on the radio, or on the TV, or in any other worldly media. It cannot be found in the schools, or in the government, or in any other worldly institution. There is a famine in the land, and the Lord has sent it. This world is a wilderness and a desert land, a place where there is no food or water to sustain the spiritual life of God's children. But the Lord said He found Jacob in a desert land, and in a waste howling wilderness, and that He led him about and instructed him and kept him as the apple of His eye. And He said that there was found no strange god with him. The word of the Lord may only be found in the oasis within the desert wilderness by those babes to whom it is revealed. It is hidden from the wise and prudent of this world of woe.

In the midst of this desert wilderness is an oasis prepared of God for His people, where they shall be kept and nourished all their days. This oasis is Christ. In the book of Revelation, the account is given of a certain woman who was about to deliver a child. And there was a great red dragon there ready to devour the child as soon as it was born. But the child was caught up to God, and to His throne. The dragon persecuted the woman, and she was given two wings of a great eagle that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place which was prepared of God, where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time from the face of the serpent. And the serpent cast out of his mouth water as a flood that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood. But the earth helped the woman, and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth.

I have been made to believe that the woman referred to here, stands for the church, and that the child stands for Christ who was crucified and rose again and ascended into heaven to the throne of God. The dragon is the devil who hates the Lord and the Lord's people. I am made to believe that the two wings stand for the power of God, and the great eagle represents the Holy Spirit. The wilderness is the world where the church abides. But the place where the woman is nourished is the oasis in Christ, in whom she is kept and nourished for a time, times and half a time. This flood of water from his mouth is the false doctrine of the devil, and the earth which swallows up the flood is the wicked which shall believe a lie and be damned. I am made to believe the time, times and half a time represents the whole time the church is given to live in this world.

A time appears to represent one year; times, two years; and half a time, half a year. The total is three and a half years. The only place I know where three and a half years are mentioned in the Old Testament is the scripture concerning Elijah, and the great drought and famine of three and a half years which was sent during his lifetime. In the time of this famine, the Lord sent him to a widow woman who had just a little meal and a little oil. She had planned to prepare what she had for her son and herself as a last meal before they would starve to death. When Elijah came to her, he told her to prepare the cakes for himself. What a great act of faith for her to give all she had to another, thinking that she and her son were sure to die if she did so She was blessed to give that to the Lord's prophet, and she was, no doubt, amazed to find that the meal and the oil did not fail for her household through the whole time of the famine. There she was in the wilderness, without prospect of any nourishment, and was miraculously provided the things she and those with her needed to survive. I am made to believe this is a figure of the church being kept by Christ in the desert wilderness through the ages.

How now does the three and a half years of famine apply to us in our wilderness? Fasting is a time of hunger, and a strong feeling of want and weakness from not eating. Christ was asked by the disciples of John and those of the Pharisees to give a reason that His disciples did not fast as they and the Pharisees did. Jesus told them that His disciples could not fast while the bridegroom was present with them, but when the bridegroom would be taken away from them, then, they would fast. While Jesus was bodily present with them, they were safe in His care, and they had all they needed. They were joyful in His presence, because they were blessed to know that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. When Christ was taken up from them, and ascended into heaven, they were afraid, and mourned, and knew not what to do, nor where to turn. But He did not forsake them. He promised to send them the Holy Spirit to dwell with them and in them, to teach and comfort them until His return. They were commanded by the Lord to not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father. Jesus said, "And, behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." On the day of Pentecost, the Holy Spirit was given to the saints in great power according to the Lord's promise.

The span of time between the day when the Lord was taken up from His disciples until the day He shall come again in great power and glory, appears to me to be the time of drought and famine for His disciples. It is a famine of the blessed bodily presence of the Lord Himself. While we are in the flesh, we are absent from the Lord. But when He comes again it will be the time of refreshing in His presence; it will be as the life-giving rain to the dry ground; the time when all things will be brought to completion. The drought and famine will end, and the sons of God will be changed, raised up in His likeness, and blessed to see Him as He is in glory and caught up together with all saints to be with Him and be forever satisfied.

Sometimes we think we shall perish in this wilderness. Sometimes we think we may have been left to die here in pain and sorrow. Sometimes we think that every creature help has failed us, and we will surely faint. So, it was with poor Job. His possessions were taken away, his family and friends were removed, his health and strength fled away, but he was blessed to say, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord." And he was blessed to say again in faith, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust Him." And so it is with us. Because, underneath are the everlasting arms.

The blessed prophet Isaiah was given these powerful words for the family of God; to encourage them through the days of famine while they are in the wilderness of this world. "Why sayest thou, O Jacob, and speakest, O Israel, My way is hid from the Lord, and my judgment is passed over from my God? Hast thou not known? Hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the LORD, the creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary? There is no searching of his understanding. He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might he increaseth strength. Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall: But they that wait upon the LORD shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint."

"His strength is made perfect in weakness." We do not know the day nor the hour of the Lord's return, but must be blessed to patiently wait for His appearing. Nevertheless, we say with heartfelt desire, Even so, Lord, come quickly. At His coming may we be given wings as eagles to mount up, and to meet the Lord in the air and to be with Him forever in glory.

I trust this was written in love and in hope of eternal life.

THE NEED FOR, THE PROSPECTUS, AND THE OBJECT OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES

Feeling deeply the need of a medium of correspondence, and excluded from the columns of the so called Baptist papers, after much deliberation it was concluded to attempt to make ourselves heard by our brethren scattered abroad, by publishing a paper devoted to the cause of truth, and through which we could enter our solemn protest against all the innovations, new theories and new institutions which, under the name of Baptist, had so greatly prevailed. With these objects in view, in the year 1832, we issued the following prospectus, viz:

Proposal for publishing a semi-monthly paper, to be called the "Signs of the Times," devoted exclusively to the Baptist cause, maintaining inviolably the following scriptural sentiments:

1. The Existence, Sovereignty, Immutability, Omnipotence and Eternal perfections of the Great Jehovah- the Revelation which God has given of himself, as Father, Son and Holy Ghost. "These Three are One." - 1 John 5:8.

2. The Absolute Predestination of all things.

3. Eternal, Unconditional Election.

4. The Total Depravity and just condemnation of fallen man.

5. That the Atonement and Redemption of Jesus Christ are for the Elect only.

6. The Sovereign, Irresistible, and in all cases, Effectual work of the Holy Spirit, in Regenerating and Quickening the Elect of God.

7. The final Preservation and Eternal Happiness of all the sons of God, by grace.

8. The Resurrection of the dead, and Eternal Judgment.

9. That the Church of Christ is composed exclusively of Baptized Believers --- that to her are given able ministers of the New Testament, that the Scriptures are the only divinely authorized Rule of Faith and Practice for the saints of God.

10. That there is no connection between Church and State, and as touching the proposition for a marriage between them, the Hon. R.M. Johnson, in his report on the Sabbath Question, has expressed our faith.

The "Signs of the Times" will be decidedly opposed to Bible Tract and Missionary Societies, Theological Seminaries, Sabbath Schools, &c., &c., making war with the Mother, Arminianism, and her entire brood of institutions.

Our brethren of the Old School of Christ will bear in mind that this humble sheet is devoted to the Baptist cause, as we believe the Baptist cause to be the cause of God and that its columns are designed to be used as a medium for the circulation of bible doctrine and general information.

The dear people of God who remain steadfast and unshaken in the apostles' doctrine are at this day greatly scattered through the country, and in many instances where one or more of them are found they are supposed to be the only ones remaining of the same faith and order. Indeed, they are often themselves driven to the conclusion of Elijah: "They have digged down thine altars and killed thy prophets, and I am left alone and they seek my life." In their scattered situation it affords them peculiar pleasure to hear from one another. "As cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country." Prov. Xxv. 25.

It is certainly good news to the scattered pilgrims to hear of the numbers in different parts of the land who still adhere to the doctrine and practice of the primitive church. In the days of old, "they that feared the Lord spake often to one another;" and the exhortation of the apostle is, that we "exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching."

From a conviction in our own mind that well written discussions, in a spirit of kindness, on various subjects, will contribute to the interest and usefulness of the 'Signs', we have concluded to ask the indulgence of such of our brethren as do not see with us the propriety of such a course, while we will promise, on our part, to reject all such communications on controverted points as are written in an ill natured or unbecoming spirit or style. Why should we be afraid to discuss what we hold to be the truth? Nothing but error can suffer from investigation; the more closely the truth is scrutinized, the more brilliantly it will shine.

Elder Gilbert Beebe
November 25, 1800 to May 2, 1881

Gilbert Beebe was born in Norwich, Connecticut. In his eleventh year he was united with the Baptist Church in Norwich, Connecticut and was baptized by Elder John Sterry; He was licensed to preach in his eighteenth year and was soon called to the service of several churches. During his ministry he faithfully served the following Baptist churches: the church in Norwich; Ebenezer, Ramopo,. New Vernon and Middletown and Wallkill in New York; the Third Baptist Church in Baltimore; Upper Broad Run in Virginia; and Shiloh-in Washington, D.C.

The division or separation of the Missionary Baptists from the Old Order took place in 1832 during the ministry of Elder Beebe. In this year he began to publish the periodical called the "Signs of the Times." He served as the editor for about fifty years until the Lord removed him from service by death. He was a kind, sound and faithful minister of the Gospel, and suffered much at the hands of many who opposed him and the truth he was so wonderfully blessed to defend. He showed himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.

Elder William L. Beebe
October 3, 1829 to March 28, 1901

William Beebe, the son of Elder Gilbert Beebe was baptized, at the age of twelve, by his father into the fellowship of the New Vernon Old School Baptist Church of New York. At about the age of twenty he began to exercise his gift of preaching. He moved to the state of Georgia in 1852, and for many years preached in churches there, and also published and edited the "Southern Baptist Messenger," a periodical devoted to the Old School Baptist cause. He was compelled to cease publication in 1862, during the Civil War after he was captured by the Union Army, and held as a prisoner of war for nine months. In 1865 he was ordained to the full work of the gospel ministry by the Hollis Spring Church in Newton Co., GA. In 1881 he moved to Middletown, NY where he, in connection with his brother Benton L. Beebe, edited and published the "Signs of the Times" from about 1881 until 1896. Elder Benton Jenkins also served as Co-Editor with Elder W. L. Beebe from 1894-1896. Elder Beebe served Eben-ezer, Warwick Shoal Creek, Hollis Springs and other churches: He was a devoted husband, loving father and kind friend, and a faithful minister and servant of God.

Luke 21:28-33.

And when these things begin to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh.

And he spake to them a parable; Behold the fig tree, and all the trees;

When they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves that summer is now night at hand.

So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand.

Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away, till all be fulfilled.

Heaven and earth shall pass away: but my words shall not pass away.

CORRESPONDENCE

Oct. 14, 2016

Dear Mr. Horton,

Enclosed is a check for renewal to The Signs for another two years. What a blessing they have been, and I really do enjoy the good editorials by Elder Farmer and Elder Robertson, as well as the very good articles from "Voices of the Past."

May God continue to bless and be with all who endeavor to keep this dear magazine in publication - it is a source of "glad tidings" to the Lord's people - wherever they may be - My hope is that I will be found among them on the day He calls them home.

One of the least, if one at all.
In hope, Caroline Martin

October 27, 2016

Dear Brothers,

I want to say how much I look forward to reading the Signs each month. I have done so for over 40 years now. My pastor, Elder Grady Dearman introduced me to it then, if memory serves.

He was a faithful minister of Christ for over 50 years. He passed from this life on April 17, 2016. I learned so much from him over the years. He studied the Scriptures and other edifying sources unceasingly. He is sorely missed.

I commend you, brothers, for the work that you do to get the Signs out each month. I also want to mention the wives that stand beside you. They also serve. I have observed their sacrifices over the years in supporting their husband's ministry.

Please renew my subscription for two more years, my check is enclosed.

In hope,
Vera (Nell) Potter

PSALM 110.

The said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool.

The Lord shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion: rule thou in the midst of thine enemies.

Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power, in the beauties of holiness from the womb of the morning: thou hast the dew of thy youth.

The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek.

The Lord at thy right hand shall strike through kings in day of his wrath.

He shall judge among the heathen, he shall fill the places with the dead bodies; he shall would the heads over many countries.

He shall drink of the brook in the way: therefore shall he lift up the head.

ARTICLES

Elder Cleo Robertson,

If this article meets your approval, you may print it in the Signs of the Times.

When I am blessed to go back in my book of remembrance, I see many experiences and travels that bring peace and joy to my unworthy being. This is one such experience. At an Old Baptist Association in Georgia, several years ago, I heard a dear brother recall this, and it stuck in my memory. I hope I have not forgotten details that would detract from this.

SOLDIERS OF THE CROSS

At an Old Baptist meeting, somewhere in Western Kentucky or Tennessee, an Old Baptist Elder from a state north of here was called upon to speak to the congregation. I know not the year nor the location. When he arose before the church, he stated that being here brings back memories to mind. He told them that he was a soldier in the Union Army during the war between the states. They were camped near here and he was given the order to clear a bridge that they were to cross the next day. As he approached the bridge, he saw a lone confederate soldier, marching sentry on the bridge. As he started to creep up closer to get a shot, He heard the soldier singing an old familiar hymn, number 231 in our little Goble Hymn Book, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul." He remembered singing this hymn in the churches back home. When he got close enough to get a shot at him, he was singing the second verse, "Cover My Defenseless Head with the shadow of thy wing." And God did cover Him with His Wing. He was melted down with Love, and knew that although this man was wearing an enemy uniform, he was a brother in Christ, and he could not shoot him.

When the Elder finished his discourse, another Elder arose with tears streaming down his face, embraced Him and said "I was that soldier marching sentry that day." Oh, what a reunion that must have been. God moves in a mysterious way, his wonders to perform.

I have a couple requests for the readers of the Signs of the Times. First, if anyone knows the details of this experience, such as dates, names, places or corrections to my errors, please write them down and pass them on to the editor of the Signs of the Times, so others may read and enjoy the amazing grace of our God, bestowed upon the these soldiers of the cross. Second, if you have witnessed like experiences, or have heard or read of experiences that will edify the church, send them to the Signs of the Times, so we can all enjoy them.

I seek not recognition, only that our God be praised.

In bonds of love,
A Stranger Here Below.

VOICES OF THE PAST

BROTHERLY KINDNESS
2 PETER 1:4-15

"Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust. And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; And to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall: For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth. Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance; Knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath shewed me. Moreover I will endeavor that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance."

We are not left in doubt as to whom this epistle is addressed. To them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ. Let us note that this faith mentioned is obtained one way, through the righteousness of Christ; the fruit of the Spirit; the substance of things hoped for; the evidence of things not seen; the gift of God, not of works lest any man should boast. Without faith it is impossible to please God. Before any one can perform any work that will please God he must first be given faith. Works do not produce faith, but faith will produce good works. Nothing we do pleases God except it be mixed with the faith that was once delivered to the saints. One must have something to add to before there is an increase. The adding and multiplying of these things comes through the knowledge of God and of Jesus Christ our Lord. The more one is given to comprehend that ye are complete in him; that in him all fullness dwells, of his fullness have ye received and grace for grace; that he is Christ, head over all things to the church, "how shall he not with him also freely give us all things." God has blessed his people with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ.

So there is no question as to the power by which all the things mentioned by the apostle in the fifth, sixth and seventh verses is performed, according as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue. There can be no question as to who it is that adds these things. They who have been born again, children of God, the living in Christ, not dead sinners. Neither can there be any question as to how they perform such things - according to his divine power. "And to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity." Brotherly kindness! What a wonderful thing it is. In all our conduct one toward another, at no time is the meek and lowly one manifest more than in brotherly kindness. One may be as bold as a lion in defense of some point of doctrine; he may speak fluently; understand mysteries; contend earnestly for the matter, but unless brotherly kindness is manifest in so doing it profits him nothing. If we are favored with this thing we will watch over one another for good and not for evil; will not make a brother an offender for a word when he is overtaken in a fault. He will be restored in the spirit of meekness, considering ourselves. Oh, may we be given to be wise as serpents (not like serpents) and harmless as doves, that we may adorn our profession with an orderly walk and a godly conversation, be kind one toward another, forgiving one another even as Christ has forgiven us.

As to points of doctrine may we hold forth the faithful Word, adhere to the teachings of the Scriptures. Especially where there is a difference of opinion, it is important that we go no further in a matter than the word of God goes. I remember several years ago hearing one brother say of another, he is a limited predestinarian. Why! I said I thought he believed in the predestination of all things. No, he said that brother in all his preaching is preaching and proving the predestination of wicked acts of men, and not that ALL things work together for good to them that love God. The thought I want to present is this: the brother under consideration was preaching the truth as far as he went with the matter, yet many things pertaining to this doctrine were ignored. So when any of us use certain Scriptures seeking to prove a point, yet at the same time are ignoring other Scriptures pertaining to the same thing, we are not holding forth the faithful Word. Some will ask the question: Are we to ignore the preaching of false doctrine and questionable conduct on the part of the brethren and call it brotherly kindness? I say no, rather to the contrary. A labor of brotherly love should be bestowed upon him to save him. In all our contending for doctrine or practice may one thing above all others be manifest brotherly kindness, and to this add charity. In looking back over articles of many of our able ministers who have been discharged from the battlefield I note that they were not always agreed on everything, there was a brotherly difference, and in all their writings that spirit was manifest. They all agreed that all the salvation that sinners receive was of God, that salvation was all of grace, that it is sinners that are saved. How beautiful was the spirit of their writing, how kind and tender toward one another. Each one said, I am weak, I know so little, I am unworthy of God's mercies. Each esteemed the other better than themselves. How sad to-day to behold in some of the periodicals a spirit contrary to the things manifest in these brethren that are gone. The tendency in some to lay down the rule and say, if you do not subscribe to this you are not an Old School Baptist. When I was asked to join the editorial staff of the SIGNS by our beloved brother Dodson, the first question I asked was, will matters of controversy be in the SIGNS? Will local differences of brethren be aired through the pages of the paper? I was given to understand that these things would not be. What I meant by these questions was whether there would be allowed to go into the paper articles contentious: and harmful to the peace of Zion. To-day it has weathered the storms of one hundred and ten years, being the oldest Old School Baptist paper in the United States. Since its publication started many others have come and gone, and when a carnal sword is used we may expect to fall also. May he who suffers not a sparrow to fall without him, grant us grace to steadfastly contend for the faith, bearing one another's burdens, being a comfort to one another and so fulfill the law of Christ. "For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins."

"Jesus the great, the mighty God,
A man of grief became;
In paths of meekness here he trod,
And bore the sinner's shame.

O may his meekness be my guide,
The pattern I pursue;
How can I bear revenge or pride,
With Jesus in my view?"

By one who is continually in need of the tender mercies of God.

ECCLESIASTES 3:14-15

"I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him. That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been: and God requireth that which is past."

Sister Etta J. Norton, Rt. 1, Crewe, Virginia, has asked that we give our views through the Signs on the above scripture. We wish to preface such thoughts as we may offer with what Solomon said when he was made king of Israel. God appeared to him in a dream and said, "Ask what I shall give thee. And Solomon said, Thou hast shewed unto thy servant David my father great mercy, according as he walked before thee in truth, and in righteousness, and in uprightness of heart with thee; and thou hast kept for him this great kindness, that thou hast given him a son to sit on his throne, as it is this day. And now, O Lord my God, thou hast made thy servant king instead of David my father: and I am but a little child: I know not how to go out or come in. And thy servant is in the midst of thy people which thou hast chosen, a great people, that cannot be numbered nor counted for multitude. Give therefore thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people, that I may discern between good and bad: for who is able to judge this thy so great a people?" We are given to understand that God was pleased with this desire for wisdom on the part of Solomon, which he granted and also blessed him otherwise. We are persuaded that no man, of himself, is sufficient for these things, and that he needs that wisdom which comes down from above in order to rightly interpret or divide the word of truth. In order to interpret the words or sayings of a wise man, one must of necessity be a partaker of the same wisdom, which can come from only one source, for Israel's God is one God, the same yesterday, today and for ever, and besides him there is no Savior. Our first thought is that to "know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be forever," is wonderful knowledge, indeed. The natural man does not know this, and neither can he accept the doctrine which is set forth in the text. Only the godly wise understand what Solomon declared, and they are made to rejoice in it. Moses was in thorough accord with Solomon, for he said, "Ascribe ye greatness unto our God. He is the Rock, his work is perfect." Deut. 32:3-4. To know that "whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever," is to have an understanding of the perfect work of God: so perfect in fact that "nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it." David would say, "Selah," which means that all has been said that can be said, and that it is full and complete in every sense of the word. John was in accord with this when he wrote: "For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: And if man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in book Rev. 22:18-19. We further understand that the sovereign, eternal God has a purpose in all that he does and he will be inquired of, feared, loved and worshipped; therefore it is said that "God doeth it, that men should fear before him." The true Christian serves the God he loves, and loves the God he knows, and when he makes himself known unto his children, which is by revelation, they will worship and adore him for his wonderful works among the children of men and they will rejoice in him, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom he sent into the world to seek and to save that which was lost. The ones under consideration here are those who were chosen in Christ before ever the world was, but in time were manifested in Adam and became lost, or separated from God, through transgression, which necessitated the coming of their Redeemer to pay the redemption price and set them free.

When God is pleased to draw aside the veil and permit us to get a glimpse of that which for ages he has hid from the wise and prudent of this world and revealed unto babes, then it is we comprehend something of the infinite wisdom which drew the wondrous plan of salvation and rejoice in the fact that our God "is in one mind and who can turn him? and what his soul desireth, even that he doeth." Isaiah tells us that he declared "the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure: Calling a ravenous bird from the east, the man that executeth my counsel from a far country: yea, I have spoken it, I will also bring it to pass; I have purposed it, I will also do it." Isa. 46:10-11. We would understand from this that is sovereignty extends to all creatures, clean and unclean, and over all worlds, principalities and powers, visible or invisible. Even the wicked king Nebuchadnezzar had to confess, "he doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth: and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou?"

"The Lord of hosts hath sworn, saying: Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass: and as I have purposed, so shall it stand." Believing this, as we most certainly do, we must also believe that "that which hath been is now." Of a truth, known unto God are all his works from the beginning, and Jeremiah asked the question, "Who is he that saith, and it cometh to pass, when the Lord commandeth it not?" Lam. 3:37. If nothing comes to pass except that which God commanded, we must believe, and to us there is comfort in believing it, that all that is transpiring in the world to-day is according to the all-wise purpose and plan which inscrutable wisdom foresaw and designed in the counsels of eternity, and let us take courage in the fact that not only the beginning but all that intervenes even unto the end is ordered and sure and cannot fail. He who has purposed to try us and refine us, has also purposed to save us with an everlasting salvation by and through his blessed Son, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Therefore, whatever storms we may have to encounter as we journey along life's highway, each step will but bring us nearer to our desired haven of eternal rest and nothing, absolutely nothing, shall ever be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus. He "who hath measured the waters in the hollow of his hand, and meted out heaven with the span, and comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure, and weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance," hath foreknown and determined all things, and what his eternal mind has decreed must be accomplished, and there is nothing new with him. There is no much thing as past and future with God, but one eternal now and not only is it true that "that which hath been is now," but also "that which is to be hath already been." Nothing can altered or changed in any particular whatsoever so far as God is concerned. Time is only turning the pages in God's book and bringing into manifestation, and to our view the things which God has ordered and fixed. "And God requireth that which is past." When we, as Isaiah says "Remember the former things," and see how God's word has been fulfilled in every jot and tittle, how all that the pro- phets foretold concerning Christ came to pass in the finished work of Jesus while here in the world, can we any longer doubt that He is God, and there is none else; that he is God, and there is none like him? And since he brought; to pass that which his holy prophets of old were moved by the Holy Spirit to write beforehand concerning his only begotten Son, will he of whom it is said. "Great is thy faithfulness," be any less faithful in bringing us forth more than conquerors, through him that loved us and gave himself for us? Surely, God requires of us the same faith and trust in him that he did in Israel of old. Let us, therefore, as much as is in us keep the first and great commandment, which is, to "love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind."

Solomon, the Preacher, in the first part of the chapter containing our text says: "To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heavens: A time to be born, and a time to die: a time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted. A time to kill and a time to heal; a time to break down, and a time to build up; A time to weep, and a time to laugh; a time to mourn, and a time to dance; A time to cast away stones, and a time to gather stones together; a time to embrace, and a time to refrain from embracing; A time to get, and a time to lose; a time to keep, and a time to cast away; A time to rend, and a time to sew; a time to keep silence, and a time to speak. A time to love, and a time to hate; a time of war, and a time of peace." This is so complete and all-embracing as to permit of no omission whatever. Solomon also said, "The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done is that which shall be done; and there is no new thing under the sun." With him who is the I AM THAT I AM there can be nothing new, nothing different from what it always has been in his mind and purpose. He is perfect in all of his attributes, and nothing can be added to or taken from the work of his hand. We would that we might all be given to grasp and believe this. If so, we could join wholeheartedly with the Psalmist in saying, "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge. There is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard." How truly these things set forth the sovereignty and perfection of our God. When in reality we contemplate the works of God and the purpose for which every thing was made that was made, we can declare unreservedly, "All thy work shall praise thee; oh, Lord." Not only does the light or day in which they are revealed shew forth his glory, but the darkness, or night in which they are concealed "sheweth knowledge." As vegetation gets its main growth in the night time, so do the souls that trust in him behold his wonders in the deep as they go down to the sea in ships and do business in great waters.

"When our finite minds are enabled to grasp even in part some of the wonderful works of God in nature, and we are made to realize that they are at best but imperfect figures, or types and shadows of that which is to come, we can but anticipate with amazement and wonder what it will be to be caught up with the Lord in the air, to behold him in his fullness and to go out from his presence no more for ever.

PSALMS 67.

God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us; Selah.

That thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations.

Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

O let the nations be glad and sing for joy: for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth. Selah.

Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our own God, shall bless us.

God shall bless us; and all the ends of the earth shall fear him.

1857 - CHILDREN OF GOD AND ANTI-CHRIST

Connersville, Indiana, December 16, 1857.

"Hereby know ye the spirit of God; every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God. And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God; and this is that spirit of anti-christ whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world."- 1 John iv: 2,3.

Brother Beebe: - By request of sister Charlotte Herrick, in the SIGNS of the 15th of November last, I am induced to give my views on the text above. This subject is copious, and opens up a wide field for remarks. John is here writing to the children of God whom he addresses as "little children." Little children are the most helpless and dependent of all the animal creation, and therefore the most suitable to illustrate the condition of the children of God, of any, and so they are often called. John, being an old man, and an old preacher, and a teacher of babes, may with great propriety, also claim them as his little children, for whose benefit, information, learning and comfort, he was laboring. To them, he says, "Beloved, believe not every spirit but try the spirits whether they be of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world." The many false prophets being prompted by the spirit of error to oppose Christ in various ways and in many things, and by many false prophets and teachers, I suppose is the sense in which it is called many spirits. All the different operations and diversity of systems invented by this spirit and propagated by all the false prophets influenced by it, diverse as the may seem, yet they are all against Christ. They are all in the world and of the world, and many of them, from time to time, have for a season had a name in the church; but the church is not their home. They "have gone out into the world." The little children would very naturally enquire, How shall we clearly know these two spirits, and be prepared to clearly distinguish between them, so as, in all cases, to know the spirit of Truth from the spirit of error?

John promptly and in plain words answers this enquiry - "Hereby know ye the spirit of God; every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is of God;" and on the other hand, "every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God." This rule is short and easy to apply, and every way suitable to the capacity of little children who are born of the Spirit of God. The spirit that prompts the teacher or prophet will show of what sort it is, by the teaching of the prophet or teacher. Therefore, every teacher or prophet that does not, in his doctrine confess that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God. "And this is that spirit of anti-Christ whereof ye have heard that it should come, and even now already is it in the world." The world is its place, it is of that world, and the world will hear and love that which is its own.

Now a few points are presented for our special remark. First, What Jesus Christ is, which has come in the flesh? Second, What is that antichrist whereof they have heard, &c.? And, thirdly, How are the little children to know and overcome the world and this spirit of error, which even now is in the world?

First, Let us ascertain correctly who, or what that Jesus Christ which is come in the flesh, is? "Jesus" signifies a Savior, and this name was, by the Angel, given to the babe of Bethlehem, because He should save His people from their sins. The name "Christ" signifies the Anointed, the sent, the appointed One. The Messiah of the Old Testament is the same as the Christ of the new Testament, and both contemplates a character subordinate to God, in one sense, as the "Anointed," the appointed, the sent, the cut off, &c., yet fully, properly and equally God, as the Father. This character or personage, was not the flesh, but it was that Jesus Christ that is come in the flesh. This Jesus Christ dwelt in the bosom of the Father, before He came to earth and was born of Mary. He was brought forth before the mountains were, or ever the earth was. His goings forth were from of old, even from everlasting. He often appeared in personal form and was visible, as man, to the fathers, to the prophets and saints, and was by them called a "man," a "messenger" or an "angel," and He recognized the truth of the name. This was the "man of God's right hand," even the "Son of man," whom God had made strong for Himself - Psalm lxxx. 17. This is the man that spake the promise to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob. This man appeared to Manoah and Manoah's wife; and this man, as the Captain of the Lord's host, stood before Joshua with a drawn sword in His hand. Against this man the sword was commanded to awake, and smite, (not God,) but "the man that is My fellow, saith the Lord of hosts." Who stood then, as now, legally the Shepherd of the sheep? In this heavenly man, the second Adam, it pleased the Father that all fullness should dwell, and He is properly the Head over all things to His children; as man, but not as flesh, and bones, and blood, but as man, pure, sinless, undefiled; man in essence or nature, the whole fullness of the Godhead dwelt bodily in Him, and for this heavenly man a body was prepared, as a victim for His offering; and when this man came in His flesh, or body, which God had prepared Him, God was manifest in this flesh which this man, Christ Jesus, came in. The Jews denied that the promised Messiah had come in the flesh, and were antichrist; that is, they were against Christ. So atheists, deists, and all who teach that Christ was an imposter, or He was not the Son of God, all are against Christ.

The world of the ungodly, who know not God and who obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, are all against Christ; but the text seems, more especially to refer to such as makes a profession and claim to be a church, or churches of Christ, or such as individually claim to be believers of the Gospel, and still do not confess that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. Some of these will confess that the flesh and bones and body of the son of Mary, is the Jesus Christ in whom they believe, and whom they preach; and they teach that Jesus Christ, as such, never had any actual existence until He was conceived and born of Mary. Here they start the actual existence of the Mediator, the man Christ Jesus, and claim that flesh alone, as their only Christ Jesus, and do not confess that the Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus, ever came in the flesh; but the flesh is all the Jesus Christ that they will or do confess existing between God and man. They say that He never existed until He was conceived and born of Mary; therefore they do not confess that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. They contend that He was the flesh, and not that He came in the flesh. But the Spirit that is of God teaches that "Forasmuch as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He, (Jesus Christ) also Himself likewise took part of the same, or in like manner took part of the same. The spirit that confesses not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God. Others again, with most of those already described, deny that Jesus Christ was ever either in heaven or the flesh, or any where else. They apply the name to a mere phantom of their imagination that the Scriptures know nothing of, either in heaven or earth, in the flesh or out of it; a Jesus Christ who tries to save all of Adam's race, and fails to save even the half of them; and of Himself alone fails to save any, and the salvation of one and all must forever fail, after all that He has ever done or ever will do, unless the sinner himself secures his own salvation by some mighty works of his own. This phantom, the false prophets call "Jesus Christ," and they say that it is the Son of God, and that the Father is equally as impotent and dependent as the Son, and quite as liable to fail, unless man will lay to the helping hand. This is really denying the true God, and the true Jesus Christ, whom He hath sent. Of course, these do not confess that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This spirit is not of God; this is that spirit of antichrist, of which ye have heard that it should come, and is even now in the world; in the wisdom, learning, speculations and institutions of the religious world.

Second. We are to enquire who, or what this antichrist is, of whom ye have already heard that it should come, and is even now in the world. Ye have heard of the coming and working of this spirit of antichrist, this man of sin, or son of perdition, this mystery of iniquity, by the old prophets and by the apostle Paul, and by the other apostles who had written to these little children, before John wrote this letter. And some say that this letter was not written until after John had written the book of Revelation, in which the coming and reign of antichrist is so fully discussed. At all events, these little children had heard that such a spirit of opposition should come, and that it was now in the world, and would be more fully developed by an host of false prophets or teachers who should compass both sea and land to make proselytes. All expositors are apt to look to Rome, and when they have found this antichrist so fully displayed in the Papal See, they have seemed to have almost forgotten that the same spirit of error that prompted the Romish clergy to all their ambitions and bloody opposition against Christ, in His doctrine, in His government, His ordinances, His people, and His coming in the flesh, and all worldly pomp, power, wealth, learning and pretended benevolence; the various schools, missions, and means of money, &c. All this is as fully exhibited now by the Protestant antichrist, as ever it was in Rome, wherever the law will give them the power, and when that stays the hand of violence and blood, deception, fraud, slander, gimmicks and lying in wait to deceive, is resorted to. All this is the multiform working of the same spirit of antichrist, or against Him, against His Eternal Godhead at one time and place, and against His existence at any time previous to His conception and birth by Mary. Against His being absolute and unconditionally a Savior - Against the justification and cleansing virtue of His blood; for they say that all depends at last on conditions performed by men. This is again against Christ. Their doctrine, ordinances, discipline, and their worldly combinations and amalgamations with the world, show that they are in the world and of the world, and the world loves and hears them, because they are its own. All these are not only against Christ, but they prove themselves to be antichrist, according to the test that John gave to the children of God in our text. In the world they are heard, loved, received, approved and sustained, and like the world, they confess not that the true and Scriptural Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. They preach "another Jesus," "receive another spirit," and "another Gospel," which is not another, but a perversion of it.

Some may ask, Are not some of God's little children deceived by these false teachers? This is not for me to decide; if they are, the Lord is saying to them, "Come out of her, My people." A plain test is given in the text: and they should try the spirits and obey the Lord. But be this as it may, it makes neither the spirit nor the false prophets or teachers prompted by it, any the better; but if some, even of the children have, for a season, been deceived by its fair speeches, feigned humility and will-worship, and by its intrusion, surely the balance of the little children should, the more promptly and constantly consider and apply the test which is given them in the text, which is short and easily applied.

Thirdly. A few words as to how the little children are to know this spirit and overcome the world, and this spirit which is in the world. On this momentous subject John says, in the verse following the text, "Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them; because greater is He that is in you, than he that is in the world." If God, who is love, is in these little children; if His Spirit of Truth is in them; if Christ is in them the hope of glory, surely God will keep them by His power - the Spirit of light and Truth will lead them into all necessary Truth; and Christ, their Shepherd, Husband, Prophet, Priest and King; their Way, their Life, their Shield, their Righteousness and their Salvation - surely thus furnished, even the little children who are of God, have in days past, do at this time, and will finally overcome all the spirits of anti-Christ, that are now, ever have been, or ever will be in the world with the world to help them. Not by any motive, power of their own do they persevere or overcome, but because greater is He that is in them than he that is in the world!

Now, my sister Herrick, and your husband and daughter, both of whom I baptized at the last meeting at which I ever saw of you, as I had baptized you many years before, I have given you some of my views on the text which you selected; and I present them for the consideration of all God's little children. While you, and all of them, in your widely scattered situation — far from your former homes, and your old brethren and sisters, ministers and places of worship, feel lonely, like the little children weaned from the breasts and thrown among strangers, and in such an inhospitable region, you hear the howling of the spirit of anti-Christ, crying, "Lo here! Lo there!" you have often heard of this opposing spirits being in the world. Yes, you have often witnessed that these false prophets did not confess that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh; and you have often applied the test in the text. But back then you knew your friends with whom you could mingle in mutual faith, hope and love; where you could hear the Truth, and join in the songs of Zion. If sorrows, manifold temptations, darkness, doubts, fears, or unbelief gather over you, and as a thick cloud, hid the smiles of the Savior from your view for a season, still you were among your brethren and sisters, whose company and edifying conversation, and familiarity with such trials, would often comfort and encourage you on your dubious and dreary way. But now, far, far away from those old and long-tried friends, cast among strangers, knowing not who will really confess that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh --the howl of the prophets of Baal and of the Groves around you, yea, and no known, tried, confidential brother or sister to confer with, it is then you think of bygone days. But still when, by the strength of Him that is in you, and with you, the clouds are again dispersed and your way is made plain, you find that you are not alone: still you have a Comforter, even when all earthly comforts have failed. My brother and sister, you, like many others of the little children, have constant need to apply the test which is in the text, to all you hear: for in one way or another, every spirit of error and every false prophet and false teacher will preach and teach against Christ, and labor to whittle down His power, His dignity, or His grace, and to exalt man's power, free agency and works, and they confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. But the true ministers, who are separated to the work by the Holy Spirit of Truth, will come to you with Christ's test, and Christ as All in all, and such will be determined to know nothing but Jesus Christ and Him crucified. This Gospel of His sovereign grace, of His Kingdom, and your salvation, is sweet to the taste of the little children; therefore, "Eat, O friends; yea, drink abundantly, O beloved."

Yours in Christ,
Elder Wilson Thompson,

HYMN

Hail, sovereign Grace, that first began
The scheme to rescue fallen man!
Hail, matchless, free, eternal grace,
That gave my soul a hiding-place!

Against the God who rules the sky
I fought with hands uplifted high;
Despised the mansions of his grace,
Too proud to seek a hiding-place!

But thus the Eternal Counsel ran,
"Almighty Love, arrest the man!"
I felt the arrows of distress,
And found I had no hiding-place!

Indignant, Justice stood in view;
To Sinai's fiery mount I flew;
But Justice cried, with frowning face,
This mountain is no hiding-place!

Ere long a heavenly voice I heard,
And Mercy's angel-form appeared:
She led me on, with placid pace!
To Jesus, as my hiding-place!

Should storms of seven-fold thunder roll,
And shake the globe from pole to pole,
No thunder-bolt shall daunt my face.
For Jesus is my hiding-place.

On him almighty vengeance fell,
That must have sunk a world to hell:
He bore it for his chosen race,
And thus became their hiding-place.

A few more rolling suns at most,
Will land me on the heavenly coast,
Where I shall sing the song of grace,
And see my glorious hiding-place.

II Timothy 3:1-5, "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent (uncontrolled), fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God: having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away."

The Apostle further says in 1 Corinthians 6:9-11, "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolators, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God. And such were some of you: but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God."

Elder Cleo D. Robertson

As we look back over this past year, we see all of the above taking place in our country and communities and indeed throughout the world. We are in the last days and have been since Christ came and suffered, shed His blood, died and rose again. The Apostle Paul wrote in Hebrews 1:1-2, "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spoke in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds." The Apostle John also wrote in 1 John 2:18, "Little children, it is the last time: and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now are there many antichrist; whereby we know that it is the last time." Peter writes in 1 Peter 1:19-20, "But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot: who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you."

We are truly in the last days as we see all the things spoken of by the Apostles taking place before our very eyes. These are indeed perilous times. As in the days of Noah when people began to multiply and "the wickedness of man was great in the earth and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually," so is the world in our day. As Christ said "But as the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Also as Christ said, "When these things begin to come to pass, them look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."

There is no peace in the world for a child of grace and there cannot be. But, the Lord's people have a peace that the world knows not. Christ is our peace for He says "These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye shall have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." When the angel and a multitude of the heavenly host appeared to the shepherds praising of God and saying "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men," they were proclaiming that the peace of the Lord's people had come to earth.

There is but a remnant that has been blest to believe by faith that the Lord is in control of all things. There are those who claim to believe in Christ, but they also believe that man has some control to accept or reject Him. They believe that salvation is in the control of man. They are those who have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof. From such turn away.

As Moses told Israel, "The Lord did not set his love upon you, nor choose you, because ye were more in number than any people; for ye were the fewest of all people: But because the Lord loved you." The love of God is eternal as God is eternal for God is love. Therefore, the love of God had no beginning and it has no end. Those he loves, He foreknew in love before the foundation of the world and predestinated them to be conformed (changed) to the image of His son. These were by nature the children of wrath even as others. But, they are loved, foreknown and chosen in Christ before the world was ever spoken into existence. Being predestinated to be conformed to the image of Christ, they experienced a change that they had no control over. These He also called out of nature's darkness of unbelief and the love of the world into the marvelous light of understanding and truth which is Christ. To these the Lord has given the gifts of faith, hope and the love of God and His people. There is nothing that can separate you from the love of God. Because of the great love that He has for you, He came down from heaven to this world to redeem you from your sins and the condemnation of the law. He did that and on the cross declared it finished.

May the Lord of all grace and mercy be with each of you as we finish the course that has been set for us.

With love to each of you,
Elder Cleo Robertson

I would like to continue upon the writings I wrote for the signs many months back. I feel that I should share more of my experiences that I feel has led me to stand before God's people.

In my previous writings, I wrote my experiences that led me to join the church. Though I was tentative to share my experience, it seemed the whole time I had a deeper burden; even while being in the midst of the Lord's people, at times I still felt all alone. It felt as if I was caught in a valley and I could find no rest. There were many nights I tossed and turned while my mind raced. Always feeling I was not qualified to bring my feelings to Elder Cleo or any other church persons. You see, I had a burden to preach, but never felt I had received a sufficient calling. So I endeavored to fight this burden for some time.

I can remember finally telling Elder Cleo that I would attempt to speak at Big Meadows. After wrestling with the feeling for so long, I thought I could work up the courage to say a few words. The week before I studied the scripture I had everything I planned to say in my mind. So, that morning, I stood on the floor and attempted to speak. This, my dear readers, was one of the worst feelings I have had in some time. It seemed that everything I said came straight from my prepared mind. I felt no comfort by the spirit. I felt that I was deceiving the Lord's people and was such a sinner. I only spoke for around five minutes, but during that time, I have never felt so alone. I then told Elder Cleo to never call on me again and that I would never speak again. I also asked him not to call on me to close service in the future.

The next few months was some of the most lonesome and confusing times in my life. I knew I could never preach, but I still had this burden. I was hoping I could just be in the presence of the Lord's people and forget about the burden. In my carnality, I felt that since I had tried to speak once and failed, I proved I did not have a calling. So during these months of solitude, my mind would ease. When I thought I had finally terminated this burden, I felt the fear of the Lord very powerfully.

I would like to now relate one of my experiences. One night, while sleeping in my dorm at school, I began to fear. My body was turned towards the wall beside me and I could not turn my head to look behind. I became powerless and my body began to shake violently. This shaking was so violent, my bed started bouncing against the floor and wall. I was then made to cry out in my being, "Lord save me or I perish." The shaking did not stop and I truly felt I was going to die. That is when a light came from my back and I could not look directly at it but I could see it shining all around me. I knew then that the Lord was with me. Not long after I saw this light, audible words came through my mouth that said, "I will preach the gospel to your people wherever they may be."As soon as those words burst through. everything ceased, and there was a great calm.

The next morning, I arose and asked my roommate if he had heard anything that night; keep in mind, these dorms at school are extremely small and his bed was about five feet from mine. He replied and said he had not heard any noise. It's amazing to me to think on the verse, "thou has hidden these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes:" As powerful as I felt the Lord's presence, he was just as powerful to hide it from my roommate.

Not long after, I called Elder Cleo and asked if it would be okay to attempt to speak again. As I spoke from the floor that day, it seemed to flow a little better than the previous time. I still did not feel I would ever be able to preach effectively, or preach for a long amount of time.

While speaking at the various places, I feel to have been extremely discouraged and also encouraged. My mind constantly tells me that when the brethren tell me that they "enjoyed my sermon" it is only because I am young and they want to keep my spirits high; not because there was any substance in my words.

I still have wonders if I am supposed to stand before God's people. Even so, I still have a great fear of not standing before his people. It seems to me we are made willing to do whatsoever he commands in the day he reveals his power.

VOICES OF THE PAST

Route 1, Hammond, W. Va.

DEAR EDITORS AND READERS OF THE SIGNS WITH ELDER PETER JONES:

When I saw his request in the Signs I thought I would not write as I had no light on the subject, but afterward this scripture came to me, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, which made a marriage for his son." Mat. 22:2. In Rev. 19:9 we read, "Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb." Let us first notice who these are spoken of in Revelations. They are first of all blessed, and they are called, and that calling is the holy effectual calling which penetrates into the heart for he said unto me, "These are true sayings of God," while in Matthew the call was to "them that were bidden." The law was given to the children of Israel as a nation and they were bidden to keep that law, but that law could not give life to the dead sinner, they were not that blessed seed that shall serve him. They went a different way, did not come to the wedding supper of the king's son, and even the king himself declared that not one of them shall taste my supper for they are not worthy. Notice these were not worthy, no they were not blessed with the garment of salvation and with the spirit to come. Matthew 22:9 reads, "Go ye therefore into the highways, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage." Notice the bid to the marriage, "And when the king came in to see the guests, he saw there a man which had not on a wedding garment." This address is made and is applied to the kingdom of heaven and is like to a certain king who made the supper. "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind: Which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away." Yes in the militant church here on earth there was a certain man: Judas! Who only was chosen to take a part in the work of the ministry, and who by transgression fell and was a castaway, the son of perdition, went to his own place. It left a vacant place which the church could not fill by casting their lots, but the Lord supplied them with one who was blessed to fill the place of Judas. There is a difference between the kingdom of heaven, the militant church here on earth, and the invisible church of God. I mean the kingdom of God, it is within you. You cannot enter into the kingdom of God but you can creep into the church on earth. None of those in Matthew were worthy to taste of the supper, but in Revelations those called unto the marriage supper, (not just bidden or called at to come) came for (these are the true sayings of God) they were blessed to come, yes compelled. They were found in different places not just among the Jewish nation alone, but in all the nations thy seed shall be blessed. This is that holy seed, the blessed seed that shall serve him. Let us examine these scriptures in the true light. "And of Zion it shall be said, This and that man was born in her," that is the invisible church of God. They come into her by birth being born of the Spirit of God and these are the children of God. Then as I have stated, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind," while the kingdom of God is within you. There is where he writes his laws in the heart and imprints his laws in their inward parts. Let us notice this scripture which Elder Jones wanted written on going back to Rev. 19:7. "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready." God works both to will and to do in her of his own good pleasure so she is already clothed in the garments of salvation, in the righteousness of Christ, her husband. In the eighth verse we read, "And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints." This being granted to her it is no wonder she was ready. "The marriage of the Lamb is come" all things are ready. She did not make any excuse, but like the five wise virgins was ready to enter in with the bridegroom while the door was open. None but God can open the door and none but he can shut it. Then comes in the text, "Write, Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb" as I have already stated called with an holy effectual calling which cannot be resisted nor turned away until it completes its purpose. Come, all things are ready, "'Wisdom hath builded her house, she hath hewn out her seven pillars: She hath killed her beasts." Eat and drink O friends at my table here and in eternity, it is my supper, one feast, one supper. He that eateth and drinketh of my flesh and blood hath eternal life and is filled and shall never hunger nor thirst again. Under the law the children of Israel were to serve and keep his commandments, but they refused and went after other gods and other things until the kingdom was taken from them. As it was the law kingdom, which was only our schoolmaster, it waxed old like a garment ready to decay and vanish away for the new covenant to come in. The law no more written on tables of stone which Moses threw down and brake, but this new law which is the spiritual law is written in the heart. The foolish virgins had no oil and could not enter in. Note their excuse, gone to buy when the bridegroom came. The wise who were blessed with vessels and with oil in their vessels with their lamps were ready while the foolish virgins only had their lamps and their lamps were gone out. Yes, the candle of the wicked shall be put out while the lamp of the righteous is as a lamp that burneth, it goeth not out. Blessed are they who are called. The blessing comes first. "Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." Before Jesus' crucifixion when he took the bread and wine as that supper, it was done in remembrance of him to show his death till he come again. Then he said, "I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom." It is there in my Father's kingdom there is a new order, not after the same order as it is here. "I am the vine, ye are the branches." It is not natural bread and wine you eat and drink there. The ordinance shadows and types you have here, but there it will be the substance itself. "Old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." See the marriage supper of the Lamb, his marriage is come, then the supper is ready. The types and shadows were figures and patterns of better things to come in the future. "Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb," not called at them to come, but who are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb. It is the Lamb of God. "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." It seems to me there is a turning point in this matter after the marriage supper of the Lamb came and the last supper spoken of here. In the seventeenth and eighteenth verses, "Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God; That ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, etc." I cannot write on this at this time so let some having light on it write. This angel was standing in the sun, the greater light which was made to rule the day, while the lesser light, the moon, was made to rule the night. This angel standing in the sun was given light to see what was going to take place, that seems to take place here in time for in eternity there is no war against Christ our Lord. I cannot say but some of that war must be now. Look at kings and mighty men falling, and being deprived of their power which was given to them, which was ordained of God for all power in heaven and in earth was ordained of God, and they, like Pilate, could do nothing except it be given to them from above. He did not have the power to release Christ nor to crucify him except it be given to him from above. How could he release Christ when he was born for that hour and for that purpose, born for that end? The issue of life and death is in the hands of the great God Almighty. I hope I have not darkened counsel. In the multitude of counsel there is safety. Let some one else write on this scripture. I want to say to Elder Jones that he is like me in a way. I would like for some one to write on their views on some points of scripture because what a small part we know of God, it is indeed a small portion. We may think we know something when we do not for there is a way that seemeth right unto a man when his way is unto death. Like Paul, he verily thought he was right in making havoc of the church. Elder Jones, if this article is published write and tell me if you get any comfort from my writing. The kingdom of heaven is like a net cast into the sea, but the kingdom of God does not gather of all kinds because it is within you. Write my laws in your heart and it shall be said of this man and that man that they were born in her, and in union it shall be said that no more the uncircumcision shall be found in her nor the hypocrite, but they are in the militant church. They creep in among the bran-ches of the vine, but they are not of the vine and they must be purged out. They cannot stand the fire for our God is a consuming fire. It is the gold that is good that will stand the fire. Like Daniel and the Hebrew children. They stood the fire. There are some places where the kingdom of heaven is referred to as the militant church while in other places I think it is referred to as the kingdom of God so let us not get them mixed.

Elder James W. Linn

MATTHEW 17:1-5.

"And after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into an high mountain apart, And was transfigured before them: and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light. And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with them. Then answered Peter, and said unto Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here: if thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias. While he yet spake, behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them: and behold a voice out of the cloud, which said, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him."

In his account of the transfiguration Mark tells us that the raiment of Jesus, was white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them. Luke says that Moses and Elias appeared in glory and spake of his decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem. There is no doubt about Jesus having a definite purpose in taking these three disciples into this mountain to be transfigured before them, and what they beheld they were instructed to tell to no man until after he was risen again from the dead. In the preceding chapter Jesus had asked his disciples who men thought he was. Some had thought he was John the Baptist, others Elias or one of the prophets. Then he asked them: "But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ; the Son of the living God." The apostle was told that flesh and blood had not revealed this to him, but his Father in heaven. So we see that though Jesus now walked about in the body that God had prepared him, some seeing him as a prophet, some one person, others another, the only ones that knew him as the Son of the living God were the ones who received this knowledge (not by flesh and blood) by revelation. In coming into the world, Jesus came down from heaven not to do his own will but the will of him that sent him. He was with the Father before the world began. He is the Word spoken of as being in the beginning with God. In his coming into the world the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us. "He took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham." "As the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same." Now we are told why he came this way: "That through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil." He was the perfect sacrifice. His body was prepared for him by his Father. We are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all. Up until now the three had beheld him in the body prepared as a sacrifice. They were looking forward to his reigning over them as King over Israel. They knew nothing of his suffering. He now prepares them for things they are later to remember. At the time of the transfiguration Jesus had not yet entered into his suffering. There had been no resurrection from the dead. The grave was unconquered. Three witnesses were selected to behold it, Peter, James and John. In the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established. What a wonderful sight they now behold: His raiment is white as the light, and his countenance shines as the sun. They look upon the King of kings and Lord of lords. They are to remember these things on the Day of Pentecost, when Peter declares that God has highly exalted him, and given him a name that is above every name. The Exalted One now appears, and Moses, and Elias appear with him. Moses represents the law, Elias (or Elijah) the prophets and Jesus as the fulfillment of what the law shadowed forth and the prophets promised. It was decided by the three apostles to build three tabernacles, one for Moses, one for Jesus and one for Elias, but the glory of the prophets, or the law, is never to be compared with the glory of the Only Begotten. While they yet spake a bright cloud overshadowed them, and a voice out of the cloud said: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him." God now places the stamp of approval on the work of his Son, the one glorified before them. He said the same at his baptism. When the cloud had passed away, Moses and Elias were gone, and they saw no man save Jesus only. Whether it be in the glorious gospel, or beholding Christ by an eye of faith, seated in heaven, crowned with honor and glory all others fade into insignificance when his glory appears. Moses and Elias were recognized by Peter, James and John, yet it was not recognition like we see one that we have known before. The apostles had never seen these two while they lived. They knew Moses, and they knew Elias. This was a revealed knowledge, and was not the heavenly recognition some think and talk about. There had been no resurrection of the dead. Christ had not yet died and risen. The natural bodies of the people of God were in the graves, none had risen. Moses had died about fourteen hundred years before this, and God had buried him. Elijah had been carried to heaven in a whirlwind nearly nine hundred years before. Now both appear; this is not a myth, they retain their identity as the prophet and the lawgiver.

IN RIGHTEOUSNESS SHALT THOU BE ESTABLISHED

Remembering former days, when some of my letters found their way into the columns of the Landmark, and your recent invitation to write again, I have a mind to submit for the consideration of your readers some thoughts on the latter portion of the 54th chapter of Isaiah. The 11th to the 18th verses, inclusive, read as follows: "O thou afflicted, tossed, with tempest, and not comforted, behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colors, and lay thy foundations with sapphires. And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones. And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children. In righteousness shalt thou be established: thou shalt be far from oppression; for thou shalt not fear: and from terror; for it shall not come near thee. Behold, they shall surely gather to gether, but not by me: whosoever shall gather together against thee shall fall for thy sake. Behold, I have created the smith that bloweth the coals in the fire, and that bringeth forth an instrument for his work; and I have created the waster to destroy. No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord." To my mind, the prophet in the eleventh verse has reference to the Church under the Law. As such, she is, indeed, "afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted." The demand of the Law strips her of everything and she is made to realize her nakedness before a just and holy God. Her affliction with sin and her utter inability to perform a single act that will commend her unto God makes her feel cut off, and without hope in the world. In that condition she is tossed about with tempests; all of the Lord's billows are encompassing her and comfort is nowhere to be found. When she is made to give up in despair, the Lord speaks to her, saying, "Behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colors, and lay thy foundations with sapphires." When Jacob journeyed alone to Padanaram and night overtook him, he lighted upon a certain spot — there God gave him a vision of the only way by which sinners could ascend into heaven. The ladder which reached from heaven to earth signified the coming of the only begotten and blessed Son of God into this sin-cursed world to open the channel through which mercy should run. Jacob later regarded that place, or experience, as none other than the very gate of heaven, and he took the stones of that place and made for himself a pillow and lay down and slept. God's revelation to and his communion with him was a foundation upon which he could truly rest. The stones in our text can well signify the experiences of the Lord's people — the times when he brings them by a way they knew not and makes known his goodness and mercy to them. "Tis a heaven below, the Redeemer to know," and when he shows his smiling face to a poor sinner, the occasion is never forgotten. Stones endure, perhaps, as nothing else the elements of the ages, and the subject of grace, once he is shown the way of life as it is in Christ Jesus, will cling to that hope as long as life shall last. Such an experience is an Ebenezer to which the child of God will often return in meditation and wish that it was with him as in the days that are past. Such leadings forth are of the Lord, therefore, it is said, "I will lay thy stones in fair colors." How good to realize as we journey along through life that an all-wise and omnipotent God is at the helm. He also says he will "lay thy foundations with sapphires." Sapphires are of different colors: blue, green, yellow, etc., and can truthfully denote the attributes of our Lord as set forth in the Scriptures. Blue is significant of truth; green of life, and yellow of pure gold tried in the fire. Paul told the Ephesian brethren, who by nature were afar off from God, but who being brought nigh by the blood of Christ, and therefore were no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God, that they were "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." The doctrine of faith and hope as set forth by the prophets and apostles; of love and mercy of God as embodied in his Son, Jesus Christ, together with the leading forth of the soul by the Holy Spirit into these things, comprises the very foundation upon which the Christian's hope rests for peace with God in time and for eternity. Continuing, the text says, "And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones." An agate is a stone in which a great variety of colors appear, and the windows in the Church are those characters who discern and see and understand the doctrine of God our Saviour and the order of his house, with the various gifts who minister of the things of God to the flock. Carbuncles are blood-red; therefore, the gates being of carbuncles signify that none shall enter into the celestial city except by the blood of a crucified Saviour. "And all thy borders of pleasant stones." How wonderful when the Church can see and feel that she is a garden enclosed! It is declared that God shall be a wall of fire round about Zion, and when experience that sense of security which exists only in the Lord, and enjoying that peace which surpasses all understanding, how pleasant are our borders. These were precious stones and they set forth precious things. Then, it is declared, "And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children." This is good Old Baptist doctrine and it seems to set at naught all the works and machinery of the so-called religious world in its efforts to bring souls to Christ. It is also evidence of the Old School Baptist Church being the true Church. Men have prophesied for centuries that the Church built upon the faith of the Old School Baptist would soon crumble away and become extinct for lack of nourishment afforded through such mediums as the Sunday School, Theological Seminaries, etc., for educating and bringing in the young, as well as maintaining the ministry. Notwithstanding there are no such nurseries or institutions to aid the Lord in His work in our ranks, the Church has stood for all ages and. will withstand all the assaults in the ages that are to come, for the head of the church has declared that it is built upon the rock of revelation and that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. The Lord spake by the mouth of the prophet Jeremiah. saying, "Behold, the days come saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah: Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord: But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel: After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more." He takes away the first, or Legal Covenant, that he might establish the second, or Covenant of grace, under which covenant he writes his law in the inward parts and in their hearts, and thus he teaches them. What is the result of this teaching of the Lord? "And great shall be the peace of thy children." Words cannot be found to adequately express that peace which comes by and through our Lord Jesus Christ. Again let us ask, what are some of the results that follow this teaching of the Lord: "In righteousness shalt thou be established." This can only refer to his righteousness. That which the creature once thought to be righteousness has now become as filthy rags. The one taught of the Lord, then, is established in the fact that "Salvation is of the Lord," and he cannot be easily shaken. "Thou shalt be far from oppression; for thou shalt not fear: and from terror, for thou shall not come near thee." Can it be possible that this is spoken to the same character that was before said to be "afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted?" Yes, it is the same character, but under entirely different conditions. The character has now been taught of the Lord and enabled to behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. He is now established in the way of righteousness; he is no longer oppressed by the Law, for Christ has made him free from the law of sin and death, neither does he fear or stand in terror of the Law, because the truth has made him free and he is free, indeed. There is none that is able to lay any thing to the charge of God's elect now, for Christ has died, yea, rather is risen again and is now set down at the right hand of the Majesty on high, forever to make intercession for his people. Justice has been satisfied. This does not mean, however, that the children of God shall live in this world of sin and sorrow free from distress. Rather the opposite is true. In the world ye shall have tribulation, said the Master, and our text goes on to say "Behold, they shall surely gather together, but not by me:

whosoever shall gather together against thee shall fall for thy sake." As long as the world shall stand, men and devils will combine in their assaults to overthrow the faith of the elect family of God and to destroy them from off the face of the earth, but vile infernals, they can't pre vail, for the text says they "shall fall." The next verse declares that the Lord has created the smith that bloweth the coals in the fire, and that bringeth forth an instrument for his work, and that he has created the waster to destroy. The work of the smith that bloweth the coals is necessary. The materials that go into the building of God must be tried, though as by fire, to be shapen or fit them for his use. He knows what is necessary for each individual, and he must teach and instruct them in the things which are needful. This he does, nor does he leave it to others to do. He has made the waster to destroy, nor does this apply only to our enemies that are without, but to those that are within, which, after all, are our worst enemies. There is much dross, or flesh, about the most of us which has to be consumed, before we are made to walk softly and humbly before him. Truly, his judgments are unsearchable, and his ways past finding out. In the last verse, we are told, in effect, that nothing shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord, for he says, "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper: and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord." Could the servants of God desire a richer or greater heritage than this? The God of heaven and earth, and all that in them is, is for them and with them, and, if God be for them, who can be against them? How consoling to those who are tried as was Job, to be assured that no weapon that is formed against them shall prosper, and that every tongue that shall rise against them in judgment, they shall condemn. The children of God, truly, have meat to eat that the world knows not of, and without exception, "their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord." May the God of all grace and comfort give each one to experience and understand these things for himself, that he may be rooted and grounded in the truth and established in the doctrine of him who is our Saviour, and not easily shaken and blown about by the winds of doctrine of men, is the prayer of one who hopes he realizes that all his righteousness is of the Lord.

HEBREWS X. 26.

We understand that this admonition, like that in Hebrews vi. 4-6, was addressed to the saints, which were recognized by the inspired writer of the epistle, as "Holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling." As he had told them in chapter sixth, that if they should fall away, it would be impossible to renew them again to repentance, according to the manner of the Levitical priesthood, seeing that such a renewal would require Christ to be again sacrificed, so he tells them again in this text, "There remaineth no more sacrifice for sins." When the priest under the law made atonement for the children of Israel, and the Israelites again sinned, there remained farther sacrifices for their sins; the sacrifice was to be repeated continually; but Christ has made one offering for sin, and but one, and there remains no more. But to the professed disciple of Christ, who has sinned willfully, after that he has received a knowledge of the truth, there remains a certain looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour — what, the saints? No, the saints can never be devoured, for Christ has by one offering perfected them forever, and he has given his word for it, "They shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of my hand." What then shall be devoured by the "judgment and fiery indignation," which the willful offender is fearfully looking for? "The adversaries." The adversaries of the cause of God and truth shall truly be devoured; but says the apostle, "We are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak." And again, in the close of this chapter, he says, "But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition, but of them that believe to the saving of the soul." If a professed disciple of Christ, willfully transgresses the laws of the kingdom, is it strange that he should fear that he is only an adversary? And even if he is not, he feels afraid that he is, and looks for that judgment which awaits the adversaries.

This whole subject is an admonition to the saints. Moses' law could not be transgressed by an Israelite with impunity. The offender died without mercy, for the law of Moses knew no mercy for its transgressors. But as Moses was but a servant, and Christ is a Son over his own house, the offender who hath dishonored Christ, trodden underfoot the Son of God, by despising his law, counted the blood of the covenant wherewith he was sanctified an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the spirit of grace, he hath committed far greater offense, and is worthy of a sorer punishment, and if judged by the law of Moses, would be subjected to a sorer punishment. But he is, if a christian, under law to Christ, and a copy of that law is written in his heart, and it reads thus, notwithstanding the offender's deserts, "I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities I will remember no more." It is certain, however, that he will visit their transgression with a rod, and their iniquities with strips, and they shall know that it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

May we listen to the admonition of our subject, and may God grant us grace whereby we may serve him acceptably with reverence and godly fear; for our God is a consuming fire.

Elder Gilbert Beebe
Middletown, N.Y., Nov. 1, 1855

Roxboro, N. C.

DEAR BROTHER HAWKINS: I feel glad that at last I have found a brother who has traveled the same rugged road I have and thank God for it. I enjoyed our talk to-day. One statement you made stands out. "God pity the poor woman who is married to a man that has to preach." Brother Hawkins that is true beyond all possible doubt for it means much suffering for her, but let me say right there that the church and this calling is all that is able to cause me to leave home and go. The Old Primitive Baptists are the only people on earth that I love greatly enough to cause me turn my back upon my family and be with the church. Elder Roy M: Flinchum of Draper, N. C. told me of father, Elder Billy Flinchum, who was a preacher years ago, that when old brother Flinchum would be sitting in his buggy ready to go to the churches he served, his wife and children would gather around him crying as though grieving for dead.

If you remember, somewhere in the Old Testament it tells of the enemies of Israel who took away the ark of the covenant from Israel in battle, and God began slaying this enemy by the hundreds, the result being they became frightened and agreed to put this ark on a cart, and take cattle with calves, fasten the calves up in stalls, hitch the cattle to the cart on which the ark was and if it was God's will for Israel to have the ark back these cattle would carry it though it meant going away from their calves. This was done, the cattle went toward the camp of the Israelites, looking back and lowing but going forward just the same. See the type here of the poor burdened preacher? Cattle, beast of burden, patient, typifying a servant of God turning away from natural ties of love, going among the camps of Israel, the churches, bearing the ark, the ark of the new covenant of grace, ordered in all things and sure. See the picture represented? I am sure you do.

Brother Hawkins I have thought of that last supper of Jesus and his disciples held in an upper room, or chamber, typifying that to-day when we feast together with Him we must be lifted up in Spirit above the perishable, vain and dying things of this world. Judas being present also, shows forth the camp-followers, unbelievers, among us to-day who profess but do not possess. The enemy (Satan) came by night and sowed tares among the wheat. See? I am often fearful that I am one of the tares. Are you not? But when Jesus told them that one among that number seated there should betray him, each one became fearful and doubtful of himself asking, "Lord, is it I?" Oh! to think we have the same experience today, knowing the Scriptures of truth declare that the church is built and founded on a sure foundation, the foundation of the prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ being the chief cornerstone. And to think our experience harmonizes with theirs! Surely we must be children of the same heavenly Father as they, taught by the same mighty teacher in the same school, the school of divine grace. Taught by Jesus by divine revelation, by his Spirit, to know the meaning of these things by experienced (Often have I said the Scriptures are written in two places — the Book and the hearts of God's people.) Surely I say then, that regardless of the fiery darts of Satan, the doubts and fears hulled through the channel of the natural mind, when we are shut up in the prison of nature's darkness, regardless of casuality, regardless of all casual reasoning, still we must be children of God. Else how could those old writers tell our experience so plainly when they told theirs? Sometimes our faith is active to the axtent that: "We can our fierce accuser face, And tell him Christ has died." Again we feel that no one cares for us, that we do not have a friend on earth, nor one in heaven, alone and forsaken. Wonder how Jesus felt in the garden of Gethsemane? And when he was taken by the multitude to be crucified all his disciples forsook him and fled? Do you not think we have to experience these things in a faint measure, and suffer with him in order to have fellowship for him? I feel we do for it is not only given us to reign with him hereafter, but to suffer with him here by appointment or predestination of God. I am absolutely certain of this, being true for the Scriptures declared that, "I have chosen thee (not on flowery beds of ease, but) in the furnace of affliction." Again Jesus said, "These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation." Words that contain our whole life's experience after being "quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sin." Eph. 2:1.

Through all these various experiences runs us the golden thread of hope. Many times feeling cast down, but not destroyed; as poor, yet rich; as having nothing, yet possessing all things; nothing in or of self, it is all in Christ, as afflicted, tossed with tempest. Through all these things our hope holds me secure, and we feel bound to say with the poet sometimes: "Tis grace has kept me to this day, and will not let me go." Many times when pressed down, we find:

"From every stormy wind that blows,
From every swelling tide of woes;
There is a calm, a sure retreat---
'Tis found beneath the mercy seat."

I have heard it said that Abraham Lincoln once said, "I have often been driven to my knees by the knowledge I had no where else to go." Is not that our experience sometimes? Oh! how we would live, were it possible! Live obedient to the inward teachings which the Spirit doth reveal. Sweet, indeed, would it be then, but where then could this scripture be written in our hearts by experience; "The flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other," and the result, therefore, (for that reason then) "ye cannot do the things that ye would." Many years ago a poet penned these lines, I believe, by divine inspiration. See if your heart says, Amen.

" 'Tis seldom I can ever see Myself as I would wish to be;
What I desire (live holy), I can't attain;
From what I hate (sin) I can't refrain."

Oh! what gracious words are these written in the song, "I am a stranger here below, by hands now long gone back to dust, yet to prove it was written by divine inspiration these words are vitally alive in the poor, storm-tossed lives of the little children of God to-day. Just as true, just as much our experience to-day, as it was to the poor soul who wrote it, whose Spirit no doubt is resting in the Paradise of God to-day. The lines quoted above even describe the life and experience of the apostle Paul for did he not experience it according to his own inspired writings when he said, "What I would, that I do not; but what I hate, that I doFor I know that in me (that is, in my flesh,) dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not," and this warfare raged so fiercely Paul was made to cry out, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death." Then he plainly told the name of his deliverer, the Lord.

Somewhere in the Scriptures we find they "were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." Then we know that the apostle Paul was one of God's heaven-born children, and plainly declaring the church is built and founded on (the doctrine and experience of) the prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ being the chief cornerstone. Do we not have the right to hope we also are his little children, for our experience is harmoniously in accord and agreement with theirs? It seems plain then, that despite all the powers of hell united; despite all of our doubts and fears we must be children of God. How often would we gladly reach back down span of hundreds of years, and take the right hand of fellowship with those old writers who wrote the Scriptures, in tears, in love, in gratitude to God for so plainly penning our experience hundreds of years before we ever even saw the light of day on earth. Sometimes it becomes so plain it almost cries our name aloud, as in these few words in Isaiah 54: "O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted." Dear child of God, does this not describe you. It matters not how fierce the warfare, the doubts and fears. So then we travel on in hope, marching with bowed heads, bleeding hearts, broken spirits and tear dimmed eyes, but marching just the of same through this low valley of sorrows, beneath the blood-stained banner of the Lord Jesus Christ, pressing ever onward and upward towards the mark of the prize of the high calling as it is in Jesus, away from this world of anguish and pain up to that bright celestial city that lieth foursquare, whose builder and maker is God. Amen. Bearing the armor of God, the breastplate of faith, the shield of righteousness of our Lord Jesus imputed to us, traveling not in our own strength but in His, being "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time." So we cannot fail to arrive at our final destination, being we humbly hope and trust heaven eternal. Oh, for ten thousand tongues and voices to praise such a God as this for so glorious a hope, so wondrous a salvation!

"Jesus, my All, to heaven is gone,
He whom I fix my hopes upon!
His track I see, and I'll pursue
The narrow way, till him I view."

Humbly your brother in hope,
Elder Layton Wingfield
November, 1946.

For several years past we have prefaced our New Year's Greeting with somewhat of a resume of world events. It is our mind at this time to leave this field of comment for those far better qualified than ourself to explore. We shall, therefore, enter immediately upon the consideration of those things which we believe are of vital interest to our readers. As a starting point we will quote for a text the sixteenth verse of the sixth chapter of Jeremiah:

"Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein."

As those who are endeavoring to maintain a strict adherence to the principles of doctrine and order of the church as originally built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone, we most certainly could not do better, as we stand upon the threshold of this New Year, than to firmly resolve that whatsoever we shall hereafter teach, preach and accept shall have the unqualified support of a "Thus saith the Lord." The Psalmist said, 'The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein." Therefore we, as his humble and faithful followers, should strive at all times and at all costs to maintain the honor of his cause and thus fulfill his word. The phrase, "Thus saith the Lord" is to be found a very considerable number of times in Holy Writ and volumes could be written upon it, but at this time we only wish to stress and emphasize the fact that the things contained in our text have no less an authority for them than the Lord himself, and it behooves us to give them our most diligent and earnest heed.

Daniel in prophesying of earthly rulers and kings said, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." The Lord's portion is his people and he has and always will care for them and give them whatever instruction may be necessary to guide and direct in the way they should go. They should therefore search the Scriptures and follow their teaching, rather than be led away from the paths of truth by uninspired men and false teachers. They should also beware of the false teaching of God's servants who, while they may preach the gospel does not guarantee that all that they preach is the gospel. How true and applicable to this modernistic world is the language of our text! We are most certainly standing in the ways, plural, of men, and there are innumerable lo-heres and lo-theres, but we should go not after them. We should try them and test them out, "and see" what they are and where they will lead to if we follow them. God has given us the plumb line in his precious word by which they can be measured and weighed, and all that we read and hear should be subjected to this standard, regardless of the source from whence it may come, in order to determine its genuineness. Isaiah said, "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Paul said, "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: That the man of God may be perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works." How we need to ponder the full meaning and significance of this as it applies to doctrine, to the ordinances of God's house, to the order and practice of reproving, correcting and instructing in righteousness, to the end that all things which pertains to the church of God may be done decently and in order and to the glory of his precious name.

Some of the fundamental points of doctrine, for which the Signs has contended, might be enumerated in the following order: (1) The sovereignty, immutability, omnipotence and eternal perfection of the Three-in-One God; (2) His purpose and predestination in all things; (3) His eternal and unconditional election; (4): The total depravity and just condemnation of fallen man; (5) That the atonement and redemption of Jesus Christ are for the elect only; (6) The sovereign and irresistible work of the Holy Spirit in regenerating and quickening the elect of God; (7) The final preservation and eternal happiness of all the sons of God, by grace; (8) The resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment; (9) That the church of Christ is composed exclusively of baptized believers - that to her are given able ministers of the New Testament, and that the Scriptures are the only divinely authorized Rule of Faith and Practice for the saint of God; (10) That there is no connection between the Church and the State. If any of these are brought into question. we should accept and abide by whatever the word of God says about them.

With regard to the ordinances of the church, such as baptism, the Lord's Supper, the setting apart of Elders and Deacons to the work which the Spirit has assigned them, the greeting of one another with an holy kiss, the washing of the saints feet, etc. should we not seek to know and follow the mind, of the Spirit in all of these ordinances? Personally, we do not wish to sit in judgment or decide these matters for others, except that we want to see the Old School Baptist church kept as free from creature works and the ways of men, as possible. We do not feel that we should undertake to settle any differences by the use of carnal weapons and warfare, but wherever there is error or falsehood, like David, we should come in the name and strength of the Lord, leaning upon the staff of faith and employing only a "Thus saith the Lord," or the word of God, which was signified by the five smooth pebbles David took from the brook. Only by faith in God and through the proper use of his holy word can we even hope to triumph over those who oppose his glorious truth. And wherever reproof, rebuke, correction or instruction in righteousness is necessary, let us remember that the Scriptures thoroughly furnish the man of God unto every good work. Therefore, as we stand in the ways, and see, may God give us to ask him to show us the old paths, and where is the good way, that we may walk therein. In our searching of the Scriptures, if we are to understand them aright, God must shed forth his light upon them and reveal unto us their hidden meaning, otherwise we will not be able to find the old paths or the good way to walk in them. Israel of old often went a crooked way, for was a stiff-necked and rebellious people, but God in his own inimitable way and time made crooked things straight, often by the use of great trials and afflictions and suffering on the part of his people. We can profit a great deal by searching out God's dealings with Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and the household of faith down through the ages. Both the Old and the New Testament scriptures testify of Jesus, and if we want to know "where is the good way," we should inquire of those who by God's own testimony were inspired to write, and we may be sure that invariably their arrows will point to the one and only"good way." It should be noted that the singular tense is used here. This very definitely means that there is but one true way of salvation from sin, and that is by and through the atoning blood of the blessed Lamb of God, for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved, but the name of Jesus. Where this way is found and walked in, and our text admonishes us to "walk therein," there is life and joy and peace in the Holy Ghost. There can be no or peace for the soul, except in a walk, or life in Christ Jesus, who is the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. God who in the counsel of eternity chose his people and gave them life in, this way, has determined that they shall be exercised in it. In his dealings with them, in due time, they are made to labor and find themselves heavy laden with the burdens of sin, and when their load becomes so heavy and unbearable as to sink them into utter despair, they are made to hear this voice saying unto them, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls."

How wonderful it would be if, as some seem to think, we could keep ourselves in the fear and love of God. In all sincerity we would ask, is there a single one among our readers who would not wish to live closer and closer to God day by day, but why is it they often find themselves mourning and groaning because of sin? Is it not because they cannot do the things they would, and the things they would not, they do? They are thus made to know of a truth that no good thing dwells in their flesh. Like the great apostle, they can truly say they delight in the law of God after the inward man, but by bitter experience they discover another law in their members, which wars against their mind and bring them into captivity to the law which is in their members. Such an experience causes them to cry out, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" There is only one way of escape and that is by and through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Our text also says that Israel replied to God, saying, "We will not walk therein." In our meditations upon God's dealings with Israel in Egypt, where he watched over and kept them as the apple of his eye and finally delivered them in so miraculous a manner at the Red Sea, we have sometimes wondered how they could have been so unmindful of his goodness and mercy to them all the days of their life as to require Aaron to make them a golden calf to worship before Moses could even come down from the mount of God; We are ready to accuse them of being ungrateful to the extreme. But, how about ourselves? Are we any better than they? Are we not all like sheep, prone to go astray and search for false gods? Here again, we find that through patience and comfort of the Scriptures, we have hope, for while the record shows that although God often uses the rod to correct his people for their stiffneckedness and rebellion, at the same time he has been merciful and longsuffering, not willing that any should perish. When left to ourselves we are as prone to err us the sparks are to fly upward, and if we are not kept, day by day, by the power of God, through faith, unto salvation, we most certainly will fall by the wayside. We are made to feel continually that it is by the grace of God, that we are what we are so far as our service to him is concerned, and we are made to desire to render unto him undivided praise, not only in this world, but in that which is to come.

According to nature we realize full well that we have not the will or desire even to follow in the precepts of our Lord, or to keep his commandments, but we are made to hope that by reason of a new birth we do hunger and thirst after righteousness, and that in due time we shall be filled and have all of our soul's yearnings satisfied in Christ Jesus. That will not be, however, until we shall see him as he is and be like him. Then we shall praise him, world without end.

In the meantime, if it be his will, may God grant grace sufficient throughout both the New Year and all the years that are to come that will enable us to bear the kind of fruit that will prove that the tree has been made good, and may he constantly watch over and keep us from all harm and danger, and finally bring us forth more than conquerors over death, through him that loved us and gave himself for us, to the honor and glory of his own name and the praise of his matchless grace. Amen.

ORDINATION

As per precepts and examples as set forth in the written word of God, Valley View Primitive Baptist Church looked out among themselves and recognized a certain gift. They therefore called for a presbytery to be formed October 30, 2016 at 2:00 PM at Valley View Primitive Baptist Church, Riner, Va, for the purpose of examination of this gift, brother Anthony Quesenberry, and if found qualified to be ordained to the full work and service as deacon.

All Elders of our faith and order present were invited to sit in the presbytery and all deacons were asked to sit together. The meeting was opened by prayer by Elder Junior Conner. Elder Raymond Goad was elected as moderator and Brother Tony Horton to serve as clerk.

Brother Donald Agee, acting as spokesman for the church, delivered brother Anthony Quesenberry to the presbytery.

The qualifications for deacon was read as set forth in scriptures 1st Timothy Chap. 3, Verse 8-13 by Elder Alan Terry. Examinations followed by Elders Alan Terry, Junior Conner, and Larry Hollandsworth. The presbytery being satisfied as to the qualifications of this candidate proceeded with the laying on of hands and prayer was offered by Elder Larry Hollandsworth. The charge was delivered to brother Antony Quesenberry by Elder Junior Conner. He was then delivered back to the church as an ordained deacon.

The minutes of the work of the presbytery were read and adopted, a copy to be placed in the church records, a copy to be sent to the Signs of the Times for publication and a copy to be given to Brother Anthony Quesenberry along with a certificate of ordination.

Presbytery was dismissed by Elder Alan Terry.

OBITUARIES

Elwood Samuel Tinker, Sr.
March 6, 1926- May 10, 2016
Vonnie Smith Tinker
August 6, 1930 - May 21, 2016

Jesus said to his disciples, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you." "I speak not of you all: I know whom I have chosen..."

Brother Elwood and Sister Vonnie adhered strictly to the doctrine of the Old Primitive Baptist Churches. They were former members of North Creek Primitive Baptist Church, Belhaven, NC before asking and receiving a home at Hancocks Primitive Baptist Church, Ayden, NC on August 16, 2008. They were faithful in their attendance as long as their health permitted. Their children graciously carried them when they were unable to drive.

Brother and Deacon Elwood and Sister Vonnie departed this life of sin and sorrow 11 days apart shortly before celebrating 69 years together having been joined in marriage June 8, 1947.

Elwood departed his earthly home May 10, 2016 at Vidant Medical Center, Greenville, NC, and Vonnie departed her earthly home May 21, 2016 at Vidant Beaufort, Washington, NC. Burials were in the Smithton Cemetery, Belhaven, NC officiated for both by their grandson, Scott Askew and Elder Jimmy Gray. They both had a strong hope of eternal rest and would advise those who mourn "to sorrow not, even as others which have no hope."

They are survived by their children Sammy Tinker and wife Sue of Pantego, NC, Donna Askew of Plymouth, NC and Margie Tucker and husband Virgil of Belhaven, NC, four grandsons, two step grandchildren, six great grandchildren, three step great grandchildren and many nieces and nephews. They were preceded in death by a son in law, Hassell Askew and a grandson, Terry Tinker.

Elwood was born in St. Louis, MO, March 1926 to the late Fred and Bertha Tinker. He is survived by a brother Euel Tinker and wife Wanda of St. Louis, MO. He was preceded in death by a brother, Leonard Tinker of Belhaven, NC.

Vonnie was born in Belhaven, NC, August 6, 1930 to the late Clemon W. Smith, Sr. and Margorie M. Smith. She is survived by a sister, Sallie Winstead and husband Kenneth of Kennewick, WA; and sister in law Janie Smith of Belhaven, NC. She was preceded in death by a sister, Thelma Tinker and brothers C.W. Smith, Jr. and Jimmy Smith.

Their children and spouses and their grandchildren were the light of their life. They loved visiting and just spending time with them. They were blessed with all the care and attention given by their children and were very proud of each one.

Their family miss them, their Church miss them and all of us who knew them miss them but they had that glorious hope that Jesus shall come and take his children to their eternal home.

Written by their cousin who missed them very much.

HYMN

Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer, to thee,
E'en though it be a cross,
That raiseth me;
Still all my song shall be,
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee,

Though like a wanderer,
The sun gone down,
Darkness be over me,
My rest a stone;
Yet in my dreams I'd be
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee.

There let the way appear
Steps unto heaven;
All that thou sendest me
In mercy given;
Angels to beckon me
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee.

Then, with my waking thoughts,
Bright with thy praise,
Out of my stony griefs, Bethels I'll raise;
So by my woes to be

Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee.

Or if on joyful wing,
Cleaving the sky,
Sun, moon, and stars forgot,
Upward I fly;
Still all my song shall be,
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee.

"And unto the angel of the church in Sardis write; These things saith he that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars; I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead. Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God. Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent. If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee. Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy. He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches. Revelation 3:1-6

Elder Jerry B. Farmer

The children of God through the ages, after having been delivered from the power of darkness into His marvelous light, have been given a desire to know where they stood in the great scheme of things. They have desired evidence that they were truly in the faith of the living God, and were not deceived in the things they could not help believing. They have been made to examine the scriptures, to try the spirits whether they are of God, and even to examine themselves whether they were in the true faith. They have had questions about the consummation of all things and about the coming of the Lord in great power and glory. And they were given confidence that only the Lord has the answers. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."

They could not trust in men's opinions, or even in their own thoughts and reasons. They must have all things they are blessed to believe confirmed in and by the power of God, which opens the eyes, ears, and hearts and establishes the truth. This eternal truth cannot be resisted or twisted to mean something else. The work of God is perfect, and is forever. The truth established by the Lord in the hearts of His people is unchangeable. No one, not even the devil, can add one thing or take away anything that the Lord has given His little ones to believe. "The Lord spake and it was done. He commanded and it stood fast."

The Lord Jesus Christ came into the world, was made of a woman, and was born of a virgin according to the prophesy which went before Him. He lived the perfect life, offered Himself up without spot unto God as the perfect Lamb of God, which atoned for the sins of all of God's elect. "For by one offering He hath perfected forever them that are sanctioned." He called His twelve apostles and sent them into all the world to preach the Gospel, and to establish the churches of the living God, which they did. He blessed the apostles to write the scriptures, which were preserved and given to instruct and guide all true believers in the way of truth for as long as the world shall stand.

The Lord has called messengers, since the days of the apostles, to stand before the churches and proclaim the truth in the Spirit and power of God. The apostle John was caught up in the Spirit, on the Lord's day, and was given wonderful revelations concerning heaven and earth, the things which must shortly come to pass, and the final consummation of all things. The Lord commanded John to write to the angels (messengers or ministers) of the seven churches of Asia, which he did. The word angels means messengers.

The seven churches of Asia, I am made to believe, were existing true churches in John's day, and stand as examples of the true churches of God in every age since the churches were first established. If any of the Lord's people in any generation were given understanding, they would have been blessed to recognize the church or churches with which they have to do. The blessed words of the Lord, concerning the situation and condition of each church, were faithfully recorded by the apostle. Each church in every age and condition, since these words were recorded, would be admonished and edified by these words of the Lord.

The church in Sardis appears to typify many, if not all, of the true churches which we have knowledge of in this day. Since this seems so appropriate to the true churches today, I would love to examine what the Lord told John to write to the angel (messenger) of the church in Sardis, if the Lord wills.

God has chosen the weak things of the world to confound the mighty. He has mainly called the weakest, most ignorant creatures in nature to stand before the churches as His holy messengers, proclaiming things that are too high and wide and deep to be understood by themselves or others except by the revelation from on high. All the called ministers are made to understand that they can do nothing of themselves, and that all their strength in all things comes directly from the Lord. He said, "My strength is made perfect in weakness." Boasting is excluded, and all praise, honor and glory is rendered to Him who alone is worthy.

The Lord commanded John to write unto the angel (messenger) of the church in Sardis, "I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead." How is it possible to have a name that one is alive, but yet is dead? This statement seems to be contradictory, and is nonsense to the carnal mind. The blessed apostle Paul said in one place, "You are dead, but your life is hid with Christ in God." Rightly divided, there is no contradiction. The children of God are dead, having been killed to all self-righteousness, and having been killed to the world and all its enticements. But they are alive to the kingdom of God and His righteousness and good works. They are dead according to nature, but are alive in the faith and hope that the Lord has given them, and they are taught that this world is not their home, but that they are strangers and pilgrims here in a wilderness.

The Lord commanded, "Be watchful." This means to stay awake. Remember when the Lord was in the garden and He told the disciples to watch with Him while He went forth to pray, and when He returned they were all asleep. They were no doubt stressed and exhausted in their nature, and could not stay awake. This is how we find ourselves many times. We have no strength to endure, except the Lord comes and awakens us. This is left on record for us to consider.

The Lord commanded, "strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die." We see all around us churches with only a few members, and churches which have closed their doors, and many which must surely close in the near future. This is no time to despair or to give up, but the time to strengthen and encourage those who remain to continue in love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness and temperance, which is the fruit of the Spirit. This means that you are to be faithful unto death that you might receive the crown of life, by the grace of God.

The Lord continued by saying, "For I have not found thy works perfect before God." I have heard it said that the works indicated here were imperfect, as though they were faulty somehow. Nevertheless, the word perfect here means to have been fulfilled or completed. In the original it reads, "For I have not found thy works having been fulfilled before God." What this says is, "you are not done yet, some things remain to be done before you die." All of God's children have good works in which to walk all their days, until their last breath, that were before ordained of God.

The Lord further commands, "Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent." How did you receive and hear the word of God? It was the same way the apostle Paul received it. He said, "For I neither received of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." It is God who has given us faith to receive His word, and has given us ears to hear it. How do we hold fast? The apostle said, "I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which I am apprehended of Christ Jesus." It is like a little child that holds the father's finger with its little hand, while the father's large hand surrounds the whole of the child's hand. Even if the child trips and loses its grasp, it is still upheld by its father's strong hand. We hold fast because the Lord holds us. "The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms."

The Lord commands, "repent." Repent means to mind change. All along our journey, we sometimes think we are altogether in nature, and actually know nothing of the kingdom of God. And worse, sometimes we think we might be deceived, and even worse than that, that we may be deceivers. The devil puts these thoughts in our minds, but thanks be unto God, He pulls down the devil's stronghold, and casts down those imaginations, and brings every thought unto the obedience of Christ. We must be given grace for repentance. It is grace for grace. We are helpless in ourselves to do anything good, even to change our minds.

The Lord continues saying, "If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come upon thee as a thief, thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee." This has been given a negative meaning by some, to mean, "If you do not do your duty, the Lord will come upon you to punish you in some way." But the truth is that the Lord loves His church and His called ministers. He always does that which is good for those He loves, as a loving father does for his children. I have been made to believe the true meaning of His words is this: If you should fall asleep, through great weariness, the loving Lord shall come unto you silently, in order to awaken you for needful purposes, as He did to His disciples in the garden. There are no negatives with God regarding His children. "For all the promises of God in Him are yea, and in Him Amen."

The Lord again comforts His little ones by affirming their blessed estate with Him by saying, "Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments." The elect of God are a very small remnant They are spoken of as a little city, little flock and the fewest of all people. Even though the members of the churches in this day are just a few, and seem to be getting fewer, this is the way the Lord has purposed it to be. He saw this day and spoke of it saying, "For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." They have not defiled their white robes of righteousness which were given to them, because they have been kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last day.

Jesus said, "and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy." We are taught that there in none good, no not one. And the Patriarch Jacob said by faith and by the Spirit, "I am not worthy of the least of the mercies, and of all the truth, which thou hast shewed unto thy servant." We are taught that the only worthiness we have is in Christ. All of God's children have been made worthy by the shed blood of the Lord Jesus, which has washed away their sins and made them righteous and holy in Him. Jesus taught His disciples, that after they had done all that was commanded them, to say, we are unprofitable servants.

Jesus said, "He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels." All those chosen of God shall overcome this world, the devil, sin and in even death through Christ their mighty Savior. He has seen to it. He has already seen them in glory. All the vessels of honor which He made of clay shall be changed to fit in glory. And it is to His praise, honor and glory that He is powerful to save, and that no one or nothing is able to separate His church from Him. Jesus said, "Upon this rock (meaning Himself) I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." The children of God overcome by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony, and they love not their lives unto the death.

Finally, the Lord said, "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith to the churches." It is the Lord that has made the hearing ear, and it is He that has given it to His saints. By this gift of God, the saints must hear what the Lord has spoken unto them.

"Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Do not grieve upon seeing the church's little gatherings which seem to be getting smaller as we go. One of the old elders once said that when a man builds a house, he gathers the materials of construction and places them in a pile near the construction site. As the materials are placed in the building, the pile becomes smaller and smaller. When the last member is placed in the building the building is completed, and the pile is gone. When the last members of the Lord's family are taken home and placed in the heavenly house, there will be no need for this world that we now sojourn in. Rejoice to know that the Lord's building is near completion.

According to the scriptures, when the Lord comes again in the flaming fire of His glory, the dead in Christ shall be raised first, and those that are alive and remain at His coming shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and they shall all be caught up together to meet the Lord in the air, where they shall ever be with the Lord. The flaming fire of the glory of God shall destroy, with an everlasting destruction, all those who obey not the gospel of Christ. The earth and all in it shall be burnt up, and the elements shall melt with a fervent heat.

All those who look for a "savior" to come and set up a kingdom on this earth shall be disappointed. Even though most of the religions of this world, from the Jews, to the Muslims, to the Asian religions, to many who have taken the name of Christ, look for a worldwide kingdom to be set up here in this world, it cannot be. Jesus said that His kingdom does not come by observation. He said that His kingdom is not of this world. He said that there would be many false christs, and warned His little ones not to look for any in this world who claim to be Him. He said that when He comes, he shall come in the clouds and that every eye should behold Him. Be not deceived.

It appears that it may not be long before the Lord appears - how long we know not. But the apostle Paul said there must first be a falling away, and that the man of sin must be revealed before the Lord comes. It appears that the falling away is upon us, and it remains for the man of sin to be revealed. Jesus called this man the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet. The Apostle Paul called him the son of perdition; who opposeth and exaltheth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God. When we see these things come to pass, look up, for redemption draweth nigh.

I trust that this was written in love and in faithfulness and in hope of eternal life.

Dear Elder Cleo Robertson,

I read Elder Lowell Hopkins article about the Soldiers of the Cross. He asked if anyone had witnessed like experiences, if so to send it to the Signs of the Times. I am writing you about an experience I had while I was serving in the army in Koreas in 1967. If the article meets your approval you may print it in the Signs of the Times.

I was sent into the DMZ (demilitarized zone) conflict in November 1966, separating North and South Korea. I drove a M114A1 armored vehicle on the DMZ. I was involved in over 40 missions that took me into the DMZ. The M114A1armored vehicle had a three man crew. Driver, TC Sergeant and back gunner. In March 1967 I was driving on a mission when the right track broke which left the left track pulling that would have pulled us into the mine field. I thought to myself "we are going to be blown up". Then a voice said to me "Know that I am God and control all things". At that time the vehicle lunged down on the right sprocket where the track had broken throwing the vehicle into a bank on the opposite side from the mine field. The Sergeant said to me a greater power saved us today.

I believe God looks after us at all times.

Sincerely,
Elder David Minter

VOICES OF THE PAST

EXPERIENCES
By Elder Frederick W. Keene, 1936

There are experiences known by the called of Jesus Christ which they but little understand. Christ is FELT to be their Saviour and Friend, their only consolation, but at times so variable are their frames and feelings in these matters. There are little seasons when in simplicity, in nearness they are with Jesus; at other times in their soul's apprehensions they are at such a distance; and, falling into unbelief, into bondage of spirit, they feel to be sundered from Him, and, in this suspension of intimacy with the dear Saviour, feel almost as though there had never been real nearness and dearness of union to Him. And in our changed estate, in our unbelief, our ignorance, thoughts arise that Jesus Christ, the Saviour, the immutable Lover of His Church Himself has changed; that His love has waxed cold, that He is indifferent, that the Lord has wearied of us, no more cares for us. Oh how sinful, how shameful are all such imagination! We become wretched, we are in confusion of spirit, we are cast down. Surely the children of God need to be taught of the Comforter, the Holy Ghost all their days. We have need of the Interpreter, the One among ten thousand, the Messenger of the covenant, (Job 33:23; Mal. 3:1), to show to us the signification, the causes, and what is to be the outcome, the fruit of all the vicissitudes that we undergo in the house of our pilgrimage.

Oh, how gracious in our faith our God is! He is ever mindful of His covenant, and though we are so changeable, helpless, worthless, in ourselves considered, yet thus He speaks, "O Israel, thou shalt not be forgotten of Me" (Isa. 44:21).

While we are in the house of our pilgrimage we are instructed and drawn to follow on to know the Lord, and unto us in all new covenant graciousness His goings forth in our behalf are prepared as the morning. He comes unto us as the rain, as the latter and former rain upon the earth (Hos. 6:3). And who are we whom He in such riches of mercy deals with? We are sinful mortals upon the earth; we travel through the wilderness; there we find scorpions, and fiery flying serpents. Our sins, our iniquities, inward vilenesses, we are made to know our own the plague of our heart (I Kings 8:38). Ah, this is the sore and grief of Israel (II Chron. 6:29). And blessed are we when we are inclined to spread forth our hands and to look unto the God of our mercy with all entreaty for that mercy and grace that come alone from the throne of God and the Lamb. There are many self-sufficient professors of Christ's name and they are ever self-satisfied. They can well supply themselves with all they need who are never poor and needy, emptied and empty, feeble and sore broken. They know no weakness, they never fall down in the dry parched land, and find none to help. But the true child of God, the wayfaring man, Zion's pilgrims, find the way at times is in rough places. Our souls are much discouraged because of the way (Numbers 21:4).

We faint in the day of our adversities and find to our dismay that we have to confess our strength is small (Prov. 24:10). How shall such weak, such sinful, sin plagued, yes, and shamefully plagued with an evil heart of unbelief, how shall such unworthy creatures pursue their way to heaven, triumph over the hindrances, vanquish our foes, the world, the flesh and the devil? "In all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us." Oh let me sing with the Apostle, "For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Rom. 8:28-29).

O ye beloved ones in our precious Christ, do we not learn in every manner of the way that we are feeble and that it is not with us to make the wilderness to rejoice therein with joy and singing? But our Redeemer is strong, and in all graciousness he comes into the wilderness, shows Himself our Saviour and Friend, gives us again to taste the riches of His grace, tells to hearts the divine consoling mystery of His cross, and again as in the days of our youth we sing in the wilderness the grace and triumphs of our Emmanuel over our sins.

Not withstanding all the vicissitudes of my soul this abides a divine mystery. Christ in my heart, the hope of glory! We are called unto eternal glory by Christ

Jesus as vessels of mercy afore prepared unto glory. God hath predestinated His chosen to be conformed to the image of His Son, and when He shall appear and descend from heaven we shall ultimately be like Him for we shall see Him exactly as He is. Oh, how blessed to have this hope in us, and thus in our hope to be found in earnest expectation of glorious liberty of the children of God. "Looking for that blessed hope, and glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ who gave Himself for us that He might redeem us from all iniquity and purify unto Himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Faithful is He who hath called us unto this predestinated glory, who also will accomplish it. Now we are in hope of righteousness, in hope of the resurrection of the dead, in earnest expectation of the glorious liberty of the sons of God - waiting for our adoption - to wit: the redemption of the body. How consoling! How sweet! How blessed! Is the hope of the resurrection of the just to immortality and incorruption. This mortal shall put on immortality and this corruption shall put on incorruption. "We look for our Lord Jesus Christ from heaven who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body, according to the working whereby He is able to subdue all things unto Himself (Phil 3:21). Then we shall be satisfied for we shall be conformed to the image of our dear Redeemer, and dwell forever with Him in immortal bliss. Oh! what an unspeakable mercy for a poor vile transgressor to be blessed with such a glorious hope!

-Sovereign Grace & Pilgrim, 1936.

Strikersville, Pennsylvania, August 22, 1827.

Having been the subject of numerous disappointments during my life, I have thought of giving a short account of some of them. In common with all mankind, I was born in sin, in the service of which I lived till upwards of twenty years.

At that time I belonged to a debating society in Baltimore, and being full of the talking spirit, I proposed forming one in the neighborhood I was then in, the proposal met with the consent of all present, and we immediately commenced operations. The question proposed for discussion, was to test the relative merits of the miser and the libertine.

I took the side favorable to the miser, contending that the conduct of the other was productive of positive evils to society, among other evils resulting from dissipation. I was led to expatiate on the wounds inflicted by the dissipation of a son on the heart of upright parents, and particularly on that of a kind and tender mother. Little did I think that while treating on the subject of dissipation, my own conduct was so soon to be brought home to me, that my career in that course was that night to terminate. My only surviving parent was a mother, answering the above description, and whose heart had been deeply wounded by my own conduct; and while. on this part of my subject, I saw her with the eyes of my imagination, as plain as I ever saw her with literal eyes.

She appeared seated on a chair before me, with eyes fixed intensely on me, exhibiting the strongest expression of affection; the big tear rolling down her furrowed cheek, while her whole countenance exhibited the strongest symptoms of deep despair.

And here I am perfectly at a loss to describe the effects that followed: I can only say, that it seemed that all the sins I had ever committed, came rushing into my mind like an overwhelming torrent, and in a moment I felt myself one of the most miserable wretches out of hell.

Such was the effect of this sudden change of things in my mind as to produce a partial derangement, and though the night was dark, and raining, I immediately left the house, and that without my hat. But instead of taking the road I intended, I took the opposite, and after pursuing it for some miles, I left it and took to the woods; but in the morning found myself in a house by the side of a fire, to which I had been led more by instinct than reason. By this time, however, reason had resumed her throne, but it was to act as a witness against me. For a few days my mind was more particularly directed to my outward sins, but it was not long before a sense of heart sin reduced my outward sin to mere insignificance. I felt indeed that my heart was a cage of unclean birds, a den of every hateful thing.

But though I soon found that I had no positive claim on Divine favor, having never performed a good act in all my life, yet I attempted to set up a negative claim --- that was, that I had not been quite as bad as some others; and as an example I caught at Saul of Tarsus, but that prop soon gave way.

I soon found a balance in his favor, for though I had not persecuted the saints, yet I had far exceeded him in wickedness. In persecuting the saints, he acted from principle, and verily thought he was doing God service: while pursuing my course of sin, my conscience instead of approving of my conduct, often reproved me severely; and what I thought then I think still, that on the ground of excuses, Paul had the advantage of me, and I am sure that I shall have at least an equal right with him or any other to sing the song of free and sovereign grace to all eternity, and this is a right I cannot surrender to any one. As to the claim of superior zeal and usefulness in the cause of God and Truth I am willing to surrender that to my brethren, I believe them entitled to it; but to surrender to any one of the redeemed of the Lamb a greater right than myself to adore the riches of sovereign grace, I cannot. But I must proceed and just state that the whole process of conviction was so different to the notion I had formed on the subject, that I soon gave up all hope of its being a work of grace on my poor soul, and concluded that it was only the prelude to the eternal vengeance in reserve for me.

Herein consisted the first disappointment in my life worth noticing; and this arose from my ignorance in attempting to fore-stall the work of the Spirit. I have stated above, that instead of being under a work of grace, I concluded that I was only realizing a prelude to my just and eternal damnation. Despair had taken hold of me - as David, "the fear of hell got hold on me," - I had given up the idea of prayer entirely, not that I had become willing to be banished from God, nor was it from a sullenness of spirit or obduracy of heart, of these things I had cured before this, but I thought it presumption in me to wish Him to depart from a fixed determination to make me a monument of His just vengeance to all eternity. Having come to this conclusion, I continued for some time under a state of most awful suspense; during which time I ventured to make but one request, which was, that when arraigned before His bar, He would make my sentence as light as could be consistently with His justice. I am now approaching a point in my experience that I shall never forget in this world, nor that to come if reason and memory prevail beyond the tomb. I refer to the night in which I was given a hope in Christ; on retiring this night, my distress (If possible) was greater than at any former period, I concluded that my state of suspense would soon terminate, and that in a short time I should realize to the fullest extent, the apprehension I then so severely labored under.

Indeed I felt as if that night would finish the respite given me, and that before morning I should be in hell. By well convinced that the sentence I apprehended would be just, that I could but say, "Amen." But while in this desperate state of mind, to my astonishment I received a proclamation of pardon to my guilty soul. Jesus appeared to the eyes of faith as my Mediator. I was enabled to run into His name as into a strong tower and find safety; I was carried from Mount Sinai, where I stood trembling amidst its thundering and lightnings to Mount Zion to gaze with unspeakable delight on a bleeding Saviour, and to realize my personal interest in His atoning sacrifice --- I say personal interest, for nothing short of this could meet my case; I must have a personal interest in the blood of Jesus or I am undone. I cannot pretend to mention any particular promise that came to me, for it seemed that all I had ever read come rolling into my mind: as fast as I reviewed them, my soul was filled to overflowing, I felt what it was to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. And here I can but exclaim with Paul; "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are His judgments, and His ways past finding out."

1882 - CITY OF HABITATION

Elder Wm. M. Smoot, Occoquan, Va., May 15, 1882

"They wandered in the wilderness in a solitary way; they found no city to dwell in. Hungry and thirsty, their soul fainted in them. Then they cried unto the Lord in their trouble, and He delivered them out of their distresses. And He led them forth by the right way, that they might go to a city of habitation."- Psalm cvii. 4-7.

Differing radically from all systems of worship based upon the reasonings of the carnal heart, the worship of the true and living God is an ascription of thanksgiving and adoration to the Most High for His goodness and mercy to His own redeemed generation. The psalmist, in the opening verse of this 107th Psalm, strikes the key-note of this wonderful and heavenly song: "O give thanks," says he, "unto the Lord, for He is good: for His mercy endureth forever." He does not desire that thanks should be given to men, for they should never be objects of reverence. "Cease ye from man," the Lord by the prophet distinctly commands, "whose breath is in his nostrils." "And the loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of men shall be made low: and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day."- Isaiah ii. 17. But wrapped in holy joy in view of the great goodness and mercy of God, he exclaims, "O give thanks unto the Lord." The tender mercy and unbounded goodness of the Lord calls for the most sacred exclamations of thanksgiving from his heart. "Let the redeemed of the Lord," says the psalmist, "say so." Let them thank the Lord for His goodness, for none others can reach those heavenly notes, and sing this heavenly song. All others are found sacrificing "unto their net," and burning incense "unto their drag," worshiping at the shrine of creature effort and ability, and, in their blind zeal, honoring and exalting the creature more than the Creator. But the redeemed have been divinely qualified to bow in humble reverence before the awful throne of God, and render ceaseless praise to him who holds their destiny in His hand, and who has already redeemed them unto Himself from "all nations, and kindreds, and peoples, and tongues."

This divine qualification to praise and revere the Most High, is learned in the bitter lessons of trial and affliction through which the saints are called to pass. In the text, the psalmist presents them to our view as lonely wanderers "in the wilderness in a solitary way." Hungry, thirsty and faint, they cry unto the Lord "in their trouble." I am assured that many readers of "our family paper" know by a precious experience something of this wilderness and solitary way. The individual may be surrounded by kind and cheerful friends, yet feel isolated from all friends, a lonely pilgrim upon the barren shores of time. It is distressing indeed to wander in the wilderness, but how much worse to be there alone. No kind friends to minister to our comfort, no glad voices to cheer our lonesome way. The individual feels to be worse than all others, a helpless and undone sinner. He anxiously searches for the footprints of the flock, and his heart exclaims, in the language of the "Song of songs," "Tell me, O Thou whom my soul loveth, where Thou feedest, where Thou makest Thy flock to rest at noon." His own evil thoughts and ways, like the beasts of the forest, creep forth to annoy and frighten him with their hideous cries, to disturb his peace and mar his joy. I think that there is also particular reference to our experience in the expression, "they wandered." The lonely pilgrim cannot feel at rest. As Mary at the sepulcher, he is searching for his Lord; "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him." His wandering thoughts find no city to dwell in.

"Hungry and thirsty, their soul fainted in them." There is represented here an hungering and thirsting for something which the world cannot possibly supply. The desires of the quickened sinner turn heavenward from the most brilliant honors and the brightest enjoyments that gladden the shores of time. He desires something beyond it all.

> "To heaven his restless heart aspires."
> "As the hart panteth after the water-brooks,
> So panteth my soul after thee, O God."

It is for some evidence of the goodness and mercy of God that he is hungering, some manifestations of that love "which passeth knowledge," and to be "filled with all the fullness of God." For this he longs with a sincere and earnest hungering and thirsting. In the text, his tongue seems to have failed for thirst, and his soul faints in him. This certainly represents an individual without strength.

"Then they cried unto the Lord in their trouble, and He delivered them out of their distresses." It was in a time of trouble that this cry arose unto the only source from whence help could come. The heartfelt need of the troubled and tempted one, is in itself a cry, and faith turns to the Lord as the only source of assistance. The trembling sinner falls at the foot of the blessed Tree, and,

> "..... Such news shall ne'er be told in Zion's street,
> That some poor soul fell in despair,
> And died at Jesus' feet."

The Lord "delivered them out of their distresses." The Lord, not man, "delivered them." They may see no way out themselves. They may stand trembling like Israel upon the banks of the Red Sea, and look for certain destruction. But "the Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation." And when He makes bare His holy arm in their deliverance, their enemies fall back affrighted before His awful approach. A new-made way appears to their enraptured sight. Through their experience as lonely "wanderers in the wilderness in a solitary way," they are brought to know their inability to find the way out of such a horrible place, and hence hail the new-found way of escape as the "way of the Lord." How glorious is His appearing, as the sunlight of His presence falls upon their darkened path. In the wilderness "waters break out, and streams in the desert." "The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing; the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon, they shall see the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God." They have found the "fields of the wood," and now lie down "in green pastures," and are led "beside the still waters." In this experience is fulfilled the closing verse of our text:

"And He led them forth by the right way, that they might go to a city of habitation." Whatever may be the trials in this way of the Lord, it is the Lord's "right way" to lead this tempted one to the city of refuge. True, it may be full of keen temptations, and bitter, sorrowing trials, but the Lord is leading and guiding them forth. They are brought by a way that they "knew not," darkness is made light for them, and crooked things straight. The Lord leads them. They are not found going before and legislating for Him, but they "follow the Lamb." Their condition represents them to us as without strength. A lonely pilgrim, hungering and faint in the great wilderness of sin. It is here that the Lord finds them. Speaking of Jacob, and of the redeemed through him as a type, Moses says, "The Lord found him is a desert land, and in the waste, howling wilderness; He led him about, He instructed him, He kept him as the apple of His eye." The tempted saint is led to see his lost condition as a sinner, his proneness to err, and the depravity of his nature in the flesh. The Lord graciously leads him forth in these wilderness places, and it is always the "right way" to that "city of habitation;" for through this way he is brought to feel his need of this place of refuge, and of a strong arm to guard him to its sheltering portals.

I wish that I could now describe in fitting language this "city of habitation," this resting place of the Christian pilgrim in the wilderness of sin and trial. It is the habitation of the redeemed family only; the place Jesus went "to prepare a place for you," their resting place, and of their songs of rejoicing with the holy angels before His throne. Here their Redeemer dwells all over glorious, and the light of His countenance is their perpetual feast. This city, which is the throne of the living God, presents an ample sufficiency to supply all the spiritual desires of the heavenly family. Its exquisite beauty, its holy company, its heavenly pleasures, entrance their soul with heaven born joy, and gladdens their hearts upon the pathway of time. "Walk about Zion," says the psalmist, "and go round about her: tell (count) the towers thereof. Mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces; that ye may tell it to the generations following." "The foundations of the wall of the city," says John, "were garnished with all manner of precious stones," and at its gates were graven the names "of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel." "And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof"

It is a city set on a hill, and the streams from its portals the light of Gospel Truth encourages and strengthens the lonely pilgrim in his mortal journey. He rejoices "in hope of the glory of God." In the city he finds an abiding rest. Earthly homes may be swept away, with the family circles that gather there, but this abides forever. The joys of the righteous are eternal. The holy incense of praise unto God is offered upon an altar purified by the blood of Jesus, and from a people redeemed unto the Lord in His earthly advent. The family circle that gathers around the throne and abides within this holy city, cannot be broken. The work of God endures. He has prepared them for eternal enjoyments. And when all earthly things are over, in the holy joy of the eternal city they shall bask forever in the light of His countenance. We rest in the Gospel Church as an oasis upon the great desert of time; but when we reach the end of this mortal journey, we reach the eternal fruition. To this great and final home of the blessed family of God we are rapidly hurrying. Poor and needy sinners, yet clothed with the robes of eternal heavens. Unworthy of the least of God's mercies, yet inheriting a righteousness that can alone meet the demands of infinite justice and purity.

As one of the poorest of the poor, yet, I hope, earnestly desiring a divine interest in these glorious things, I remain yours in fellowship,

Elder W. M. Smoot, Occoquan, Va., May 15, 1882.

DEAR EDITORS AND READERS OF THE SIGNS:

I will try to write you all another letter if the good Lord wills, but I have no subject yet to write on and what must I do. How can I write without a subject? Well, the Lord God carried Ezekiel out and set him down in the valley full of dry bones. I was not thinking of this scripture when I said, "what shall I write on," it just came to me and I put my thoughts on paper.

It is true he was carried out and set down in the valley full of dry bones, and they were very dry. God said to Ezekiel, "Son of man, can these bones live?" These bones were the whole house of Israel and that took Ezekiel in. The house of Israel was once called Jacob and Jacob have I loved. He had a brother by nature and his name was Esau. Were not Esau and Jacob brothers? Yes, but Jacob was loved and Esau hated. "Why? Because God purposed to save a people already given to his beloved Son. Yes, they are chosen in him, elected from all other people. The election is already over, the choice made before the earth was created. Solomon says, (Prov. 8) "Then I was by him, as one brought up with him: and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him; Rejoicing in the habitable part of his earth; and, my delights were with the sons of men." I (God) created the heaven and the earth the first day, it was mine and my delight and my Son was in the habitable part of it. Jacob whom I loved and named Israel is the habitable part of the earth. Man was created out of the dust of the ground and is of the earth earthy. He was called man and Adam was his name. This man Adam was male and female in their creation and their name was Adam, one flesh one blood, and they brought forth Cain and Abel. Notice the habitable part of his earth, his part was Abel and not Cain because he inhabited Abel and put his law in him; that is the same law for Abel brought forth the firstlings of his flock, a lamb that pointed to the Lamb of God who in God's purpose was slain from the formation of the world. This law is written in the heart. It is the law of love, called a spiritual law. Adam and Eve sinned in breaking the law given to Adam and he was driven out of the garden of Eden to till the ground which he was created for. God said there is not a man to till the ground so it is all in harmony with God's purpose, his decree, foreknowledge and plan of salvation. As I have purposed so: shall it be, for I will do all my pleasure. It is my Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. It is my Father's good pleasure to hide these things from the wise and prudent and reveal them unto babes because it seemed good in his sight.

So the Lord said unto Ezekiel, can these bones live? Ezekiel did not say, yes, if only they will accept to live. He was no lo here or lo there, nor was he one of those that claims to know for he said, "O Lord God, thou knowest." Then he told him what he must do; "Prophesy upon these bones, and say unto them, O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord." I will put life in them, these dry bones are the whole house of Israel, and Israel is my household of faith. I am their life and as I live so shall they live. Yes, see them shaking, like Jacob see them trembling. He put life in them, breath, flesh and sinews, all that was needful. As I have purposed and ordered it, that is my way of bringing my people and they shall know that I am the Lord thy God. I have all power in heaven and earth and none can stay my hand. All I have to do I to speak and it is done, command and it stands fast. I fail not, I will and ye shall. I will be your God, and ye shall be my people, thus saith the Lord thy God. His name shall be called Emmanuel and also called Jesus for he shall save his people from their sins; and called Emmanuel, God with us, for the Word was God and the Word was made flesh and dwelt with us. God with them, the house of Israel, who once was Jacob whom God loved with an everlasting love, while he hated Esau whose name was called Edom. God's indignation was against the Edomites, and nothing can change that for what the Lord hath done is done forever.

The son of man sowed the good seed, yes, the wheat, but while men slept his enemy, the devil, sowed the tares and sowed the tares among the wheat. It is no wonder that God hath cried out "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." Then they began to discern the tares and the wheat both together in the field and wondered how they were there together, but Jesus explained it to them why the tares were with the wheat for the devil sowed them and went his way, the way to destruction for his head was bruised and his works were destroyed. So all things work together for good to them that love God, for God first loved us and his love caused us to love him, yes caused Jacob and Israel to love God. So now listen, dear little children of God scattered abroad upon the face, of the earth, He will gather his outcasts from all nations into one fold for there is but one Shepherd, and then there will be one fold, and they shall be no more reckoned among the nations for they are my sheep and I know them and they shall know me because my sheep shall hear my voice. Well do I remember when I heard his voice. It was so penetrating it entered in and said, be careful for what you do or rather in what you do, "Feed my lambsFeed my sheep," and I know nothing will feed them but the bread of life which comes from heaven—the broken body and shed blood of Jesus Christ which cleanseth us from all sin. It gives life to the dead sinner and causes him to love God and his people, for they are the house of Israel after the Spirit, being born again by the Spirit operating in them. It carried Ezekiel out and set him down there in the valley, there to prophesy what God purposed for him to do, and say like Jonah he was to preach the preaching God bid him. Jonah was carried over into Nineveh in the whale's belly. Yes, went to Nineveh the route that God had ordained and prepared for him in the whale's belly, for God prepared the fish and sent the storm just at the right time to meet the whale and the ship. No failure in the sign of Christ's death, burial and resurrection. It is a perfect work. The whale obeyed God's command, brought Jonah over to Nineveh from the raging sea and storm, placed him on dry land and he began to preach what God bid him and they (the Ninevites) listened and heard him and turned to God. O, house of Israel I will save thee because I have loved thee with an everlasting love, and with loving kindness have I drawn thee.

Jonah must go and preach the preaching that God commanded him for he giveth repentance to the whole house of faith, the whole house of Israel who are the children of God by the new birth, being born again of the Spirit for these are the children of God and the rest are the tares. "Edom saith, we are impoverished, but we will return and build the desolate places; thus saith the Lord of hosts, They shall build, but I will throw down." He shall serve Jacob, but Jacob got the birthright and the spiritual blessing so Jacob have I loved. They were ordained to eternal life. Yes, the whole house of Israel were, whether Jew or Gentile for other sheep I have which are not of this fold (the Jewish fold). They being of the Gentile fold yet my other sheep I also must bring them for there is one shepherd and one fold. They are called by my name, yes, and I have called them all my sheep. They are sheep not goats, not tares but my sheep. Now let them grow together in the field (the world) and at the harvest they shall be separated. What is the chaff to the wheat? The chaff protects the wheat until the wheat is matured, then the chaff is fanned away, the wheat put in the garner. It need not be protected any longer by the chaff. God knows best and all things work together for good to them that love God, to them that are the called to Jacob's seed, yes, to Israel's house, the household of faith. Yours in the hope of the resurrection.

"From the end of the earth will I cry unto thee, when my heart is overwhelmed; lead me to the rock that is higher than I." — Psalm lxi.2.

There is something in this expression in our text, "rock" which seems, to my mind, to throw a sweet and blessed light upon what Jesus is to the poor and needy. The rock must go down to the bottom of the deep waters, as well as rise out of them, to be a sufficient place of refuge for the shipwrecked mariner! If the rock did not go to the bottom of the deep, it would not be firm; it would be but a quicksand. Is not this agreeable to the Spirit's testimony concerning the humanity of Christ? How deep that went into all our sorrows, into all our sufferings, into all our sins, into all our shame! However deep the waters may be, the rock is deeper than all; however deep the sufferings, sins, and sorrows of "Immanuel," God with us, were infinitely deeper. But the waves and billows beat in vain against the rock; they cannot move it from its place. So it is with the rock, Jesus. All the sins, temptations, sufferings, and sorrows of the elect, with the wrath of God, and the fury of hell, beat against that rock, but they never moved it from its place. But this rock is spoken of in our text as "higher than I." There we have the Godhead. For if Jesus were not God as well as man, the God-man, what support could he be to the sinking soul? What efficacy could there be in his atoning blood? What power and glory in his justifying righteousness? What suitability in him as a Saviour to the utterly lost? But being God as well as man, yea, the God-man, the great and glorious Immanuel, he could descend in his human nature into the very depths of the fall, and rise up in his divine nature to the throne of the most High; and thus, like Jacob's ladder, the bottom of it was upon the earth, but the top exalted to the clouds. Then will not, must not, this be ever, as the Lord is please to raise it up, the cry of our soul, "Lead me to the rock that is higher than I?" No salvation anywhere else; no peace anywhere else; no consolation anywhere else. Buffeted by the waves, and well-nigh drowned by the billows, away from that rock; but if led there, brought there, kept there by the blessed Spirit, finding it a safe and sure standing for eternity. And what else but such a rock can save our souls, or what else but such a Saviour and such a salvation, without money and without price, can suit such ruined wretches.

SISTER DORCIE SEMONES

We at Old Union Primitive Baptist church humbly submit to the Lords will In the passing of our dear Sister, Dorcle Cox Semones. She was blessed to live 96 years on this earth. Sister Dorcie was born November 19, 1919 and passed from this life on September 21, 2016. Brother Grover and Sister Darcie were married for 61 years. They were blessed with four children, Darell Semones, Melvin Semones, Larry Semones and one daughter Sue Mc Daniel. Ten grandchildren, and 22 great-grandchildren. Sister Dorcie was baptized in 1977 by Elder Hale Terry, and she served us faithfully for many years as our clerk. Her love for her Lord was manifested with loving kindness and her humble gentle ways. She had a great love for her family and the loving care they gave her was very special. We will all miss her sweet smile, but have those precious memories to comfort us. May the Lord reconcile us to His will. Sister Dorcie's funeral service was conducted at the Mayberry Funeral Home in Floyd County, VA, by her Pastor Elder Larry Hollandsworth. She was laid to rest in the Big Sand Cemetery to await the second coming of our Lord to be carried to her eternal home.

BURNELL BUTCHER WILLIAMS

It is with sad hearts that we bow in humble submission to God's will in removing from our midst, our dear Brother Burnell Williams. To quote Elder Kenneth Key at Elder Julian Williams funeral "A great tree has fallen." Well now another "Great tree has fallen." At age 93, he had been blessed to attend his meetings, except the last one before he passed away. He was also blessed with wisdom to be a leader. He was a person we always went to for advice. We have walked together in sweet fellowship for almost 60 years with our dear Brother and his precious wife, Sister Mary Frances.

So many seats at Malmaison are now empty of those the Lord has called home and those that are unable to attend. He passed away October 16, 2016 at his residence. He was born May 26, 1923 to the late Sister Mattie Williams and the late Brother Floyd Williams. He was survived by his loving wife of 64 years, Mary Frances Stanfield Williams. In addition to his wife, he was survived by his daughters, Martha Jenkins and her husband Ed of Chapel Hill, NC; Susan Pritchard and her husband David of Blairs, VA; his sisters Thelma Hunt and Sister Naomi Houser, both of Danville, VA; his brother Wendell Williams of Athens, GA; his grandchildren, Jessie Decker and her husband Michael, Kimberly Jenkins, Mary Nell Jenkins and great-grandson, Levi Benjamin Decker. In addition to his parents, he was predeceased by his brothers, Elder Julian Williams, Leland and Garland Williams.

Brother Williams attended Virginia Tech where he was a member of the Cadet Corps. He proudly served his country in the National Guard. He worked as a sales supervisor with Smith Douglas Fertilizer, farmed tobacco, and raised cattle for many years prior to retirement. He served as clerk of the Staunton River Association. He also was a member of the Malmaison Primitive Baptist Church, where he served as a deacon and led the singing with his beautiful tenor voice.

Funeral services were held at 2:00 p.m., Wednesday, October 19, 2016 at Norris Funeral Services, Mount Hermon Chapel, with Elders Jimmy Gray and Mark Terry officiating. Interment followed at Highland Burial Park, in Danville.

We believe our dear brother fought a good fight, finished his course and kept the faith and henceforth is laid up for him a crown of righteousness which the Lord the righteous judge shall give to him and not unto him only, but unto all who love His appearing. May God reconcile us to His will.

Written by one that loved him, I trust for Christ sake,

HYMN

Keep silence, all created things,
And wait your Maker's nod!
My soul stands trembling while she sings
The honors of her God.

Life, death, and hell, and worlds unknown
Hang on his firm decree;
He sits on no precarious throne,
Nor borrows leave to be.

Chained to his throne, a volume lies,
With all the fates of men,
With every angel's form and size,
Drawn by th' Eternal pen.

His providence unfolds the book,
And makes his counsels shine;
Each opening leaf, and every stroke
Fulfils some deep design.

Here he exalts neglected worms
To sceptres and a crown;
And there the following page he turns,
And treads the monarch down.

Not Gabriel asks the reason why,
Nor God the reason gives;
Nor dares the favorite angel pry
Between the folded leaves.

My God, I would not long to see
My fate with curious eyes,
What gloomy lines are writ for me,
Or what bright scenes may rise;

In thy fair book of life and grace,
O may I find my name
Recorded in some humble place,
Beneath my Lord the Lamb!

Watts.

Then answered Amos, and said to Amaziah, I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's son; but I was an herdman, and a gatherer of sycamore fruit: And the LORD took me as I followed the flock; and the LORD said unto me, Go, prophesy unto my people Israel." Amos 7:14-15.

Elder Jerry B. Farmer

Sometimes a scripture appears which takes hold of my mind and causes me to stop and take notice. We do not know if it is of the Lord or not, but it seems to have such power and meaning that assurance is given that it surely must be from above. Sometimes the scripture appears to be in such agreement with our experience, that we rejoice in thinking that we may have tasted of those things that the saints of old were blessed to have experienced. Jesus told His disciples to rejoice because they would partake of the same things that the prophets did. He said, "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you."

Amos was an ordinary person. He was not a religious man, as many think of religion. In his day there were many who called themselves prophets, and they had followers that were called sons of the prophets. I think the things of that day must have been similar to the things going on in the Lord's day, and to the things we see today. There have been and are religious organizations, where religious men train other men to be religious as they are. They teach them just how to interpret their scriptures, and how to behave themselves in order to command the respect of others. And they are taught how to attract crowds, and how to get their financial support. They are taught just what to say and do and think. They have a certain way of dressing, and a certain way of speaking, and a certain way of deceiving the simple. But they are convinced that they are right. Nevertheless, they cannot even examine themselves and ask, "Do I have a lie in my right hand?"

In the day of the Lord Jesus, some of the men who did such things were called scribes and Pharisees. He said to them, "But woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! For ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in. Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! For ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayer: therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation. Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! For ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves." In this day they are called free-will or works Christians, Hindus, Muslims, Buddhists, etc. They all have an outward religion with certain carnal rules and ways --- all based upon the works of the flesh.

Amos was not this sort of a person. He was minding his own business, and earning a living as a herdman and a gatherer of sycamore fruit. Evidently he had noticed the so-called prophets and sons of prophets of his day because he separated himself from them. He said, "I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's son; but I was an herdman, and a gatherer of sycamore fruit:" He made it plain that he was not one of them. And while he was attending to his regular occupation of following the flock, the Lord took him.

At this point we begin to see the parallels to our own experience. We were regular people doing regular things, when the Lord came to us. It has ever been this way. Think of Adam in the garden, when the LORD God came to him and spoke to him after he had transgressed the commandment. Think of Noah, when God came to him and commanded him to build an ark to the saving of his house. Consider Abram, to whom the Lord came and said unto him, "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee." Think of Moses on the backside of the desert, when the Lord came to him and spoke to him from the burning bush to reveal unto him His purpose. Think of Jacob whom the Lord found in a waste howling wilderness, and whom he led about and instructed, and kept him as the apple of His eye. The list of those humbled saints, who the Lord found, called, led and taught goes on and on.

Amos said, "The Lord took me." We are assured that the Lord made all things for Himself, and that He owns all things, but in His time He takes possession of His things in a particular way, and uses them in a particular way. The Lord took possession of Amos. And the Lord Jesus Christ took possession of His disciples, and He took possession of you, and I hope and trust He took possession of me. He came unto us and found us before we ever called upon His name. We would not even have known to call upon Him if He had not made Himself known unto us. He called his own out of darkness into His marvelous light. He called us to be a separate people, to come out of Babylon, and to touch not the unclean thing that we might be His people and He might be our God. There is no going back. What the Lord has done is done forever.

Amos said, "The Lord took me as I followed the flock." The Lord's people are found following the flock. How was it with you when the Lord came unto you and took possession of you? I can remember many, many years ago, before I ever knew anything of the old Baptists, someone made mention of a group of backward, ignorant, people that were so poor they only had one song book. And one had to read a verse, and then the others would sing it. This was said to mock them and to diminish them, but my heart went out to them, and a great desire was given me to know them. Was I following the flock in my heart and feelings when the Lord took me --- even before I knew them? Was not the love of God spread abroad in your heart for the Lord's people when the Lord took you, and set you upon a way that you knew not? This is the Lord's work and not man's. His ways are not our ways and His thoughts are not our thoughts. His ways and His thoughts are as high above ours as the heaven is above the earth.

The Lord said unto Amos. "Go, prophesy unto my people Israel." What a great shock it must have been for Amos to think he must go and speak in the name of the Lord to the Lord's people. How impossible it must have appeared unto him to go and do this thing he had never done, and to do this thing for which he felt to be totally unqualified and unworthy. I am made to think of Moses, and what he said, and what the Lord said, when Moses was commanded to go and speak to Pharaoh. "And Moses said unto the Lord, O my Lord, I am not eloquent, neither heretofore, nor since thou has spoken unto thy servant: but I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue. And the Lord said unto him, Who hath made man's mouth? or who maketh the dumb, or deaf, or the seeing, or the blind? have not I the Lord? Now therefore go, and I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt say."

And when the Lord came to Jeremiah and revealed unto him that he was foreknown of God, sanctified and ordained a prophet, Jeremiah tried to escape. He said "Ah, Lord God! behold, I cannot speak: for I am a child. But the Lord said unto me, Say not I am a child: for thou shalt go to all that I send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak. Be not afraid of their faces: for I am with thee to deliver thee, saith the Lord." So it has always been with those called of God. They feel to be little children, unprepared, unqualified, and unworthy. But no matter how one tries to avoid the calling, there is no other way than to go. God has purposed it, He has ordained it, and it must come forth as He has already seen it. "For he spake and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast." And His people are made to be a willing people in the day of His power. When Isaiah was called, he was blessed to say, "Here am I, send me."

Moses went, Abram went, Amos went, Jeremiah went, Isaiah went, the disciples and apostles went, and so will you go when the Lord calls you and sends you. Some may think that the calling is just for prophets or for apostles or for ministers of the gospel, but all of the Lord's people are called to serve Him, and to show forth His praise. "For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren. Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified. What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us?" His calling is powerful, irresistible and sure. He does His will in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth. It is not up to puny man to fulfill His will and purpose. The Lord God's own almighty arm has brought salvation. All praise, honor and glory is due unto Him who alone is worthy.

I trust this was written in love and in hope of eternal life.

Oh happy day when Christ shall come from on high
To gather His children and they shall fly
Far away to that glorious land
And be joined with the angel band

To sing forever His praise from on high
One sweet day no more to sigh
For here we sigh and long for home
In a strange land we do roam

Tis strange because tis not where we belong
For God did put in our hearts a song
He is the music that we do sing
And it has a heavenly ring

For when we meet we know our kin
And great love does then begin
How we love our kindred dear
Have nothing to dread and nothing to fear

Like a sweet flower that begins to bloom
His sweet fragrance scatters the gloom
Oh but could we forever be
Live our life on bended knee

There is great comfort beneath His feet
A great taste of love so sweet
Where we all are the same
For we know our Savior's name

What He did He did complete
There is no power can ever delete
For man will hate and try to destroy
But God don't play and we are not a toy

For His are kept by mighty hands
And none can break His mighty bands
For each of His is bound from birth
And protected well while here on earth

No matter what may come our way
He did set a rescue day
When He will come and banish the night
He is forever our guiding light

For this world would throw us away
Turn their head and walk away
But God did declare that He is God
And on my people the world would shod

Oh He did promise that He does rule
And would teach them well in His own school
He is the Master from which we learn
He set a time for our feet to turn

For to follow Him is a great gift
And from the valleys only He can lift
No matter what the case may be
The heaviest burden He does see

His love is eternal and has no end
And by far He is our very best friend
May His name be praised above all other Besides Him there is no other

May we be thankful and blessed to pray
May we seek Him every day
May our feet walk the straight and narrow way
May we love one another along the way.

VOICES OF THE PAST

DEAR READERS: To write for the comfort and welfare of Zion is a great task, for in viewing these matters we are reminded of the language of the apostles, and knowing our own imperfections we shrink from the task, but we hope to be directed by the spirit of humility and love that our words may be seasoned by refreshing from on high.

In writing to Timothy, second epistle first chapter, thirteenth verse Paul says, "Hold fast the form of sound words, which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus." We take from Paul's language that we should be mindful of our expressions, and formulate sentences to express the faith of the house of God, which is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen, but with patience we wait for it, and we have faith given us by the Lord Jesus Christ.

Now let us note how we are given faith. First the sinner must be quickened by the Son of God. Quickened means made alive from the dead which is the death in trespasses and sin that man became enthralled in by the transgression of God's law given to Adam, "For in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Gen. 2:17. When the sinner is quickened he manifests life, not more action of the first Adam, but the life of the second Adam which is mysterious to the first Adam, and he cannot understand just the condition he is in. A great burden of sin and condemnation is resting upon him, and he flees to one thing and another until all have failed. Then comes the final cry, God be merciful to me, a sinner. It is then that, He that quickened and has been leading this poor sinner about and showed him all the weakness of the flesh, comes with power, and delivers him from this suffering for sin, woe and condemnation, and gives peace to his soul. After one has passed through these conditions what would be expected to come from his heart? The answer, Salvation is of the Lord, and this individual does not feel that in his flesh dwells any good thing, and all his righteousness is as filthy rags so he has nothing to do or think of himself that would merit esteem or glorify God.

Now one will ask, how then can they come to the church and be baptized? We must examine this thought and give expressions in the form of sound words in faith and love. The sinner has faith wrought in him by the power of God revealed, and he knows without Him he cannot have any righteousness in him, so he cannot hold up works of righteousness and is made to look unto the Lord from whence all his strength must come, and he is exercised in his heart which cries out, Lord keep me! direct my steps! That love is for all of like teaching, which is the love for the brethren. That love for the brethren will constrain him to desire their association and that they have fellowship one for the other because they are of the same spirit. This bringing together is the loving kindness of the Lord Jesus drawing them, and this child of God doeth not feel he, as a creature, has duties to perform in the church of God to glorify God, but just the opposite, that felt sense of unworthiness of the least of the riches of the house of God. The Spirit will not leave him in that wilderness, but draws him in the way to the house of God, where he will testify of his love to the brethren, and also acquaint them of his unworthiness, and what wondrous love has been shed abroad in his heart, that he could ask God to bless his enemies. This same spirit that has brought him to the church and made him confess that salvation is of the Lord teaches him, "that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly, in this present world." So it is "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord." Zech. 4:6. If these things be in our hearts and we are moved by the power of love for the brethren to visit them, and associate with them in sweet fellowship, we can say, "By the grace of God I am what I am," and when our elders begin telling the sinner he has duties to perform unto the Lord he is not using words of sound speech or as Paul wrote to Titus, "Speak thou the things which become sound doctrine." Titus 2:1.

Brethren, you note we have spoken of the child of God having duties to per form unto the Lord. Let us examine this matter and see if it is words that will hold good in the form of sound words. We know for us to say to one professing to have a hope; go and relate your feelings and experience to the church and through our exhortation he goes, performs the act in a physical way and is received by the church, and is baptized, and he has no answer of a good conscience given, and feel condemned he would have less confidence in our teachings than before. On the other hand we contact one that feels constrained to go to the church, and tell the brethren how great things the Lord has done, this one is directed by the Spirit, while the other one would be looking upon the acts of the creature as serving the Lord and to give him the answer of a good conscience. That which is born of the flesh is flesh. The difference between the two characters, to our understanding is, that one is laboring and is heavy laden, and the other is just waiting for a better hope, and not concerned about church association, and would rather live with the world than come to the church.

We feel to say to all our readers let us take heed unto ourselves, and our faith and love. Do we find these things were brought to us by obeying exhortations of brethren to unite with the church and be baptized? Are we resting with satisfaction in these things, and have we attained unto the desires of our hearts, caught at the substance and only caught the shadow? On the other hand if one is constrained in his heart to tell of the love of God bestowed upon him, he will come pleading his unworthiness and glorifying God, and all his life he will express his unprofitableness and feel to be only an unprofitable servant. We feel the apostle had these feelings when he said, "In me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing." "For the good that I would I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do." "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" All the words uttered by man called prayer has no intercession to God unless the Spirit of Christ Jesus is interceding in their hearts and glorifying God, and constraining them to thus speak. The gospel is preached by the precious indwelling of the power of God from above in the heart by which the mouth speaketh. Paul endorsed this thought when he said, "And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." 1 Cor. 2:4-5. "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." 1 John 3:1. How was it bestowed? By our doing those things which are spoken of in the New Testament, to those constrained by the love of God, or by having those things pointed out to us as a duty we owed to the Lord. If they were an act of the sinner's duty, it is of the flesh and cannot attain unto the righteousness of God. If enacted by the constraining power of the love of God, it is a righteous act, and is becoming of all such to fulfill those things which the Holy Ghost hath revealed to them. All that truly love the church of God will have a desire in their hearts for peace and welfare, and not a snare would they cast in the way of one of God's little ones, but they are willing to comfort and encourage them in the truth. We will close with this admonition: May we hold fast the form of sound words, which we have received through the inspired word of truth as given by the apostles, and not think more highly of ourselves than we ought to think.

Submitted in love.

SONG OF SOLOMON

"I am the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the valleys." S. S. 2:1.

Many deep fathomless mysteries are in the Book. Things that are hard to be understood (2 Peter 3:16) are found from the first to the last. I suppose that if it was not for the influence the flesh has in our judgments we would see clearly, but we have that to contend with from the days of our youth (Eccl. 12:1) even down to old age (Deut. 28:50). This being true we have much writing and preaching that must be given the scriptural test before it is fit for nutriment to the church (1 John 4:1; Gal 1:8). This is why things are a mystery to us and will continue to be as long as time lasts. A rose and a lily are not alike. One of them grows in one place and the other in a different kind of place. We must remember that this is one person talking. The marks of the rose and the marks of the lily belong to them. Some have ascribed this beautiful language to the church. With this thought I cannot concur. The church does not say such sublime things about herself. The Son of God has the right to speak thus of himself, and also to speak with such endearing terms to his bride, but for her to take such liberty—never! When she speaks concerning herself it is an acknowledgment of her many shortcomings. (S.S. 1:6: Mat. 3:14; Mat. 26:75: Rom. 7:15-25).

"I am the rose of Sharon." This is spoken by the Head of the church, and the only one in and of the church that has the prerogative to say, "I am." Not any such foolish expressions as "I want to be," or even that "I will be," but this speaker has the power and right to speak of future things as already so, and of things and times of the past, present and future as taking place now. If this had been the church speaking she would not, and, moreover, could not have taken unto herself, the authority belonging only to her Beloved. A rose is a flower of great beauty and is known over the country·of Sharon. Not that He is a rose, but the rose. There is only one Savior. There is only one name that has power to save, (Isa. 43:11; 46:21; Acts 4:12) and he was, and is, and evermore shall be the only one that saves. (Heb. 13:8). Sharon is a country of plains and the word means that. Jesus is the plain that his brethren must come to. Things are not in common when some are on the mountain and some in the valley, but it is here on this Plain (Sharon) that the Lord's people all find him as everything they need. (Act 2:44-47). It is here that people of every nationality in the world can meet together, and feel at home. "What a lovely flower! What a calm, easy resting place! On this plain with the sweet fragrance of this Rose all wars cease; it is here that divisions never come; it is on this common level that fault-finding, backbiting, bickering and strife does not come; it is here and here alone, that the rich and poor, bond and free, young and old, high and low meet in peace and prosperity in a church capacity. It was on this plain (Isa. 40:4) surrounded by salvation (Isa. 26:1; 60:18) with the Rose of a Sharon in her midst (Psalms 46:5), that the church came through the Civil War in 1861-65. Although it may seem a digression, let me say here, that there is not a place on this globe that can have said about it what can be said both from a scriptural and a profane historical standpoint, about the Old Baptists. The late Civil War did not divide them. The Missionary Baptists, Methodist and Presbyterians did divide. They were not an equal, North and South; they did not esteem each other better than self; they did not have all things in common. But look at the church. There was not a Northern and Southern Primitive Baptist body. When our brethren from down South were in the Northern prisons they were ministered to by our brethren up there, and it was the same with our Northern brethren in the South. You young readers remember this and you old ones take new courage.

On the plain of Sharon where fruit abounds, the rose has become the plant of renown. Only on this plain does Christ have all pre-eminence: only on this plain are the inhabitants in complete unity seeing each other as better than self. "I am the lily of the valleys." Only one lily and many valleys. This word "valleys" means a different place. People talk about conditional salvation, but how absurd to speak of volunteering to enter a difficult place! Yet the children of God must go there. It is a blighting thought to think that the time must come when we must go into the valleys. We so much dread the going down because we have been over the route going up. Going up we have heard the rich, strong voice of the Shepherd as he led and called us onward and upward, but when we could no longer see to follow him we soon were on the hazardous, circuitous route down and we felt that we did not have any guiding hand and voice. There is not any stopping going up or down. We must go all the way up in deliverance: our baptism in water and in tribulations is down into the water and completely submerged in the trials and afflictions of the Christian's life; our dying in Adam was all the way down into death but up by the resurrecting power of Jesus Christ. Dear readers, we must go all the way down into these valleys. How dark and cheerless they seem; how our memory goes back to former days when our zeal was likely and we were so interested in talking of the blessed One; ah, how black and rolling the tempest-laden clouds; what despair and gloom seized our tortured souls; ah, dear pilgrim, how dark and foreboding the caverns of evil we found there. The questioning and the groaning of our soul was for another glimpse of light, but the dark, heavy clouds had darkened the sun so that we could scarcely hope for it again. We had sunk so low that we wondered how that we ever had hoped in the Lord. In such an extremity and in our anxiety and ordeal of soul we began to see again ourselves.

Are we the person that has gone before the church of Jesus Christ and asked for a home? Are we, the one that has set in the assembly of the saints? Ah, what a deceiver we have found ourselves to be. In this dismal, low and gloomy valley the waters of destruction come. How we struggle to keep going but we cannot. Hope seems to be going. David, along with all of God's children, knew all this. "Save me, O God; for the waters are come in unto my soul. I sink in deep mire, where there is no standing: I am come into deep waters, where the floods overflow me." Psalms 69:1-2. Paul experienced dying daily as does all the family of God. (1 Cor. 15: 31; 2 Cor. 4:10-12). "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." Psalms 116:15. Many times we refer to the corporeal death when we speak of this scripture, but I think it is applicable to this daily dying. If so, then this is a precious sight to him who is the lily of the valleys. Remember dear reader, that salvation is of the Lord. It is here in these valleys, shut in by mountains of sin and dark clouds overhead, that we get to the ends of the earth. It is here that Jesus, the lily of the valleys, comes up from out of the mire and flooding waters to rescue every perishing lamb. We were not looking for him in a place like this; we had been taught by men that he was God of the light places: they had taught us that he came to them that sought him; some had told us that our condition was because of our conduct, but every idea and opinion and doctrine of men must be drowned in these surging waters; all powers of mortal man must be brought under subjection, and he must come to the end of his resources — to the end of all the earth. There, out of ground that he thought could not produce, the lily comes up; he finds that not only is God the God of the light, but that he is the ruler in the dark (Psalms 139:12); he finds that he cannot go to Christ, but that Christ comes to the poor, lost and ruined sinner; that the dark clouds were not dark at all, but only his vision was bad. (1 Cor. 13-12). What a precious sight to see the coming up of this lily. What a sight for the dear children of God to behold this beautiful lily in it purity, innocence and glory. The mind is unable to express the adoration and praise due this glorious One, but the time of singing has come because he has left the ninety and nine and gone into the mountains seeking the poor sinner that has become lost there. (Mat. 18:12). He takes him out of the horrible place of mire and places him on a rock, establishes his goings, giving him a new song.

WHY DO CHILDREN OF GOD SUFFER

"If we suffer, we shall also reign with him." 2 Tim. 2:12.

It is evident in all the experiences of the children of God as recorded in the Bible, that they all suffered in many ways. It is also evident in the experiences related by God's children in this age that suffering is yet common. They are all experimentally acquainted with grief, temptations, persecutions, tribulations and all manner of suffering. Job was afflicted in body and had all earthly possessions taken from him. All the Israelites suffered under Egyptian bondage. David was sorely oppressed and conscious of his great sins. Paul was beaten with many stripes and was made to exclaim, "O wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Yes this suffering is necessary, but why?

We do not suffer in order to merit a home in heaven, because Jesus fulfilled the law to a jot and tittle for us. Therefore, it is solely upon his merits that we shall inhabit that place prepared for his saints in after life. He has merited our salvation in heaven by his obedience.

We do not suffer in order to merit blessings in time for these were included in the "all things that pertain unto life and godliness" that was given to us by the Father through the merits of Jesus. These blessings that we enjoy in time are not merited by us as Paul says, "By grace are ye saved through faith; and that (faith) not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: Not of works lest any man should boast."

We do not suffer to satisfy justice; nor to merit any blessing in time; nor to gain a home in heaven. We suffer because it was appointed unto us to suffer; God appointed to us this suffering just as he appointed Paul to suffer as an apostle, a preacher and teacher of the Gentiles. (1 Tim. 1:11-12). In 1st Thessalonians 3:3 we read, "That no man should be moved by these afflictions: for yourselves know that we are appointed thereunto." So then, this suffering comes by the appointment of God.

It was also appointed unto Jesus to suffer and as it was necessary for him to have suffered so it is necessary that we suffer. Paul reasoned with them out of the Scriptures, opening and alleging that Christ must needs have suffered. (Acts 17:3) It was not only necessary that Jesus suffer because of our sins, but it was also necessary in order to learn obedience. Paul wrote to the Hebrews concerning Jesus, "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered." Heb. 5:8. So Jesus was taught obedience through suffering. We learn obedience by the things we suffer.

Paul told the Philippian brethren, "For unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake." Phil. 1:29. Even the suffering of God's children is a gift. It is a valuable gift for it teaches obedience. We are made obedient through suffering. Paul did not preach the gospel for filthy lucre's sake nor for any glory for he said, "For though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of: for necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!" 1 Cor. 9:16. The sufferings that Paul experienced drove him to obedience. God is a perfect teacher and will make his children obedient as it is said in Psalms 110:3. "Thy people SHALL BE WILLING in the day of thy power."

How could we have believed that Jesus was the Christ had we never suffered? It took the suffering of trials, heartaches, disappointments, vexation of our natural spirits, and failures in all our undertakings to teach us that we were not capable of saving ourselves and to make us to cry to some power other than ourselves to save us. Thus, by this suffering our God given faith was manifested. How could we believe in an allwise sovereign God had we not suffered so many disappointments to teach us that we are at best but vanity and foolish, and to teach us that "It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps?" By these experiences God teaches us that there is a power that is sovereign and worketh all things after the counsel of his own will and no power is able to withstand him.

It takes the sufferings that we experience to teach us daily that we are nothing --- yea, less than nothing and vanity. This suffering is necessary to keep us humble and dependent upon the grace of God. This suffering makes us to be constant in prayer to the God of Israel for his mercies. We cry unto him daily for his continued mercies, realizing that we do not merit anything but his hot wrath. If justice was meted out to us according to that we deserve, hell would be our doom.

Now we are comforted with this thought, "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him." Oh, blessed thought! Paul reckoned in his letter to the Roman brethren. "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." Rom. 8:18. Now we experience sufferings; then, we shall experience glory. Now we experience death; then, we shall experience life. Now we experience sin; then, we shall experience holiness. Now we experience foolishness; then, we shall experience wisdom. Now we experience hope; then, we shall experience reality.

No other people suffer as the children of God suffer. No other people has experienced that pure heart that teaches that the best of man's righteousness is but filthy rags in God's sight. No other people are convinced that without him we can do nothing. Other people conclude that they have some power vested in them upon the volition of their own will. They think that they can, at least, accept or reject. We would be of the same opinion were it not for the sufferings that we experience that teaches us otherwise. This lesson is learned through suffering. May God be praised for blessing us with suffering to keep us humble and submissive to his will and at each others feet.

Elder E. J. Lambert
January, 1947

Elder R. L. Dodson, Dear Brother In Christ: I have been impressed for some time to write you a letter. I must make the effort so that my mind may be relieved.

First of all I want to thank you for printing the articles in that wonderful October 1945 issue of the Signs of the Times. In my opinion it is one of the best issues, from cover to cover, that I have ever read. It is filled with the sweet spirit of Christ, and his love to poor, sinful creatures as I feel myself to be. I have read and re-read it, feeding upon the sweet spiritual food combined therein. Your editorial, "Why darkness before Light," is a marvelous piece. It explains so beautifully the wonderful purposes and plans of God, the why and how these plans have been made manifest at the right time --- the appointed time. I enjoy all your writings on the subjects of Election and Predestination. They fill my poor heart with that hidden manna that comes down from above; and is dispensed to God's little ones through his faithful servants. I feel that you are wonderfully blessed in the understanding of that sweet doctrine which is so precious to me.

In his editorial, "The Risen Christ," Elder Griffin has expressed feelings and hopes far better than I could express them myself. He has expressed his position plainly, with which I agree. He has shown love and charity for those who may not share his opinion, which I hope I have for them.

Brother Dodson I want to commend you for your sweet spirit of charity toward those who may not see things as you do.

"Faith, hope, charity, these, three; but the greatest of these is charity." Much has been said about our faith in God. It would take volumes to contain the sweet experiences of grace which have been written, expressing that precious hope in Christ, that has been received by poor, sinful creatures here below, yet little has been said or written about the greatest of the three - charity.

It is only mentioned in the New Testament. Many think of it only as almsgiving; others think of it as love but to me it is the application to our lives of our faith in God, and our hope in Christ. It is the manifestation to those about us, that we possess the other two. It is the spirit of love, one to another, which binds God's children together, and keeps them ever at the feet of their brethren, anxious to serve and not dictate to them. It is the essence of Christianity without which we cannot live, yet why has it been so neglected? Paul explained it in 1 Cor. 13. He said, "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the rift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries and all knowledge and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing." Surely charity is important.

CHARITY

The foregoing is a portion of a letter we received from a sister in Texas. It shows that she feels the subject of charity has been neglected. We agree that but little, comparatively speaking, has been said on this all-important and inexhaustible subject. While attending the Lower Country Line Association near Durham, N. C. in the early part of July, we used the words she quotes: "And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity," as a text. We dwelt more on faith and hope than we did on charity, partly perhaps because we did not wish to trespass upon the time of those who were to follow us in speaking. We stated at the outset of our remarks that we were going to talk about the three greatest things in all the world to the spiritually minded, which we designated faith, hope and charity. We tried to show among other things that since the days of Abraham, faith, hope and charity had abided with the people of God and how glad we are that this is still true to-day. Without them how could we endure the burdens and crosses of this life. Faith and hope pertain only to this life, but when this pilgrimage journey ends, faith shall become sight, for we shall then see Him as he is and be like him, and shall be satisfied; and that which we have hoped for here we shall come into possession of, but charity, or love, which we have a little foretaste of here, shall have hardly begun, for it will still abide with us and continue on and on in a never ending eternity. We have thought of charity as the manifested love of God. God was not content to only proclaim his love for his people, but he actually manifested it in the gift of his only begotten Son, who came into this world of sin and sorrow and suffered ignomy and shame in order that he might ransom and redeem from the powers of Satan those who were given him in the counsels of eternity. Through their transgression in Adam they became involved in sin and ruin, and were of themselves entirely incapable of extricating themselves from so horrible a pit, but according to that covenant ordered in all things and sure, in the fulness of time God rent the heavens and came down in the person of his Son, destroyed him that had the power of death, and delivered them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends," is the testimony of Jesus, and he also said, "This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you." In laying down his life for it is people, he met the demands of the law in every jot and title, and he took up his life again that he might justify them and present them unto his Father without spot, wrinkle or any such thing; therefore there is none who can lay anything to their charge or condemn them before God, for the apostle says, "It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us." Having conquered death, and having destroyed him that had the power of death, death is no more a frightful foe, and in declaring that he was persuaded that nothing shall ever be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord, Paul puts death at the head of the list of those things which are all-embracing. This is why charity is the greatest of all. It will endure when, all time things shall have been swept away and forgotten. As the poet has well said, "When we've been there ten thousand years, Bright shining as the sun, We've no less days to sing God's praise, Than when we first begun."

If God's manifested love for us was so great as to bring forth from the climes of eternal glory his blessed Son, to-suffer and die in our stead, what ought to be the attitude of the recipients of all of God's benefits as a token of their gratitude and appreciation to him? It is easy to profess by word of mouth our love for God and his people, but many of us fall far short when it comes to putting our words into practice. Jesus said, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." The acid test is beautifully set forth in the thirteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians, where Paul states in these words: "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." He then proceeds to tell us what charity (manifested love) really is. He says, "Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, Doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; Beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Charity never faileth."

The children of the heavenly King should manifest their love one for another, and this embraces, in our opinion, administering to the carnal needs of our brethren where they are without the necessities of this life. The beloved apostle, John, says, "But whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth." Be it said to the shame of some of us that we close our eyes and turn away from the poor and needy of the flock, so far as the things of this world are concerned. Have any of us anything that we did not receive? "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof, the world and they that dwell therein." Whatsoever then we may possess even of this world's goods has been entrusted to us by an all-merciful God, and in reality it is not ours, but his and we should be good stewards and use it as unto the Lord. We agree that we should not confuse the meaning of natural charity with the love of God, but this does not say that we should not be practical about the things of God. Let the fruit of the tree show that it is a good tree. We should not be backward in showing our faith by our works. Some of our brethren seem to be fearful of laying stress on living what we profess for fear of being criticized about believing in creature works. The apostle James said, "Shew me thy faith without the works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works." Let us not be hearers only, but let us also be doers of the things which pertain to God and His kingdom, that others may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven.

For the Signs of the Times,
Buffalo, April 26, 1836.

Brother Beebe: Once more I have the pleasure of writing to you for a few No's of the Signs. I have often thought of the situation of the Old School Baptist Church, when you first proposed publishing a paper devoted exclusively to the Old School Baptist cause. We then knew of but few, except the Warwick Association; and even there they were divided — one after another falling in with the New School plans. Again when you came out in your first number against the Rev. A. Judson's letter to the American females, as almost everyone thought he was a good man, and would not write or do anything wrong. I well know that the learned clergy with all their papers would make an united attack, and almost concluded you must fall before them; yet after all my fears, taking into consideration the flood of error that was spreading over the land and deceiving many, and being strengthened by the promises in the Bible, that "On this rock will I build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it;" and again, "There shall arise false teachers and shall deceive many, and if it were possible, deceive the very Elect, & c., I made up my mind to advise you to go on, and promised to be one who would stand or fall with you, and to aid and assist you.

According to my expectations, soon after the Signs was put in circulation, the learned clergy with all their presses came out most violently against it; but when "the Sword of the Lord and of Gideon" was unsheathed, they fell like Goliath before David's smooth stone from his sling. Oh how my heart has been made glad again and again, when I have read in your paper, letters from churches, and individual members scattered in different parts of the United States, that was almost ready to say with one of the prophets of old, "I am left alone and they seek my life." How rejoiced was that prophet when the Lord told him he had reserved more than seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to the Image of Baal.

I will now tell you a little about this place; last winter the New School of all sorts held a protracted, or rather a distracted meeting; every art was put in motion to get people on the anxious-seats ; women; old and young were sent out, some with tracts and others to abuse and slander those that would not go; young women have induced young men to go to meeting with them, and after getting them before a house full of people, began to urge them to go on to the anxious seats, and to cry out, What will become of your souls if you do not; and if they could not succeed take the first opportunity to abuse them & c. At length some of the old professors became alarmed, and began to enquire for the good old way. I took some pains to scatter the Signs amongst them; and after a while the learned reader for the New School Baptist became alarmed and publicly warned his friends against reading a paper that was attempted to be put in circulation, falsely called religions, also to beware of those that circulated them, &c. I was glad to hear of that, for I concluded something was the matter. Since that time I have had the pleasure of meeting with a number that have determined to walk no longer with them. We have appointed meetings in a school-house where we meet together to sing and pray and have a coloured man, who was licensed in the State of Virginia, to preach for us. We think the time not far distant when an Old School Baptist Church will be formed in this City. If any of the Old School Baptist preachers should be passing this way, they are affectionately invited to call on us. They will find me on the corner of Franklin and Chippewa streets.

PSALM 8:1-2.

O Lord our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth! who hast set thy glory above the heavens.

Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength because of thine enemies, that thou mightest still the enemy and the avenger.

GOSPEL STANDARD 1837
To the editors of the Gospel Standard

Sirs, — Having from time to time read several pieces in your work, sometimes, when my soul has been cast down, and I have been sinking in the mire and the filth of internal corruption, I have, under the power and unction of God the Holy Ghost, had a lift by the way, and have received a few drops from that ocean which, I trust, I shall shortly swim in through the countless ages of a never-ending eternity, I mean the ocean of God the Father's everlasting love, flowing in streams through the mediation of Jesus Christ, and flowing into the souls of all the election of grace, by the sovereign power and will of the Holy Ghost.

On reading chap. xvii. of the Acts of the Apostles, I find there was the same opposition to gospel truths at that period of time as there is at the present day. There are but two sects on earth; the one is called the righteous, and the other the wicked; the one sheep and the other goats; the one the children of God, and the other the children of the devil; the one are, or will be, regenerated by the power of the Holy Ghost, and they either know it, or desire to know it, and the other are sitting in darkness and the shadow of death, being blinded by the god of this world. And between these two sects there is a great gulf fixed by God's eternal degree, so that the one cannot pass to the other, neither in time nor to all eternity.

We are informed, that when Paul was called and fitted by the Holy Ghost for the work of the ministry, in his travels he came to Thessalonica, where was a synagogue of the Jews, and, as his manner was, he went in unto them, and three Sabbath Days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures, that Christ must needs have suffered and risen again from the dead, and said, "This Jesus whom I preach unto you is Christ." We find that Paul was permitted to speak in the synagogue, a privilege which is granted but to very few of God's sent servants in this our day. A man may preach up free will and human merit in almost any place, but pulling down the creature, and exalting Christ as head over all things to the spiritual church, is what cannot be borne, only by few. However, there were certain lewd fellows, of the baser sort, gathered a company and set all the city of an uproar, and assaulted the house of Jason, and sought to bring them out to the people, crying, "These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also." And just so it is now; yet notwithstanding, God's sent ministers do and will declare the word of God, pulling down the creature and exalting Christ, declaring that he is the only King in Zion, and that he rules and reigns in the hearts of the election of grace; and also showing that the children of God must pass through much tribulation, internal and external, on their way to the kingdom of glory, and that they must wade through hot fires and deep waters. Sometimes the poor soul goes down to the bottom of the mountains and the earth, with his bars about him, according to his apprehension, for ever; and whatever he has known and felt in days that are past, when the candle of the Lord shined upon him, he is now brought to conclude that it will never more be day with him, and he is brought with David to cry, that be "sits in darkness, and in the shadow of death, being bound in affliction and Iron." He sees the prison walls and the fetters that bind him, but he cannot see how he is to be set at liberty, and there are very few who can tell him where he it. The cry of the bondmen of the day is, "There is no need for you to be in this situation only believe and liberty is yours; exercise your faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and all will be well." But these dumb dogs know nothing about it; for they have never been spiritually shut up in darkness, because they have never entered into the spiritual world. It must be the voice of Christ speaking with power to the soul, before that poor soul can leap like an hart, and a man must know something of the path himself, before he can teach God's family to profit. What does any one know of cold, if he has never been frost-bitten? or what does any one know of the effects of fire, if he has never felt its warmth? A schoolboy may sit at his desk, with maps and charts before him, and imagine he can navigate a ship across the Atlantic, but this is only head knowledge, which is useful as far as it goes; but let such an one stand at the helm, when the sea rolls mountains high, and he will find a difference between being there and sitting at his desk by the fireside. The one is learnt from books, the other is experience.

And thus it is with all the letter-taught, man-made parsons and their hearers. They can talk for an hour of what they know about the work of God in the letter, and ask a thousand questions as to what is the meaning of this passage of Scripture and the other, all at a distance; but it is one thing to talk of Christ in the land of Judea, and another to know that he is formed in the heart the hope of glory, being made a partaker of the divine nature, born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever. But before any of God's children can come to this stage of experience, they must be plunged again and again into the ditch, by God himself, until their own clothes abhor them.

They may wash themselves with snow water, and make the outside clean, but the leprosy is within, and all the waters of Abana and Pharpar will be of no avail. No; the Syrian must dip seven times in the river Jordan, and then he shall be clean. (2 Kings v.) So it is with all those who feel their souls polluted by sin. They may try all the rounds and forms that have ever been invented by mortal man, and they will not be one whit the better. Nothing short of the blood of Christ, God's dear Son, can cleanse them from their sin; and this must be applied to the conscience by the blessed Spirit, before peace and rest can be obtained.

Every man on earth is as clay in the hands of the heavenly potter. They are moths, worms, and grasshoppers. The Lord maketh poor and maketh rich. He bringeth down and lifteth up. He raiseth the poor out of the dust of earth, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes, and to make them inherit thrones of glory; for the pillars of the earth are the Lord's, and he hath set the world upon them. How contrary is the language of God's word to the preaching of the present day. Man is to perform everything, and if he cannot make a good finish of the work of salvation, then Jesus Christ is to help him out. Whereas the word of God declares that Jehovah is a Sovereign in all his works and ways. "The deceived and the deceiver are his. He shutteth up a man, and there can be no opening. With him is strength and wisdom." (Job xii. 9-25.) But though a child of God may see these things in the word of God as clear as the sun at noon-day, yet unless they are brought to his soul with power, he cannot rely on them. I have heard ministers say, "Apply the promises to your souls, and take comfort from them." But let a poor child of God be brought into trying circumstances, through affliction in his family, want of employment, or otherwise; he tries all in his power that he may live uprightly; he may rise up early, and sit up late, and eat the bread of carefulness, and notwithstanding be baffled in all his designs; and sometimes, perhaps, he may be kept in this situation for years, God, at the same time, withdrawing from him his sensible presence, and then what comfort can he get from the promises? He may read that "God hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee," but this in the letter will not set him at liberty, either in spirituals or temporals. I have passed through the length and breadth of this land again and again; but I know all these things are to stain the cursed pride of many of God's family, and bring them to the foot of the cross, that Christ may have all the glory.

The souls' welfare of God's family is not in the hands of mortal man, for God's counsel shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure; but many weaklings are carried away with the wind of false doctrine; so that one comes with a, "Lo, here is Christ," and another, "Lo, there is Christ," till the poor soul's judgment gets entangled, and at times he hardly knows who to believe or what to believe; but blessed be the dear name of our Jesus, every son and daughter in his family is fixed upon that rock which the gates of hell shall never prevail against, and eventually they are brought to see it. Sure I am it is a great blessing to sit under a sound doctrinal, experimental minister; for if any one has gone far on the way to Zion he knows what it is to have his soul shut up in darkness, and then the beasts of prey come forth from their dens; the lust of the flesh and the pride of life, yea, wrath and malice in every shape. Beset by the world, by external professors, and sometimes by even the regenerated family of God, and, in particular, by the temptations of the devil, the poor soul reels to and fro, and staggers like a drunken man, and is at his wits' end. Then he cries unto the Lord, and the Lord, at his own set time, delivers him out of his distresses. And this is often done under the ministry of the word; therefore I say again those are highly favoured who can sit under the sound of the gospel of God's dear Son, from one who has been long in the way to Zion, who has been brought from bondage to liberty, from Sinai to Zion, from his own ragged righteousness to be clothed in the righteousness of Christ; one who knows what it is to have a view of his own situation in the Adam-fall, and what it is to leave the old world in all its ruins, and, by the faith of the Son of God, to enter into the New Jerusalem, the city of the great King in Zion, and there sit under his sway in the land of liberty, having the royal laws of faith and love, and a manifestation of all sins forgiven, past, present, and to come. This is what the blood-bought family of God wish to enjoy, and a man who has experienced these things knows something of the bulwarks of Zion, and of the strong holds of sin, of the devices of the devil and the agents he employs. Sometimes the mighty train comes in like a flood, and seems to deluge all before it; and sometimes in a smooth, deceitful way, dressed as an angel of light; but let it be either way, and end is the same, to sap, if possible, the very foundations of Zion. But God is the God of his people, and he will be their guide even unto death.

Nottingham. A POOR OUTCAST.

PSALM 95: 1-7.

O Come, let us sing unto the Lord: let us make a joyful noise to the rock of our salvation.

Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving, and make a joyful noise unto him with psalms.

For the Lord is a great God, and a great King above all gods.

In his hand are the deep places of the earth: the strength of the hills is his also.

The sea is his, and he made it: and his hands formed the dry land.

O come, let us worship and bow down: let us kneel before the Lord our maker.

For he is our God; and we are the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand. To day if ye will hear his voice.

HYMN

How sweet, how heavenly is the sight,
When those who love the Lord
In one another's peace delight,
And thus fulfil his word:

When each can feel his brother's sigh,
And with him bear a part;
When sorrow flows from eye to eye,
And joy from heart to heart:

When free from envy, scorn, and pride,
Our wishes all above,
Each can his brother's failings hide,
And show a brother's love:

When love in one delightful stream
Through every bosom flows;
And union sweet, and dear esteem,
In every action glows!

Love is the golden chain that binds
The happy souls above;
And he's an heir of heaven that finds
His bosom glow with love.

Swain.

PSALM 93

The Lord reigneth, he is clothed with majesty; the Lord is clothed with strength, wherewith he hath girded himself: the world also is stablished, that it cannot be moved.

Thy throne is established of old: thou art from everlasting.

The floods have lifted up, O Lord, the floods have lifted up their voice; the floods lift up their waves.

The Lord on high is mightier than the noise of many waters, yea, than the mighty waves of the sea.

Thy testimonies are very sure: holiness becometh thine house, O Lord, for ever.

"I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine." John 10:14.

Elder Jerry B. Farmer

When one in a carnal mind attempts to describe the life's journey of the child of God, the pilgrim's efforts and choices are always emphasized, rather than the saving grace and watch-care of the One that constantly delivers him from all danger and harm. It is my desire, the Lord willing, to be blessed with a spiritual mind in order to write down something of the true experience of God's elect, manifesting God's goodness and mercy, and giving Him all praise, honor and glory, which is His due.

The sheep is the best example I know, of any creature according to its nature, that depicts the life and needs of a child of God. And the sheep has been referred to many times in the scriptures for that very purpose. I desire to set down a few observations of the way a shepherd and his sheep get along.

It is almost defenseless against its predators, and is in constant need of watch-care by the shepherd. If left by itself it would soon perish --- if not by a ravenous beast, then surely by hunger and thirst, or by disease. So, it is necessary to have a wise and strong shepherd in order for the weak and dependent sheep to prosper and survive.

The sheep is a very special creature indeed. It has many characteristics similar to those of a person. It is basically gregarious, and does not do well when isolated. It does best when surrounded by the flock. Nevertheless, it does sometimes wander off by itself. It is capable of love, trust, fear, anger, and even presumption. These attributes are quite noticeable upon pondering their day-to-day activities.

Little lambs are helpless when they are born, and totally depend upon their mothers for all their needs. After they grow a little, and notice others of their own age, their main desire and greatest pleasure is to romp and play with them.

Sheep naturally fear strangers. They will not approach anyone they do not know. And if a stranger should call to them, they will ignore the call, and if they feel threatened will run the other way. But the shepherd has been proven to be harmless to the sheep, and has earned their trust over time. Because they trust him, they will follow him. Jesus said, "And when he (the shepherd) putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him: for they know his voice. And a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him: for they know not the voice of strangers."

When a sheep is subdued, it gives up without a fight. Its only recourse is for the shepherd to come and rescue it. Many hireling shepherds allow the sheep under their charge to be separated from the flock and to be destroyed. But the Watchful Shepherd never permits even one of His own to be ultimately lost, because He has the power and wisdom to keep it. And above all, He loves it more than His own life.

Sheep come in several colors such as brown, black or white, or some combination of these colors. But many goats are colored much like sheep. So, a sheep can never be differentiated from a goat strictly on the basis of its color. Other features or characteristics must be taken into account to discern a sheep.

A sheep may become irritated and show it by butting, but never by biting. It may injure a person or another animal, but it does not set out to destroy. They may vent their anger, or seek to prove their dominance, but they do not rip and tear. Even though they sometimes get rambunctious, the wise shepherd knows just how to humble each one.

At a very young age the sheep know nothing of the shepherd, but after they mature a little they begin to notice him. Being constantly with him, the sheep learn to trust his kind presence and tender mercies. They begin to know his gentle voice and respond to its sound. When being thoroughly examined for, and cured of, any parasites, skin diseases, or cuts and abrasions, they learn not to fear his touch. And when he carefully shears from them their dirty, hot and heavy wool, how refreshing it is to be relieved of this burden in its season. When needful, they are gently tapped to keep them traveling in the narrow way.

The sheep actually learn to love the shepherd — because he first loved them.

They watch for him, and listen for his voice, and do not shun his touch, for they have been taught from long experience that the shepherd only seeks their good. The sheep follow him, wherever he leads. They know not the way to the good pasture or to the still waters. But the shepherd knows the way, and they trust him to bring them there and to keep them safe at all times.

The sheep are named, and the shepherd knows exactly how many are in his flock. If one wanders off, the shepherd, without fail, goes to find it and brings it home again. And the shepherd puts his sheep up at night in a secure fold, away from all harm and danger. The shepherd is the door of the sheepfold. And if an enemy of the sheep should leap over the wall in order to tear and destroy, the shepherd will promptly drive it away or kill it. All the sheep are kept secure under his protective care.

While considering the ways of a good shepherd with his flock, and the nature of the sheep, it has caused me to remember some details of my own travels. It is my hope and trust that you will also be given to see yourself in some of these things. I desire, if it is the Lord's will, to be blessed to set down a brief narrative of the life and experience of a sheep from its birth to death --- particularly one that is loved by a gentle shepherd.

The lamb is born into the world knowing nothing except to hunger, to cry for help, and to trust its mother. It looks to her for all its needs. But it knows nothing of the shepherd, who keeps it and also keeps its mother. It begins to see the wonderful world with all its enticements and pleasures. And little by little it launches out in wider and wider circles from its mother. It finds other little lambs with which to run, jump, bump, and climb upon any high place. It sees no danger or harm, even when it climbs very high or bumps its playmate much too hard. The other suffers, but the offender goes on, not feeling any pain. It bounces along looking for another one to crash into, or for another rock pile to climb.

The lamb grows and becomes stronger, and no longer depends upon its mother. Now, it eats solid food and has no desire for milk. At this time, it knows not the need of the shepherd, although it does recognize his voice. It presumes that it can fend for itself. While greedily looking toward the ground for more and better feed, it gradually wanders farther and farther away from the safety of the flock. Then slowly, almost imperceptibly, night settles in. The young sheep finally realizes it is completely alone. There are no more familiar sounds of the bleating sheep, or of the kind shepherd's voice. Now, silence, darkness and fear begin to reign. The shepherd is unseen, but is already on the way to reclaim his sheep.

Then unfamiliar sounds begin to reach the ears of the little lost sheep. They are those of the vicious and pitiless wolves. At first they are distant howls on the wind. After a time, low muffled growls are heard growing closer. Fear fully sets in, and the terrified sheep runs swiftly away as fast and as far as its strength will take it. But the wolves quickly close in. The little sheep finds itself surrounded by the snarling wolves with teeth bared as they move in for the kill (much like our sins, when they find us out). Death and fearful destruction seems to be certain to the young sheep.

As the wolves attack and begin to tear, the helpless young sheep cries out in deepest distress. Then it hears the voice of the seeking shepherd calling its name. What a wonderful sound. Hope springs up, and the strong shepherd directly appears, and he is mighty to save. He quickly dispatches the cowardly but destructive wolves with the rod in his powerful hand, and carefully takes the little injured sheep in his arms. The shepherd gently carries it back to the sheepfold where the other sheep are safely kept. He patiently and lovingly cleanses it and binds up its wounds. He watches over it and nourishes it with every needful thing until it becomes strong again.

After this life changing experience, the wounded little sheep has a newfound love and trust for the shepherd. Its desire now is to be constantly near him and to hear his comforting voice and to feel his loving touch. The recovered sheep is now content to follow the shepherd, and is careful to abide peaceably within the flock. If any sheep should push or shove another, the wise shepherd quickly and quietly settles any disturbance in the flock. The trusting sheep now keeps an eye and an ear continuously toward the shepherd, and considers its safe place in the flock.

The Good Shepherd cares for the sheep all the days of its life, even down to old age. In its final days, when the sheep is too weak to keep up with the flock, the Shepherd picks it up and carries it like a lamb in his bosom. And its journey through the wilderness peacefully ends there as it began --- under the watch-care and tender love of the Good Shepherd. And during its whole life, even when unaware --- underneath were the everlasting arms. Jesus said, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me: and I give them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand."

This was written in love, I trust, and in hope of eternal life.

Circular Letter

The Church at Oak Grove sends our love and fellowship to all those of like precious faith throughout the country, and we trust as the Apostle Paul, that your soul prospers. For one's soul to prosper is not like the world to amass fortune or fame. It is more like the songwriter who penned a song "Lord, don't spare me anything that will draw me closer to thee." As one is drawn closer to the Lord, he or she may go through many sufferings, heartaches, trials, sorrows, griefs, and pain. Certainly, the opposite of what the world would think, but as Job and so many other of the writers throughout the scriptures realized, these experiences only caused them to see and understand the great mercies of a God who owns all things and controls all things and who was willing to leave the climes of Glory and come here and suffer far worse than anything we will ever experience, for the love of His bride, the Church. Having had these experiences draws one on bended knees to cry "Abba, Father!" and to truly say "Blessed be our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ." The world will never know the depth and sweetness of a "Lively Hope."

The Church at Oak Grove is Old School or Primitive in practice, believing in particular redemption of those chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world. We are independent in our services, not willing to lord over any of God's heritage, always wanting to be at each other's feet and we welcome any of like precious faith to fellowship with us.

The Church at Oak Grove has for many years held an annual meeting the last weekend of March, and this year it falls on the fourth weekend, (25th and 26th) Past meetings have had visitors from West Virginia, Virginia, Texas, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Kentucky, Ohio, California, the Carolinas, and other places. We extend a cordial welcome to all who can come and visit us.

The Church at Oak Grove is located on NC Highway 150 near the community of Churchland, NC. Physical address (for GPS) is above. We are approximately three (3) miles north on NC Hwy 150 from exit 84 on Interstate 85. Those coming from the south will cross the Yadkin river and take exit-84 to NC 150. Those coming from the north may continue on NC Hwy 52 south around Lexington bearing into Interstate 85 and then to exit 84 (before the river) to NC

Visitors from a distance usually come into the Quality Inn hotel, 101 Plaza Parkway, at Lexington, NC (Phone 336-243-2929). Some rooms have been set aside for the Oak Grove meeting at a discounted rate. You may call for reservations, or ask the clerk on arrival.

Several of the brothers, sisters and friends gather to meet, greet and fellowship at the hotel on Friday evening, and then, Lord willing, our services will begin on Saturday morning with singing at 9:30 AM and preaching at 10:00 AM. Many go back to the hotel on Saturday evening for singing and fellowship, and then on Sunday, singing at 9:30 AM and preaching at 10:00 AM. Lunch will be provided on both days and anyone wanting to bring a dish is welcome but not expected.

Your brothers and sisters in hope,

ROMANS 8: 8-17.

So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God.

But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.

And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness.

But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you.

Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh.

For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live.

For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.

For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.

VOICES OF THE PAST

MATTHEW 24:27-28.

"For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For wheresoever the carcase is, there will the eagles be gathered together."

Under the caption of "Views Wanted", we published in the June, 1942 issue of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, the request of sister Frank Loden, Quinlan, Texas, for some one to explain the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew. To be more specific, she asked, "Does it mean the final end of all things, or is it the end of Legal Jerusalem that is under consideration." Thus far there has not been any compliance with her request published. Perhaps the magnitude of the task has deterred others, and while we realize in advance what an undertaking it will be for us to attempt to adequately cover the subject. Since our mind has reverted to it several times during the past year, we shall present such views as we have regarding it. The position which we shall take is that the language in this chapter very definitely and very clearly shows that it has to do with the end of Legal Jerusalem, and not the end of this natural world. What we shall say will, therefore, be for the purpose of substantiating this point of view. We have selected the twenty-seventh and twenty eighth verses as a text for the reason that we feel they, more than any other verses in the chapter, lead us to the crux of the matter. Let us here get before us again the words of the text, in order that they may be fresh in our minds: "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For wheresoever the carcase is, there will the eagles be gathered together." Whatever our Lord had in mind, there was to be nothing half way or incomplete about it, for his reference to the lightning coming out of the east and shining unto the west most certainly signified that it would be complete, far-reaching and all-embracing in its effects, and he used this illustration to show that, also, or in like manner and degree, would the coming of the Son of man be. Again we say, whatever it was Jesus had under consideration, it was to be accompanied by death and destruction, for he said, "Wheresoever the carcase is, there will the eagles be gathered together." Had he meant the destruction of this literal world he would hardly have followed it up with any such statement as the eagles gathering around the carcase, for when this natural world is destroyed there will be no eagles or anything else left to gather together.

Let us now make a brief review of some of the things contained in the chapter. In the first verse it is said, "Jesus went out, and departed from the temple." The wonderful building or group of buildings which constituted the temple, which were constructed of huge and choice stones and requiring forty and six years to assemble or put them together at Jerusalem, were symbolical of the form of worship under the law, under which Jesus came as priest, and the very fact of his taking his departure from the temple indicated that the end of that world, or age, was fast approaching. In the second verse, Jesus said that not one stone would be left remaining upon another, so complete would be its overthrow. In the third verse his disciples asked when those things which he had referred to would be accomplished, and what would be the sign of his coming, and the end of the (that particular) world. He answered them first with a caution that they, "Take heed that no man deceive you" for, he said, many would come in his name, claiming to be the Christ, and would deceive many. He then proceeded to enumerate the things which would take place before the actual destruction of the city of Jerusalem, or what it typified. He said there would be wars and rumors of wars; that nation would rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, and that there would be famines, pestilences and earthquakes, in divers places, all of which would be only the beginning of sorrow. He continued by telling them that they would be delivered up to be afflicted and killed, and would be hated of all nations for his sake; that many of them would be offended, betraying and hating one another; that false prophets would arise and that iniquity would abound, etc., and he concluded this by saying: "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Those who are familiar with the history of the Jews will undoubtedly agree that all of the things Jesus referred to actually came to pass, including the desolation prophesied of by Daniel, and the things spoken of in verses sixteen to twenty-four inclusive. If any one should question this let him read Josephus' works covering what the Roman Army did to the Jews. Jesus then said, "Behold, I have told you before. Wherefore, if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert; go not forth: behold, he is in the secret chambers, believe it not." And then follows our text. In this we are told (1) what the coming of the Son of man would be like --- the lightning which illuminates the whole world instantly and reveals the things of darkness. This had particular reference to the time when Jesus would occupy his mediatorial throne as King of kings, and Lord of lords in the gospel kingdom, and when that time came the ceremonial law with all that went with it was to be at an end. Therefore when the kingdom of our Lord was fully established here in the world the Jewish system was dead, and as it existed at that time has been dead ever since and will forever remain dead, for sacrifices are no longer offered in the manner that they were before Jesus came and set up his kingdom here in the world. We understand that the Romans had on their banners and standards the emblem of an eagle. To the Jews the eagle was an unclean bird, and vulture-like did the Romans at the time of destroying their city of Jerusalem prey upon them, their wives and their children. The temple was so completely torn down that not one stone remained upon another, as Jesus had said, and what the Romans did to the Jews symbolized what Jesus had foretold his disciples would be the end of that world. The Romans were the eagles that gathered together around that dead carcass of the Jewish dispensation.

Jesus having told them of the utter destruction of the Jewish economy, etc., then began he to tell them what would follow. He said, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken: And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Mat. 24:29-30. We do not understand that he was referring to the natural sun, moon, stars and powers of the heavens, but that he was speaking figuratively (1) of the total abolishment of the rites and ordinances of the Jewish heavens, and (2) of his appearing as the Son of man, coming in the clouds of the gospel heavens with power and great glory. Then be would send forth his angels, or gospel ministers, with the great sound of a trumpet (the gospel) and gather together his elect from the four winds of heaven. This is a portion of the work he is carrying on here in the world today.

Now, please listen, kind reader, for Jesus is still speaking and as usual when he speaks it is important, and this is what he says: "Now learn a parable of the fig tree; When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled." Those things were actually fulfilled before the passing of that generation, and there were those, John for one, who might be called as a witness, but Jesus' own words should seal it forever. He followed those declarations with these words: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Mat. 24:35.

The balance of the chapter is, to us, in the form of an admonition to those whom he calls and qualifies to follow and represent him here in this age in which we now live. As the Jews could not tell just what was the first or the last thing that began or ended the dealings of the Lord with them in that experience, neither do we know the exact beginning of God's dealings with us, nor can we foresee or conjecture what our end here in this life will be. Therefore it behooves us not to sleep, as others do, but to be on the alert, and do as our Lord told his disciples, "Take heed that no man deceive you. For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ, and shall deceive many."

We have honestly endeavored to give the right interpretation of this portion of the written word; however, we make no claim to infallibility and, therefore, we recommend to our sister, and to all of our other readers as well, that they carefully compare what we have here written with the word of God and accept or reject, any or all of what we have said by that standard. Our desire is that God should forbid that we should intentionally attempt to deceive his people, but we may be deceived ourself, and if so we are in the dark and cannot shed any light on this subject. We are persuaded, however, that what we have presented here concerning this Scripture is the truth. We will leave the matter with our readers to ponder over, earnestly hoping that they will prayerfully read their Bible in order to see what it teaches.

A BRIEF SYNOPSIS OF THE LIFE AND EXPERIENCE OF THE AUTHOR

Elder John F. Johnson
Lawrenceburg, Ky., August 1, 1876

Our family record shows that I was born in Culpepper Co., Va., on the 7th Day of November, 1800, after which event my parents, John and Margaret Johnson, (formerly Margaret Sale), resided in that and in Fauquier County for About three years, and then removed to Monongalia (now Marion) County, W. Va. There were one brother and two sisters older, and two brothers and one sister younger than myself. Our names were consecutively Anthony S., Agnes A., Rebecca, John F., Nathaniel, Charles S. and Lucinda. All have passed away except myself and youngest brother, who now resides in Compton, California. The years of my minority were spent partly in labor and partly in acquiring an education and teaching school. When about twenty-one years old my father advised me to engage in the study of the medical science, which I did, and prosecuted it for about five years. On the first day of March, 1827, I was married to Catharine C. Mellet, and was principally engaged in building and preparing for a living until May 18, 1828, when my first son, Joseph Alva Johnson, was born, who is now somewhat extensively known in the United States and Canada as an Old School Baptist minister. I was somewhat engaged in the practice of medicine until October, 1829, when we moved to Henry County, Indiana. There I might have been called a pioneer, though the country was rapidly settled soon after my arrival there. The country was much addicted to chills, fevers and other maladies, and I was soon, engaged in a heavy practice of medicine. Long before this I had given the subject of religion some attention, and thought I succeeded pretty well in laying in a stock of what the apostle calls "our religion", but subsequently had been frequently alarmed at the sight of my native sinfulness. But about this time my fears were fearfully intensified. In my first convictions, being unmarried, I was determined not to yield to this state of moodiness, but would drive it away. It would ruin my enjoyment with my youthful associates, which I highly appreciated, being naturally of a cheerful, lively temperament. In order to banish those forebodings, if possible, I became a worse man practically than I ever had been. I had been taught and my pride impelled me to maintain an honorable moral character, and perhaps had succeeded as well as the most of young men. But to let it be publicly known that I was becoming religious would never do, would dash with vinegar the cup of enjoyment with my young companions. I therefore attended frolics, dancing parties and other places of vain amusement, always endeavoring to evade the watchfulness of my parents, who were accused of making me a pet or favorite, and who I always wished to venerate. But now there was no way of shaking off this intolerable burden. I had vainly thought before, when conscious that the eye of God was upon me, that I could appease his wrath by doing better when I got ready; but now that subterfuge was gone. How clearly I now see that had the compassionate Lord been as ready to let me go as I was to wander from him, my doom would have been terrible indeed. But in the early part of the year 1830 he made me see, yes, feel that his arrows of conviction were not to be resisted.

"I felt the arrows of distress,
And found I had no hiding place."

The fearful catalogue of crimes that had polluted my whole former life was indeed a fearful sight to look upon. What I once thought to be little sins now appeared to be mountains. But what was I to do now? The Lord had warned me of my danger, but I had spurned his admonitions. A fearful cloud seemed to be gathering over my guilty head, ominous of a speedy and dreadful destruction. My wailing, my prayers, my entreaties were all unavailing. A wrathful and vindictive God had hidden himself behind the cloud that my prayers could not pass through. The lone desert seemed the most suitable place for me, for I desired not to see or converse with anyone. It was not the fear of hell that so terribly affrighted, but an awful view of my doleful, sinful nature. Sin indeed had become exceeding sinful, and God had forsaken, given me up, as I verily believed. Never can I forget one dreary, gloomy night, when restless, sleepless, mourning, despairing, I lay upon my bed, and thought that I could as well sleep upon a bed of thorns as there. My dear companion asked what was the matter. I told her that I was a poor, miserable, condemned sinner. She then asked me if I thought that the Lord would be just in condemning me. I told her that I could not see that he could be just in doing otherwise. Then she said she did not think I would feel so much longer. I then said I feared I should forever. She had passed through a similar scene not long before.

I lay thus restless until about one o'clock, when falling into a doze or stupor, (could not tell which; have often wished I had remained wide awake, perhaps I would then have known about the matter), all at once I was aroused by the sound of my name, not upon my natural organs of hearing, but upon my very heart. I was amazed, and wondered what it meant. One of my patients at the time was an elderly Baptist preacher. Had a messenger from him really called me? All this was momentary; but the voice went on, "The Master is come, and calleth for thee," in the same feeling sensation upon my heart. My trouble and distress were all gone, I knew not how or where. I felt calm and pleasant. I did not know the words were scripture language.

I asked my wife if there was a candle convenient. She asked what I wanted with it. I wanted to see the Bible. "O," said she, "lie still and go to sleep, 'twill not be long till day," I did remain, and had a refreshing sleep, for I had slept but little for several nights. Soon as it was light enough I arose, took the Bible, opened and read, but it was new book to me. The seals appeared to be opened, and it spoke in the sweetest accents. The promises were to me, and every line was fraught with consolation, and I could not conjecture why it was so, but wondered why I had never seen it so before. I read it till perhaps half an hour by sun, when my wife asked me to drive up the cows. I went, and while driving them through a beautiful sugar grove, I saw my Savior; not with my natural eyes, for my head was down and he was above, it seemed, at an angle of about forty-five degrees, the loveliest object that mortal ever beheld, and I raised my head, expecting to see him with my natural eyes; but no. Yet the most beautiful scenery met my eyes that I had ever beheld. That beautiful grove through which the sun was brightly shining with all his morning glory, seeming to gild every leaf with a supernatural luster. Had all the leaves been hung with the richest jewels they could not have been more beautiful. The very heavens seemed to declare the glory of God and the firmament to show his handiwork. Overwhelmed and overcome with the sublime and majestic scene, I fell upon my knees and poured out my petitions to my great Deliverer.

For a week or ten days all was bright; my mind was carried back into eternity, and there I saw the way of salvation complete in Jesus, and exactly suited to my case. I believed, too, that what he had done for me was his own work, and that he never would suffer it to be undone.

We went to the next church meeting, and five of us, including my wife and self, related our experiences to the church and were received and baptized on the fourth Sunday in June, 1830.

I think the glorious view of my dear Savior had engrossed my whole attention and diverted my mind entirely from my sinful self, causing me to think my sins were all gone and I should be troubled with them no more. But after continuing for awhile in that happy state of mind I was made to look back at my depraved nature, and there I saw to my sad surprise that I was still in my nature a polluted sinner. Now the startling question was propounded, Am I deceived? Is it all a delusion at last? This set me to searching the scriptures, and I was much relieved in finding that the ancient saints complained of their sinfulness. Paul said he was the chief of sinners near the end of his days. I soon found that my way was not pleasant as I had anticipated. Many times since I have found this verified. Still new trials awaited me. The church increased until another deacon was thought to be needed. This was named at one meeting to be taken under consideration, and choose a deacon at the next. Between the meetings I learned that it had been whispered that I would be a suitable one and was startled at the idea. I set my mind upon another, and busily went around among the members recommending him. While thus engaged an old brother observed that he thought brother Johnson would make a good deacon. I begged of him not to harbor such a thought, pleading the short time I had been a member and my unfitness. The church was convened, voted by ballot, and the Moderator reported me chosen. It was a severe shock. I plead to be excused, but all in vain. I yet think that the choice was premature. I tried to content myself by concluding that I belonged to the church and ought to be subject to her order.

But ere long a still heavier trial awaited me, and I have often feared that it originated in my own imagination. But be that as it may, the thought was impressed upon my mind that I must preach the gospel. But O, who was I? The most unfit, unworthy, unqualified in every respect. I tried to banish the thought from my mind, but in vain. There it lay like a dismal incubus. What a fool I was to harbor such thoughts. But there they were, a continual burden. But I determined not to let anyone know that I ever indulged such thoughts, but would keep them to myself. I could not, however, at all times drive the gloom from my countenance, and from that circumstance, or some other cause, the brethren suspected and would sometimes question me about it; but still I resolved to keep it concealed. One brother unwittingly drew from me an answer to a question that he propounded, which I discovered; begged of him not to say anything about it to anyone, but it was all in vain; it went out and was a general subject of conversation in the neighborhood, and soon in everybody's mouth. I was sent a messenger to a corresonding association. The meeting commenced on Friday and continued until Sunday afternoon. I started home on Saturday after the business and preaching ended, and wending my way along the dismal and gloomy looking road, feeling very miserable indeed, I promised the Lord that if he would spare me until the church meeting, I would lay my case before the church and abide her decision. But when the time came I could not take courage to do so. After the meeting was over I was shocked on reflecting that I had lied to God, and it was terrible to think of. On riding along the road with the pastor of the church, with trembling I ventured to ask him the question, "Is it not hard for a man to undertake to do a thing that he knows he cannot do?" He broke out into a hearty laugh. I cannot describe my feelings at that time, for I felt solemn as death. "Now," said he, "you are thinking about preaching." After some conversation on the subject he told me that he had said the day he baptized me that I would have To preach. I told him that I wanted him to advise me what to do. He replied, I shan't do it, only to tell you to go before the church next Saturday, and tell them what you have told me and take their advice." Here I was in a fix again; could I presume to do so? The day arrived, and after preliminary business of the church was attended to, the Moderator observed, "If anyone has anything to say to the church, say on." I sat behind him dumb, (was the Clerk of the church at the time), But could not venture to speak. He turned to me, and speaking low, asked me if he should name my case to the church. I made no reply. He then told the church that He had had some conversation with me about preaching; and turning to me again, Said, "Get up and tell the church how your mind has been exercised." I thought I Had to obey, arose, and spoke perhaps ten minutes, so full that I could scarcely find utterance, and then resumed my seat. While speaking I cast my eye over the audience, and could not see one eye that was not shedding tears.

After talking the matter over, liberty was given me to exercise my gift, and then the question came up as to the bounds that should be allowed me. One named the church, another the association, when the old deacon arose and said, "Send it to the ends of the earth"; and so the church decided, giving me liberty to exercise my gift wherever God in his providence might cast my lot. This had not been customary with the churches, and still causes me to think the church reposed an undue confidence in me. After the business was done the pastor, without consulting me, made an appointment at the church that night for me, telling the brethren to come out and hear me.

Brethren, can you imagine what my feelings were at that time? I had never even attempted to utter a prayer in public. I had once tried to prepare myself for that emergency, for I expected to be called on. Being at home entirely alone one Sunday, I got my pen, ink and paper, with the view of writing out the nicest prayer that I could, then commit it to memory for use when needed. I went to work, and I think wrote four or five lines across the sheet, when I became so confused in my mind I could not think of another word to write, and the more I tried to collect my thoughts the more they seemed to be scattered, until I suppose that my mind was as much confounded as was the language of the Babel builders on the plains of Shinar. I tore off the slip of paper on which I had been writing, (for no one must see it) thinking I would walk out and commit it to memory, and then return and write more. But it is true that I never could, nor ever did commit those few lines to memory, and perhaps know as little today as to their contents as any who may read this. I could commit hymns, songs, scripture and other writings perhaps as readily as the most of persons, but this was too much for me.

Was I not in a pretty fix to get up before an audience, open meeting by singing and prayer, then preach? But I got through somehow, but the how I know not. An old brother remarked, "It can't be beat"; meaning, however, that it was true, and the truth could not be beat. After the church started me to work they kept me at it, would generally have appointments for me once, twice, and sometimes three times a week. I believe there were at one time five preachers in the church, (if I could be called one), and yet I was sent to do nearly all the distant traveling, and sometimes to labor under serious difficulties. Having a numerous family of small children, it often required all my diligence to keep them along; but in the dispensation of a kind providence I was enabled to maintain, raise and educate them in a respectable manner, and have now nine living in Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Kentucky.

In the first few years of my ministerial labors I was in the habit of speaking entirely too fast, thereby exhausting my lungs considerably at times, especially when attending meetings for several consecutive days, speaking twice a day frequently, and sometimes even three times in a day. At times I would unconsciously place my hand to my breast as a support, and frequently on retiring to bed would suffer much from pain in my breast, so that some of my friends (not Baptist) advised me to quit preaching, telling me it would bring on consumption. My answer was, if it did, I could not die in a better cause. I determined, however, to overcome the habit if possible, convinced as I was, and still am, that fast, loud speaking is very injurious to the lungs; while I am as thoroughly convinced that public speaking, even if it be loud, will improve the lungs, provided time is given them to recuperate the air-cells to fill up between sentences.

I make these remarks for the benefit of young speakers, and even some older ones, and think I speak advisably when I say that I am a living witness of the benefit of this precaution, having tried and proved it to my entire satisfaction.

After overcoming the habit of speaking too fast, I recollect passing through Ohio, having appointments published for fifteen days, and in that time spoke twenty-nine times, and my lungs were as free and more clear than when I commenced, for I was a little hoarse at the commencement from a slight cold; but after speaking a few times it passed off, and I felt no more of it. But perhaps I have said enough on this subject, and will proceed with my narrative.

I have now been engaged in proclaiming the gospel of my Master's kingdom for about forty years, and at times found it to be the most comfortable employment that I ever pursued; and at other times the most trying, perplexing and humiliating.

How joy-inspiring to the church maintaining the "unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace", with love and fellowship abounding amongst them, and then to feel the presence of the dear Redeemer; the light beaming from his lovely countenance, opening the scriptures to our understanding; to feel the emotions of love to him, to his cause and to his people, and then to find him filling our mouth when we open it to proclaim the animating strains, the heart-soothing messages of the gospel of the blessed God, to be a partaker with the dear saints of the sustaining, refreshing and solacing fruit of the Spirit, consisting of that love that expands the heart with a fullness more than it can contain, and which "runneth over", and spreads like a shoreless ocean, and peace that flows like a river, meandering the streets of the New Jerusalem, and driving from her enchanted precincts the cruel god of war, disdaining all carnal weapons, beating swords into plow-shares and spears into pruning-hooks, with which to cultivate the garden of God, then follows long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, driving from the residence of the family circle of the lowly saints the cruel demons of hatred, variance, wrath, strife, etc., leaving the family in the full possession of the above named fruit, to feast and rejoice in hope of the glory of God, while these beatitudes are participated among and reciprocated by the Saints, and while faith feeds for the present, and anticipates the exhaustless fullness of the inheritance of the saints in light. How cheering and how delightful to publish the tidings of salvation under such circumstances.

But on the other hand, to have the sable curtains of night enshrouding us, and spreading a solemn, mournful gloominess over the entire household, no cheering ray to penetrate the doleful darkness, no pleasant fruit or cooling draught to reach the craving appetite, to cool the tongue or quench the thirst of the hungry, craving, thirsty sinner, while the lovely Lamb with his meat and drink and ample fullness seems to be hidden behind the cloud that our prayers cannot pass through; and withal, those demons of war, hatred, wrath, etc., lusting against the Spirit, and blasting like a withering mildew its precious fruit --- no gladdening streams of love or charming strains of music to break the solemn gloominess; and if we attempt to raise a song our harps hang silent upon the willows, and should we attempt to strike a cord it sounds more like a formal requiem than an animating strain.

"In vain we tune our formal songs,
In vain we strive to rise;
Hosannas languish on our tongues,
And our devotion dies."

Under such circumstances, to attempt to preach the gospel is toilsome work indeed; and we can as soon bring up the sun at midnight, as we can command and cause one ray of light to rise out of and penetrate this chaos of darkness; of which I have had many testimonials, and will here name one or two instances, as samples of the many that have thronged my ministerial pathway.

Not long after my commencement in that solemn and momentous work, I think it was on Monday, a most lovely text of scripture occurred to my mind. It appeared to contain all that was necessary to fill out an ample and complete gospel sermon, and I commenced laying up a store for my appointment on the following Sunday, and continued to lay up all the week. On one occasion I started to get the Bible to read, but turned away, fearing I might see something that would divert my mind from my good text. On Sunday I reached the place of meeting and found the house well filled; my text, however, not looking quite so clear and full as it had done; nevertheless I thought to gather up my store as I passed along. After opening the services and reading my text a dark pall seemed to have fallen over me; I wearied along for perhaps five or ten minutes and sat down, covered with shame and blushing with confusion. Another minister had come to my meeting, and preached to the people. I think now, it was a necessary chastisement.

On another occasion I set out early Sunday morning for meeting, where two of us, both rather new beginners, had an appointment at a private residence, and another good text occurred to me. I commenced preaching on it immediately, (in my mind), and was as merrily engaged at my work as were the birds that sang around me, and really thought that I was doing quite well, rather finely. A sentence entered my mind something like this: Now, if you could do as well when you get there as you do now, you might feel exalted. Well, I tried to pray earnestly to the Lord that I might never feel puffed up over anything that I had done. When I reached the place I found my brother preacher there, and he, generally preferring to speak first, went on. After he was through, I commenced, my text not looking quite so full as it had. I concluded, however, that I would not give it up as I had done before, knowing that there was much contained in the text, and I would find it if possible. I stammered, stumbled and blundered along for an hour perhaps, or more, and finally quit, worse mortified than before, for I had more fully exposed my ignorance, disgraced myself and the cause that I hoped I loved, and had not only done nothing, but much that was worse than nothing. I went immediately to my horse to go home, and, as I then thought, to stay there. The lady of the house came to the door and asked me what I was doing. I replied "Getting my horse." Let that horse be, until he is fed, and come back and get your dinner, said she. "I don't want any dinner", I replied. "But you are not to go one step till you get your dinner." "I don't want any dinner, sister", I again said. She kept on almost scolding, and ordering me to come back, but I paid no further attention to her, but mounted my horse and started for home, as miserable as a condemned criminal. I prayed to the Lord for a little relief until I could get home, determined never to make another appointment to preach; but I had not proceeded far until the latter clause of the fifth verse of the twelfth chapter of Hebrews, "My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord," etc., came to my relief. I quoted on to the close of the eighth verse, and when I was through felt perfectly satisfied and fully resigned. I thought then, and think yet, that if the Lord ever answered a prayer of mine, it was the one that I offered on my way to the meeting, not to be exalted. But it was not answered as I wished it to be, for I wanted to make a fine preach, and then not feel exalted; but the Lord knows best how to humble us. I was reminded of the language of the poet when he said,

> " 'Twas he who taught me thus to pray,
> And he, I trust, has answered prayer;
> But it has been in such a way,
> As almost drove me to despair."

These cases are presented as specimens of the depressing trials that have besieged me along a large portion of my toilsome pathway, and that have been so discouraging at times that I think I must have given out long ago had I not "obtained help of God." It has often been my lot to walk through darkness and have no light; still I have been enabled to hope that,

> "He that hath helped me hitherto,
> Will help me all my journey through."

I have at other times thought that the word of the Lord has been "a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path"; and then would be ready to "mount up on wings as eagles, to run and not be weary, to walk and not faint". At times I was disposed to complain of my lot. As before observed, I was sent to do most of the distant traveling, had given up the practice of medicine, did not like it, and did not think that a man could make a good doctor and a good Old School Baptist preacher at the same time, (am not yet certain that he can) besides, it kept me so much from my family and farm. We had settled in a new and heavily timbered country. In clearing out the farm and raising produce and stock for the support of the family, we were closely engaged. My labor was my principal dependence. I do not think that the churches helped me to the amount of ten dollars in the first five years of my labors, nor did I wish or expect it, for they, too, were in a new country, and had to encounter many hardships. I think that in those five years I was out on my professional work very nearly, if not quite, one-half of the laboring time; but we got along surprisingly. My sons were getting up so as to be considerable help. Joseph A. commenced plowing before he was eight years old, and the two next at about the same age. The land, though, was quite level, clear of rock, and very productive. After a few years we got our farm cleared of timber, and made our money principally by raising and selling hogs. I commenced in Indiana with a capitol of two hundred and seventy dollars, and when we left that country for Kentucky, sold property to the amount of twelve thousand dollars; I have always had enough to live upon, and such as was better than I deserved, and have no doubt but that I always shall have enough, hoping that I have the "promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." But the goodness and mercy of the Lord have been truly wonderful to me, in view of all my unworthiness. Of later years my brethren have helped me more, and for the last twenty years I have traveled quite extensively, and in the last passed forty years I feel well assured that I have traveled a distance that would reach more than three, and perhaps four times around the globe on which we live; but with all my troubles, and what I thought to be hardships, I have had some delightful scenes, and, as I hoped, seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, and have had satisfactory evidence that it takes but a short enjoyment of heaven's beatitudes, communicated directly from the Lord, to compensate for all the ills that flesh is heir to. To meet the saints in company to worship, to find them all keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, to hear them with melodious voices hymning the high praises of their God and Savior, then to hear the glorious gospel of the blessed God proclaimed in all its rich fullness, and joyfully received with all in its divine benignity, emotions of love swelling every heart and beaming in every feature, one hour in such employ inspires more real joy than all the world can give.

"To spend one day with thee on earth, Exceeds a thousand days of mirth."

And "I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness." But it is,

"By glimmering hopes and gloomy fears,
We trace the sacred road;
Through dismal deeps and dangerous snares,
We make our way to God."

However, the toils and trials of this mortal life are but momentary, and its boasted wealth and honor visionary and evanescent, while the prospect of a "better country" bears up the depressed spirit of the way-worn pilgrim, and we are enabled to unite in the solemn ditty of the poet,

"Are darkness and distress my share,
Give me to trust thy guardian care;
Enough for me, if love divine,
At length through every cloud shall shine."

Your brother in hope of a better country,

J. F. JOHNSON.

INTRODUCTORY LETTER
Castle, Henry Co., Ind.,
March 18,1846

Brother Beebe:

I for some time past have occasionally read your paper, and believing that you contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, I now, together with some of my brethren, wish to become a subscriber. You are unacquainted with me, and I will therefore endeavor to give you a few sketches of my former life.

I was a sinner from my very birth, and most of my days have been spent in a way calculated to destroy myself, and dishonor that beneficent Being whose liberal bounty sustained me, and whose matchless goodness and power preserved me. Indeed, I have been made to conclude that it was a signal display of his forbearance and mercy that such a rebel was suffered to live, and participate in the common blessings of this life. I was under the restraint of pious parents, and particualarly a mother, who lived many years and died a member of the old regular Baptist Church, who took great pains in teaching me many moral lessons; and I cannot say that I did not present to the world what men generally term a fair character. But the mischief was within, for there was a heart deceitful and desperately wicked above all things; and I did not, neither could I, know it. I often went to meeting, and heard, I suppose, almost all sorts of preaching. Sometimes I heard of the joys of heaven, and sometimes of the pains of hell. Heaven presented no joys to me; but often when meditating upon a frightful place of endless torment my natural fears were aroused, and I at length resolved to become religious, that I might escape punishment. I had heretofore thought this a considerable task, but found it (as the Arminians say) to be as easy as to turn my hand over; for I made, as I thought, wonderful progress in religious matters, but did not make a formal profession for fear of being less thought of by some of my young companions, (religion not being quite so fashionable then as at present), but postponed the time of making it public until I should change my manner of living, yet continued at some times to hold my religion very sacred, and at other times I would make such blunders as would almost cause me to conclude that I had fallen from grace, and again I would set hard at work to regain the ground that I had lost. At length I took to myself a companion, but the business that necessarily followed had a tendency to wear out my religion, rather than cause me to make a public, profession of it, and I therefore lost it.

This is a short account of my religious career, and what was it that prompted me to it? The fears of torment. What did it consist in? self-righteousness, and consequently self-applause. How did I get it? By my works. How did I keep it? By my works. How did I lose it? By my works. And so it was all works and no grace; my deceitful, wicked heart was untouched by the love of God, I was deaf to the sound of salvation through a Redeemer crucified, blind to the beauty and excellency of a Savior, for he appeared to me as a root out of dry ground. I was destitute of an understanding of that eternal, unchangeable and sure plan of salvation that is exhibited in the covenant of grace; and such religion as I first had I fear constitutes a great part of that which is so much talked about and boasted of in the present day.

But to return to my story. I removed from Virginia to Indiana in the fall of 1829, and in the spring of 1830 I hope the Lord was pleased to dispel, by the light of his Spirit some of the gross darkness that enshrouded my mind, and enable me to realize in some degree my true character. But O! The malignity of my heart and the turpitude of my nature were awful to behold; and while he portrayed to me my miserably defiled character, he seemed to give me an exhibition of his own infallible purity. But how great the contrast! Uncontaminated by any of the crimes that blackened mine, he appeared indeed undefiled and full of glory! His righteous law appeared to be uttering awful accents against me, while vindictive justice, with stern grasp, seemed to hold his uplifted sword to slay the culprit; and what I had formerly thought to be my good works, and of which I had so much boasted, now appeared as filthy rags. And were dashed to the shades at once. I could now plead for mercy, but justice appeared to have cut off all its avenues. Then in my miserable condition I could only cry, "Lord, save, I perish", while an intolerable load of guilt seemed to be pressing me down, and under which I groaned, being burdened. It appears to me that if ever there was a soul that stood in need of sovereign, free, distinguishing and saving grace at any time, I did at that time; and those who have passed through a similar scene, and may see this, can probably better judge of my feelings than I can express them, upon hearing the soul-cheering words, "The Master is come, and calleth for thee," and upon feeling a bosom that had been so long filled with darkness, and a mind that had been so grievously tormented and writhing under a burden of guilt and distress, at once relieved of it all.

Never can I forgot the beautiful morning in the month of June, when the heavens appeared to open to my view, and present the loveliest object that a poor, lost sinner ever beheld. That bosom, which a little while before had felt as if it must burst with grief, now appeared to be expanded with the love of God. The beautiful grove that overshadowed me, and which the morning sun was just tinging with its beautiful hue, appeared to wave with exquisite beauty, and bow with profound reverence to its all-glorious Author, while all creation seemed to reiterate the praise of that "Word" that had spoken her into existence. The evidence that I then seemed to have of my many, and aggravated crimes greatly humbled me, and the sight of the Lovely One that had borne my sins in his own body on the tree appeared to fill me with joy unspeakable and full of glory. When I opened and perused the revealed will of my heavenly Father and Benefactor, it was a most precious theme to me, but never had been before; hence I am made to conclude that the gospel was designed to give food, comfort and instruction to the living, and not life to the dead. I fondly, but vainly anticipated continual joy through my following days, but O, how sadly I have been mistaken in this, for I find still belonging to me a nature averse to all that is good; and I have been experimentally taught that it is through much tribulation that we must enter the kingdom.

I was baptized in June, 1830, with my companion and three others. It seemed to be a time of much rejoicing with the little church (Lebanon) with which we united, and with whom I have had many comfortable seasons, and some sorrowful ones mingled with them. I was called to labor in my Master's vineyard in 1837, and as I had been thoroughly convinced of his sovereignty in the dispensation of his grace and mercy, both in his word and by my own experience, I have been constrained to contend for it. Surely his love is sovereign, for he has loved his elect with everlasting love, and when they were dead in sins. His choice is sovereign, for they were chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world. His grace is sovereign, for it was given us in him before the world began. His mercy is sovereign, for he will have mercy on whom he will, and whom he will he hardeneth. Thus he exhibits to us in his word an unalterable and eternal way of salvation by grace, and grace only, one which Satan nor sin has ever been able to overthrow or effect the least change in. Such a way as this is well adapted to the situation of his children, who by nature are children of wrath, and dead in, trespasses and sins, and calculated, too, to wrest the honor from the hands of man, and place the laurels and palms of victory upon the head of the Redeemer, who is worthy of all honor, glory, dignity and majesty forever. I have therefore had many trying scenes to pass through, not only in mind, but my body has not escaped violence.

But I forbear to say any more at present upon this unpleasant part of my subject. Suffice it to say, that the people who are trying to steal the name of Baptists, and who boast loudly of their great works in "the furtherance of the Gospel," appear to be the most inveterate enemies of the truth. I have found many such in Indiana, Ohio and Virginia, where I have traveled; many who are called Baptists, but comparatively few who appear to be chosen Baptists. But I must not complain, for with those few I have had many comfortable seasons, for which I should continually thank my great Benefactor and Preserver; and not only for these, but for the manifestation of his kind, supporting hand in my much weakness and under all my trials, for "surely goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life."

Yours in the bonds of love,
Elder J. F. Johnson.

THE SOULS CONFESSION AND REQUEST.

"Behold, I will hedge up thy way with thorns." — Hoa. ii 6.

The way I take most gracious Lord,
When not directed by thy word,
Then, I, from my experience say,
The Lord, in love, has hedged my way,

It's right he should, the word, says so;
If not, O Lord, where should I go?
To hell! I think, so truly say,
The Lord, to love, has hedged my way.

For thorns, indeed, to flesh unkind,
Oppose my steps, and pain my mind;
I must be so; the Lord does say,
"Behold, I will hedge up thy way."

Oh! what rich mercy, gracious God,
Is manifested by thy rod;
For every stroke to me does say;
It is thy Lord who hedged thy way,

And now, dear Lord, assuage my grief;
Cause thy sweet word to yield relief;
Grace give, that I go not astray,
Or still, my Lord, hedge up my way,

Do thou restore salvation's joys,
And then in praise, lift up my voice,
To thee, who, when I went astray,
Fulfill'd thy word, and hedged my way.

ELDER CLAUDE CASEY HAND

God, at His appointed time, has called from our midst a dear friend and Elder, Claude Casey Hand. He was born on April 4, 1923, and died on February 14, 2017, at 93 years of age. He was preceeded in death by his parents, a brother and a sister. He is survived by his wife of 69 years, Irene Hudson Hand, two sons, two grandsons, one granddaughter, one great-granddaughter and one great-grandson.

Elder Hand proudly served in the United States Army during World War II, as private first-class. He also worked for Alabama Power Company for 25 years and retired at the age of 55. His early retirement enabled him to be available to officiate a vast number of funerals.

He was called to minister and was ordained as an Elder in 1963. He served for 54 years. He served the churches of Hopewell in Fayette, Alabama; New Prospect in Sulligent, Alabama; Old Union in Winfield, Alabama; Harmony in Belk, Alabama; and Mt. Zion in Birmingham, Alabama. He also served Little Hope in Vernon, Alabama; Dorsey Creek in Bremen, Alabama; and Harmony in Hiram, Georgia near Atlanta, to the entire satisfaction of all. He was a great friend, a blessing, an advisor and an inspiration to many and was widely known and respected from Texas to Georgia, North Carolina, West Virginia to Canada.

Elder Hand was blessed to speak his last sermon on the first Sunday in December of 2016 at Old Union in Winfield, Alabama. As he began to get weaker with his illness, his God given gift was not exercised in the congregation of God's people again. He was perfectly resigned to the will of Him whom he had tried to serve for so many years.

Always vigilant and watchful and being ever ready and forward in the discharge of his ministry. He was ever mindful to entertain strangers and his house was at all times a home for his brethren and friends. He was a kind and affectionate husband, dad and granddad. He was highly esteemed by all who knew him. He was uncompromising in the faith and the doctrine of the Old School Baptist.

Thus, the bereaved family will mourn the loss of a husband, dad and granddad; the community a worthy citizen; and the church a beloved brother and Elder. However, we mourn not as those without hope. We of the churches he served, family and friends will miss him. His long pilgrimage is now ended. We hope to be submissive to the will of our Heavenly Father. May the Lord heal the breach by His grace.

Written by one with a like precious hope.

HYMN

I know that my Redeemer lives;
What comfort this sweet sentence gives
He lives, he lives, who once was dead,
He lives, my ever-living head.

He lives to bless me with his love,
He lives to plead for me above;
He lives my hungry soul to feed,
He lives to help in time of need.

He lives to grant me fresh supply,
He lives to guide me with his eye;
He ives to comfort me when faint,
He lives to hear my soul's complaint.

He lives to silence all my fears,
He lives to stoop and wipe my tears;
He lives to calm my troubled heart,
He lives all blessings to impart.

He lives, my kind,wise, heavenly Friend,
He lives and loves me to the end;
He lives, and while he lives I'll sing,
He lives, my Prophet, Priest and King.

He lives, all glory to his name!
He lives eternally the same;
O! the sweet joy this sentence gives,
I know that my Redeemer lives.

"And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all of one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." Acts 2:1-4.

Elder Jerry B. Farmer

Jesus had led the perfect life without sin. He had spoken the words of life that no other man had ever spoken, and yet had been hated, mocked, and scourged. He then was cruelly nailed to a tree and left there to die the death of a base criminal, yet he had done nothing amiss. Nevertheless, no man took His life from Him, but He laid it down of Himself to redeem those He loved. He took His life up again on the third day according to the scriptures, and appeared to His apostles and disciples for forty days. He commanded them not to depart from Jerusalem, but to wait there for the promise of the Father. About one hundred twenty of them were gathered together in an upper room in Jerusalem and continued with one accord in prayer and supplication. They, by grace, were patiently waiting for the promise of God that they should receive power after the Holy Ghost should come upon them, and that they would be witnesses unto Jesus in Jerusalem, Judea, Samaria and unto the uttermost part of the earth.

This was to be a special time in the history of the church when the prophesies of God should be fulfilled. It was to be the particular manifestation of God showing His power in and upon his people as the church was about to be established visibly. When this manifestation came, Peter said, "But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel; And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions and your old men shall see dreams... " The true believers had been gathered from all parts of the world to experience this outpouring of the Spirit and to be sent back to their native places where the churches were to be established. These things they saw and heard, and they were empowered for the purposes of God to be accomplished in and through them.

We are given a true account of the things that transpired there. The question in my mind is this: does this account only give a report of the history of that day, or are there things hidden in it that are relevant and meaningful in our experience today? Only God is able to give us the true answer, which would be to His glory and to our comfort and edification. No man can do anything of himself. Everything about the heavenly kingdom is in a mystery that is too high and wide and broad and deep for us to know apart from the Holy Spirit. "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." May the Lord open to us the hidden treasures of knowledge and understanding according to His will and purpose?

On the day of Pentecost, it was manifest that there were true believers gathered together in one place and in one accord in obedience to the Lord's commands. I am made to believe that this was an example given for the church to follow today. By the grace of God, His people gladly obey the Lord's command to forsake not the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is. By grace, they also seek peace and ensue it. They are blessed to endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Their minds and hearts are knit together in love and truth. The Spirit of God in them causes them to bear the fruit of the Spirit, which is: love, joy, peace, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance against which there is no law. We see, in all the true churches that we have been blessed to know, that the children of God are given to walk in the light and to be in one accord. And they are given to speak the truth in love by the Holy Spirit that is in them.

It is a grief to mention, but there are many people who gather together in many places who are not doing so in obedience to the Lord's commands. They take hold of His name but deny His word. Jesus said, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" The prophet of old said, "And in that day seven women shall take hold on one man, saying, We will eat our own bread, and wear our own apparel: only let us be called by thy name, to take away our reproach." So it appears today. Many take His name to hide their wickedness, but eat their own bread (have their own doctrine) and wear their own apparel (have their own righteousness). There are many today who hate the doctrine of Christ. My family and I experienced it firsthand. Many years ago, when I was given to teach the doctrine election among them, they rose up against my family and me and hatefully cast us out from their midst. They vigorously deny election, true order, and the sovereignty of God. There are many who say that all men have faith contrary to the scripture. There are many who say that God wants to save everyone, and that salvation is according to the choice of individuals, and that salvation is not altogether by grace. But these things must be in the world.

All in the upper room in Jerusalem were waiting upon Him to fulfill His promise. They were powerless in themselves to cause anything to come about. Likewise, when we are brought together in meeting, it is mutually agreed, in the inward man, that we are weak and can do nothing of ourselves, and that we must wait upon the Lord. God's people have been taught to know that the preacher cannot preach without that power which comes down from above. All that are taught of God know that there are no 'able preachers' but rather 'enabled preachers', and that is only by the grace of God. They know that none can see, hear or understand anything unless their eyes are opened, their ears are unstopped, and their hearts made soft and tender to the things of the Spirit. They know that they must sit and wait upon the Lord for all things. I am made to believe it is much like the day when the Lord gave the loaves and the fishes to the disciples to distribute to the multitudes. The people who had nothing to eat were made to sit in groups and wait. The disciples had nothing to give to them except what the Lord blessed and broke and gave unto them to hand out. And they were commanded to take up the fragments after the people had eaten, and they took up twelve baskets. I am made to believe this was for the apostles' nourishment. It appears that the same is true of the preaching of the gospel. All must wait upon the Lord, for it all comes from Him. And the preachers are also nourished by the gospel that they are given to preach.

"And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all of one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven. Now when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together, and were confounded, because that every man heard them speak in his own language." As they were waiting, a great miracle occurred in their midst. They heard and saw and experienced things they had never known before. They heard the sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind. They saw cloven tongues like as of fire that sat upon each of them. They were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance. And every man heard them speak in his own language.

I cannot help believing that we have experienced a measure of this same grace of God from time to time. Can you not remember sitting and waiting upon the Lord in your meetings, longing and yearning for the blessed experience of feeling and knowing the Lord's presence and power? Can you not remember feeling such a great love for your brethren and friends in the faith that you felt to be altogether in one accord with them, having nothing against any one of them? Can you not remember times when your ministers were brought before you in such weakness and humility that you knew the Lord was near? Can you not remember times when you felt that your ministers were made to be a flaming fire in their preaching, and you believed surely the power of God in the Spirit was upon them? Can you not remember when your heart burned with the glowing fire of love for Jesus who gave His life for you and suffered for you in sorrow and grief unspeakable according to the gospel? Can you not remember times when you were made to believe and feel that He was wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquities, and that the chastisement of our peace was upon Him, and that every stripe He received was for our healing? Can you remember times when you felt that the preaching was just for you, in the very language that you understood and that fit your experience and condition?

Was it not at times such as these that you were made to know the fear of the Lord, which is the beginning of wisdom? Was it not at such times that you rejoiced to believe that Jesus is the Word of God and that the Word was with God and the Word was God, and in Him dwells the fullness of the Godhead bodily? Was it not then when you looked upon the great creation seeing that all was the handiwork of God made for His glory and our good? Was it not at these times that you joyfully acknowledged that God loved His people with an everlasting love, that He saved them and called them with a holy calling, not according to our works but according to His own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world was? Was it not then that you were made glad to rejoice in the gospel of grace, which says that He foreknew His people in love, predestinated them to be conformed to the image of His Son, called them out of darkness into His marvelous light, justified them from all sin, and glorified them?

I cannot help believing that when we are made to acknowledge the truth of the doctrine of God, it is because that fire is upon us and we are speaking in other tongues. A tongue is a language - not the gibberish of the false religions of the world. The Lord's people speak a pure language that the world cannot learn. They sing a new song in that language that only the redeemed of the Lord may sing. It is the language of grace without works. It is the language of a powerless people and an all-powerful God, whose strength is made perfect in weakness. The world hates it and tries to destroy it. This language shines the light on all the false doctrine, pride, hypocrisy, and the works of the flesh, and exposes those things for what they are. They hated Jesus for His words, and it is no surprise that they should hate you for yours. No matter what their circumstances, when the Spirit of God rests upon any of His people, much as the Holy Spirit did back there in the day of Pentecost, they cannot help but hear, love, rejoice, believe, trust, obey, hope, give thanks, and sing that new song of grace in other tongues as the Spirit gives them utterance. This is our portion here in this world of sin, persecution, and sorrow - and it is enough.

I trust this was written in love and in hope of eternal life.

VOICES OF THE PAST

"AND HIS BANNER OVER ME WAS LOVE"- SONG OF SOLOMON 2:4.

Elder Gilbert Beebe

That portion of the Scriptures which is so appropriately called "The Song of Songs", abounds with a rich variety of the most clear and striking figures for the instruction, comfort and edification of all who hath an ear to hear what the Spirit saith to the churches. While from the carnal mind of man the spirituality of this inspired and inspiring sound is altogether concealed, to the saints of the Most High, when opened and appropriated by the heavenly Comforter, it discloses much of the marrow and fatness of the gospel of God our Savior. The manner of the love of God bestowed on the saints, whereby they are called his sons, and the vital an indissoluble union of Christ and his church, are presented in the strongest! possible terms. In the conjugal relationship of the Beloved and the spouse, the fitness and force of the song is most pleasingly appropriate. The spouse, whose noblest theme has always been to declare what her Lord has done for her, in the immediate connection of our text, proclaims to all the daughters of Jerusalem, that as an apple tree, he had offered her a shadow from the burning heat of noon, and supplied her with the rich fruit which he bears for her comfort and support. "I sat down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste." While he had stayed or supported her with flagons, he had comforted her with apples, for the words of his mouth, the consolations of his words had been to her as apples of gold in pictures of silver. But he had not only seated her under his shadow, and made her to partake of the delicious fruits of the Tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God, but he had made for her a glorious entertainment, a cheering banquet, and had brought her to it. He had not merely made the provision for a banquet and sent her an invitation to attend, or offered her a chance upon condition of her willing or doing some thing, but she declares, "He brought me to the banqueting house," and thus she joyfully gives him all the praise. In connection with these testimonials of his sovereign goodness and distinguishing love to her, she adds, "And his banner over me was love".

Every regular army, every state and civilized nation, has its peculiar banner or standard, and distinguished from all others by some peculiar device or color, by which it may be readily known by those whose honor, interest or protection, it represents. As the church of Christ is a peculiar people, she requires a peculiar banner, distinct from every other banner; as a holy nation she requires a national standard, and as a marshaled host she must be identified by the unmistakable peculiarities of her flowing ensign. Hence the inspired psalmist says, "Thou hast given a banner to them that feared thee, that it may be displayed because of the Truth" — Psalm 44:4, and in Psalm 20:5, he says, "We will rejoice in thy salvation, and in the name of our God we will set up our banners." Thus shall the church of God appear in distinction from, and defiance of all her enemies, "Terrible as an army with banners" — Songs 6:4. Four important considerations are presented for our instruction and comfort in the contemplation of the banner which our God has given us.

First. The distinct character and militant state of the church of God as she exists in the world.

Second. The identity and peculiarity of her banner.

Third. That it is to be displayed, and for what cause.

Fourth. That all her battles must be fought, and all her conquests achieved under it.

1.That the church of God is a distinct and separate people from all the rest of mankind, is abundantly testified throughout the Scriptures, and if this were not the case, she would not require a separate or distinct ensign or banner. To rally under any other than the legitimate banner of the government to which the citizens of any nation belongs, is treason, and subjects the offender not only to a forfeiture of the protection of such government, but to the dishonor and retribution in such cases provided for traitors. God has ordained that his church, or Israel, shall dwell safely alone, and that she shall not be reckoned with other nations; and the Captain of our salvation has declared, that his kingdom is not of this world, and by the mouth of his apostle hath told us that flesh and blood cannot inherit it. He said to a ruler of the Jews, Except a man be born again, he cannot see it, and except a man be born of the water, and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into it. The Holy Ghost, by the prophet Daniel, declares this kingdom differs from all other kingdoms, and that it shall break them in pieces, and consume them, and it shall stand forever. And that this kingdom is in a militant state, that she is in a state of warfare, is equally certain from the record of truth. Her members are chosen in a furnace of affliction, and they are called to be soldiers of the cross, to fight the good fight, until her course shall be finished, all her conflicts over, the last of which to be subdued is death. The marshaled host of sin, and death, and hell, are in the field against her; the world, the flesh and the devil are to be encountered and although ultimate triumph awaits her, and more than conquering laurels are already treasured up for her, in Christ her Lord, her conflicts, so far as relate to the personal experience of her members, which are here in the flesh, will not cease until the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout and the voice of the Archangel shall announce their triumph, and their ransomed bodies rise in the image of Christ's glorious and immortal body. Now she is, "As the lily among thorns". Like the bush in the devouring element, and yet unconcerned, and like the Hebrew children in the fiery furnace. Until the war is ended, until the clash of arms, the smoke and carnage of the war shall cease, her banner must continue to wave, and all her valiant men to rally round it, having on the whole armor of God.

2. The identity and peculiarity of the banner is expressed in the word of our text. It is, "Love." This is his banner, and it differs from all other banners. No human force was ever marshaled for a deadly conflict under such an ensign as this. Hatred, which is the very opposite to this banner, is displayed in all the hostile movements of the sons of men. Hatred, instead of love, brought Cain into the field to slay his righteous brother; and hatred, instead of love, has characterized all scenes of slaughter which have drenched the earth with human gore, from the days of Cain to the present day. Hatred, instead of love, makes the feet of men swift to shed blood, because there is no fear of God before their eyes, and the way of peace they have not known. How striking then is the contrast between the banner of Christ, which waves in righteousness over the Lord's host, and that of the enemies of the Lord. All the opposition of men and devils against God and truth, and against his people, is instigated by hatred to God, to holiness, to truth and righteousness, and therefore the banner over the church is the more clearly identified, and the more readily known by those unto whom it is given, and over whom it is unfurled. His banner over them is love.

3. This banner must be displayed. It is not to be concealed, furled, or laid aside. None but pirates on the high seas, or lawless banditti upon the land, will fight without displaying the banner under which they fight. It must be displayed, because God has authorized and commanded it; therefore we cannot, without disobeying him, conceal it. It must be displayed, because the armies of Israel can neither be identified by friends or foes, unless they display the love of God, which is over them, as well in the field of conflict, as in the banqueting festivities of the bride, the Lamb's wife. How is an individual to be recognized as a child of God, and an heir of glory, if he gives no evidence that the love of God dwells in him, being shed abroad in his heart, as influencing his walk and conversation? How, in the absence of the love of God, which centers in Christ, fixes upon his doctrine, ordinances and the order and provisions of his house, to be distinguished from the world? How shall it be said of them, Behold how they love one another, if they display not this banner? How can they love one another with a pure heart fervently, if love, which is the banner, be unseen among them? It must be displayed because of the truth. Only by this banner can we show our relish for, or attachment to, the truth as it is in Jesus. This being his banner, or his love, it differs from the carnal passions of the flesh, human affections are fickle, wavering and transient, God's love is immutable, eternal, and he rests in it. The creature's love has its element in this world, and if it predominates in us, the love of the Father dwells not in us. His banner, or his love, has its origin in God, it is the banner he has given, the love which he has bestowed, the greater love wherewith he has loved us, and as it came from God, so it will center in him, and it will rest on the same objects on which it rested before it was communicated to us, it will, in us continue to "love the thing our Father loves, and hate the work he hates." We cannnt possess it and hate God, his people, his doctrine, his authority or his government, for love is of God, and he that loveth is born of God.

4. Under the banner of his love we are to fight the good fight, finish our course, and keep the faith. Paul says, "And if a man also strives for masteries, yet he is not crowned, except he strive lawfully" - 2 Tim. 2:5. Although the saints are not to strive for mastery over each other, or to be lords over God's heritage, yet they are to strive against sin, and for mastery over all the lusts of their flesh, and to keep their bodies under, and to contend earnestly for the faith and order of the gospel. In all this strife they are required not only to strive, but to strive lawfully, or they fight as one that beateth the air - 1 Cor. 9:26. The law of the kingdom to which we belong, as the disciples of our Redeemer, is written, not on tables of stone, but on the tables of the heart, and in the inward parts of his subjects, and this law directs that all our fightings shall be performed under his banner, which is love. We have already hinted that to fight in any case, without a display of the love of God in and over us, is piracy, consequently unlawful and ineffectual. If called to resist unto blood, striving against sin, let it be clearly seen that the love of God, of truth and righteousness, instead of vain ambition, or the gratification of our carnal lusts, is what stimulates us. They who hold the truth in unrighteousness, may feel a vain ambition to carry their points, when their own fame and selfish pride, rather than a zeal for the honor of God, and a regard for the banner of his love, predominates in them. The truth of God requires no unlawful defense; better by far, that the ark of the Lord jostle on the new cart, than that we attempt to steady it by unlawful interference. When the disciples proposed to call for the fire from heaven to consume their enemies, Jesus rebuked them. Their impatience and contemplated vengeance, made no display of the banner of God's love. And when Peter proposed to shield his Lord from the assaults of his enemies, by the use of carnal weapons, he savored of the things which be of men, and not the things which be of God and he was sharply rebuked, and informed that he that shall resort to the force of arms, even in defense of Christ and his cause, shall perish by the sword. When we stand up to preach Christ, and him crucified, all our orthodoxy, eloquence and zeal, will be ineffectual, if the banner of the love of God be not displayed as that which moves us to action. A selfish ambition to carry our points, that we may exult over a vanquished opposer, that we may be regarded as the more expert or talented, is an unworthy and unlawful motive, and offers an insult to our glorious banner. Love, which is the lawful standard, worketh no ill to our neighbors, hence we cannot, under the banner of love, call for fire to burn them, nor for fines, or imprisonments to punish them for their assaults on us, or on the cause; for vengeance belongs to God, and not to us; he will administer it at the proper time and in a righteous manner.

Proscription, persecution, the infliction of personal injuries, are the armor of the powers of darkness but they cannot be under the banner of God's love. The love of God will constrain all the soldiers of the cross to fight manfully, and to die rather than sacrifice one principle of truth, or make any liege with the common enemy; but it will never lead us to fight for personal renown, or self – aggrandizement. It being then unlawful for us to fight the powers of earth and hell, from any other impulse than that inspired by the banner of love, how much more unbecoming for us to contend with our brethren, who are of the household of God. Can we love God supremely, and hate our brother? What if we have seen in our brother, defection, infirmity or departure from the gospel, should this enkindle our wrath, or be made a pretext for violence? Truly we are called on to protest against this sin, and to strive to reclaim him, but it must be in love, or it cannot display our banner. If we can know what spirit we are of, it will be easy to determine whether we are prompted by the love of God, or by some fleshly feeling, when we labor with an offending brother or sister. When they offend, or trespass against us, if we ourselves be under the banner of his love, we shall be grieved, and feel disposed to labor to restore the offender, in the spirit of meekness; but if not actuated by love, our carnal passions will be aroused, the old man offended, or made angry, and we shall feel inclined to deal in retribution, for the injury which we suppose we have received. In our pilgrimage of more than forty years, we have witnessed cases where brethren have labored most perseveringly to prove the guilt of an offending brother, and with a seeming diligence to fortify themselves with scriptural authority for every movement, and yet instead of displaying the banner of love, in a kind brotherly desire for the recovery of the brother, a settled determination to head him off at every point, and to lower him in the estimation of all his brethren, and finally to have him excluded from the fellowship and society of the church, is far more prominently displayed, than is the banner of God's love. Can this be strivingly lawful? Can such as strive in this manner, be crowned? Brethren in the ministry have sometimes become disaffected towards each other, sometimes having a just cause, and sometimes from jealousy, or envy, and instead of displaying the banner of love, a disposition to bite and devour has been betrayed. Carnal nature has shown its teeth, and claws; hard speeches, sly hints, cruel and ungenerous insinuations, have been thrown out, the brother's character assailed, his reputation stained, much private and confidential whispering, but not to the accused, and with great seeming cautiousness, for the ostensible object of having counsel and advice on the subject, but in reality to get brethren committed, while a settled determination is fixed, to make the suffering brother appear in the worst possible light. His words are scrutinized, perverted, and made to imply what we all know he never intended, and all this to gratify some carnal propensity, or passion of the old man. How dwells the love of God in such, while thus proceeding? Where is the banner of divine love under which they have enlisted? The banner under which the great Captain of salvation grappled with the powers of darkness, encountered sin, death and hell, for our redemption, was the banner of his love. Are we his followers? Does his love dwell in our hearts, and wave over our heads? Then let us display this banner in all our conflicts. The little personal injuries we sustain, are but for a short season, the storm will soon be over, and they shall only ripen us for that glory which God has laid up in heaven for us, and for that crown which the righteous Judge shall put upon us in that day. Unto us it is given, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake. If then we be reviled, let us remember that we are not to revile again. If we would win the misguided brother, who has injured us in our persons, property, reputation or feelings, let us display to him the banner of love. If anything will reclaim him; if anything is calculated to subdue his heart, and lead him to reflect profitably on the error of his cause, it will be a sight of the banner; a conviction that his blows are leveled against one who sincerely and tenderly loves him. If under this banner we cannot reclaim him by a first, and second step, of faithful labor, we must tell the matter to the church, and submit quietly to its righteous decision.

Having considered the love of God, as the true banner under which the saints are to rally for the defense of the truth, under which all their battles must be fought, and by which they are destined to triumph over all the powers of the darkness of this world, the corruptions of the flesh, and the temptations of Satan, and the certainty of victory through him that had loved them, and spread this glorious banner over them, and also of the delightful privilege allowed them, while in their militant state, from time to time, of banqueting with their Lord under the protection of this banner of love, we will now offer a few remarks by way of admonition to the children of God, to beware of all other standards, especially of the counterfeits of this banner of our Redeemer.

It is important that soldiers should be well acquainted with their own banner, in order that they may easily distinguish it from all others; otherwise in the time of battle, they may haply be found fighting against their brethren, and weakening the hands of those whom they in reality love, and in whose defense they would cheerfully lay down their lives. One of the wily tricks of the adversary, has often been to decoy the inexperienced soldier of the cross, by exhibiting a counterfeit banner of love; which, although easily detected by the practiced eye of the veteran soldier, who is not ignorant of Satan's devices, is calculated to deceive some of the new recruits; for, although the false standard is composed of love, yet it is not the love of God. How often have even christians been temporarily deceived by a display of human, instead of divine love. The Captain of salvation has pointed out to his soldiers the difference; and to his admonitions we would do well to take heed, lest at any time we should let them slip. "He that loveth the world, the love of the Father is not in him." The affections, as well as all the other lusts of the old man, are to be crucified; for we cannot possibly retain them, and enjoy the love of God dwelling in us.

Men who profess to be ministers of Jesus, and soldiers of the cross, often tell how much they love souls; how ardently they desire the salvation of every body. They love all the various orders, sects and denominations of religionists, with perhaps the single exception of that sect and which is everywhere spoken against. They love all kinds of doctrine that will gain proselytes, and produce excitement of the natural or fleshly passions of the multitude; they love all the humanly invented religious societies of the age, and consider them eminently calculated to save sinners; and they love the wages of unrighteousness, and, like Balaam, they run greedily after it. A banner of this kind of love has strong attractions, not only to the unregenerated of mankind, but the carnal sympathies of the flesh in christians are strongly attracted by it. They are too prone to forget that the love of the creature is only a stream from a corrupt fountain, which is poisoned with the corruption of the fountain from which it proceeds; while the love of God is pure and holy, and as far transcending all earthly love, as the heavens are higher than the earth. A standard, or banner, composed of human love, may be slendidly painted, with very many attractive devices; and such is truly the case with all false ensigns, which the enemy has set up for signs; but through all their coloring, those who are taught of God, will be enabled to see that they savor of the things which be of men, and not the things which be of God. Not only in the general conflict with the consolidated powers of darkness, are the children of God called to guard against this universal charity, but also in their intercourse with those who are of the household of faith, and even in their communion with their own hearts. The fellowship of the saints, one with another, is not to be regulated by carnal feelings of personal attachment; but by the infallible rule laid down for their government in the New Testament of our Lord Jesus Christ. If under the banner of our Savior, whatever may be our fleshly predilection in favor of brethren, we will not suffer sin to rest on them. The influence of that banner on us will inspire faithfulness in laboring according to the rule, to reclaim offenders, in the spirit of meekness; and if not sucessful from every brother that walketh disorderly, it will dictate to us to turn away. But if we set about the work while we are ourselves under the wrong banner, we shall make wretched work. We would be poorly qualified to pull the mote from a brother's eye, while a beam is in our own eye. If we are not governed by the love of God dwelling in, and waving over us, all our efforts at discipline will be worse than nothing. If in our labor to reclaim our offending brother, we are influenced by the banner of God's love, the honor of God, the peace and purity of the church, and the good of the brother with whom we are called to labor, will predominate in our hearts. But if under a banner of fleshly feelings, we will be apt to lose sight of these incentives, and strive for the mastery with vain ambition to secure some credit to ourselves, or at least to lay our plans so as to carry them out, and head off the brother at every point. Or, on the other hand, if swayed by an undue fleshly attachment to the offending party, we may flatter ourselves that we are exercising a christian virtue, by saying to our Lord's debtor, who owes an hundred measures of oil, take the bill and write fourscore. A fleshly feeling in us predominating, disqualifies us for the faithful discharge of our duty to our brethren it will either lead us to exact more, or to be satisfied with less, than the word dictates. Our brother is made an offender for a word; that is, for not using the same word or form of expression to express a similar idea, when there is no essential difference involved, and another is held in fellowship, who has departed from the faith and order of the gospel of Christ, because of some personal attachment.

In communion with our own hearts, let us not be deceived. We have within us, as it were the company of two armies. Each of these has its own banner; the one has the banner of God's love, the other the vile affections and lusts of the flesh, which war against the spirit. And these are contrary the one to the other. Hence we are admonished to deny ourselves, and take our cross and follow our Lord and Master. Human love is always on the alert to supplant the new man. The old man becomes wounded, and we think the new man is grieved. The old man meditates revenge, and we mistake it for christian diligence in contending against sin. Thus we sometimes think the new man is grieved, when only the old man is mad.

The minister of the gospel of the Lord Jesus, is in trouble, his mind is shrouded in darkness, he is called to preach; an assembly is before him; but he has no subject; he feels depressed and in bitterness. He worries, frets and murmurs. He says, "My Lord is requiring me to preach without affording his presence, gathers where he has not strewed, and reaps where he has not sown." He concludes like Jonah, that he does well to be angry even unto death. What is the matter now? Poor man, his carnal pride and vain ambition is on the rack, and must be crucified with its affections and lusts, and in the end he is astonished to find that his deep anxiety to preach well, was more for the gratification of his own fleshly ambition, than from a desire to glorify God, and edify the saints. We essay to bow in prayer before the throne of God, and we have certain desires which we wish to present in prayer and supplication; but by what spirit are these desires inspired within us? If they are fleshly desires, we may detect something selfish in them, inclining us to ask for something to consume upon our carnal lusts. How gracious is our God in withholding these things from us. But when his banner over us is love, the preacher is as ready to stand in silence before his congregation, if God wills it, as to speak with the tongues of men or of angels; and the humble christian in his closet, inspired by the flowing banner of his Redeemer's love, is all submission to the will of God. His language is copied from his Savior's lips, "Not my will, but thy will be done."

Finally, may it be our happy privilege to fight all our battles under the triumphant banner of the love of God, and may it be spread over us when we are permitted to enjoy our banqueting seasons with the King. And may he preserve us by his grace, from dishonoring, deserting, or failing to display the banner of his love, in all our walk and conversation. Then shall we look forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners.

Among the many things held to be true, and, therefore, a part of the doc trine of the Church, is the Election of Grace. This highly important subject is denied in fact, if not by admission, by much of the so called Christian world. Rational minds immediately become foundered when trying to give a plausible exegesis of the subject; so much so, that they usually explain away the truth of the matter to such an extent that this part of their doctrine should be given a more appropriate name. This is because the inception of election was before the world began and, therefore, can only be understood and believed by faith. Since faith is the gift of God, all of us are dependent upon him for an understanding of truth.

The word ELECT, used as a verb, means "to choose out", and, of course, as a noun, means "one who is chosen out". In its doctrinal sense it means, "one who is chosen of God to salvation." The following, therefore, is the true meaning according to our understanding: The sovereign act of God in choosing a people, peculiarly and particularly loved by him, out of the posterity of Adam, upon whom he would bestow sufficient grace in the person of his Son, Jesus Christ, to cleanse them from all sin and iniquity; thus preparing them, after all the work of grace is wrought in them, for an eternal habitation with him in heaven.

The term Election in any sense in which it may be used, always presupposes that the elected are chosen by others and they are not able to choose themselves. In considering the subject further, let us lay our foundation on safe and sure footing of proper depths by calling to mind what the inspired Scriptures say in part about it. First, who did the choosing? Isaiah wrote in the 45th chapter, "For Jacob my servant's sake, and Israel mine elect, I have even called thee by thy name, I have surnamed thee, though thou hast not known me." Mark, in the 13th chapter says, "And except that the Lord had shortened those days, no flesh should be saved: but for the elect's sake, whom he hath chosen, he hath shortened the days." In the 11th chapter of Romans Paul wrote, "But what saith the answer of God unto him? I have reserved to myself seven thousand men, who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal. Even so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace". Paul also says in the first chapter of Ephesians that we are blessed "with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ: According as he hath chosen us in him", etc. In the 2nd letter, to the Thessalonians, 2nd chapter, we find, "But we are bound to give thanks always to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth." It is written in the 15th chapter of John, "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." The above lay the foundation that God did the electing or choosing.

Second, when did the choosing take place? Above was quoted Paul from 2nd Thessalonians, that, "—God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation", etc. Finishing the quotation above from the 1st chapter of Ephesians, "Accord ing as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love". Paul further says in 2nd Timothy, "Who hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began". These quotations lay the foundation that the choice was made from the beginning or before the world began.

Third, what was the moving cause of the choosing? As already quoted from Timothy, "—but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began."

In the 9th chapter of Romans, Paul says, "(For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth); It was said unto her, the elder shall serve the younger. As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated." Jeremiah in the 31st chapter —says, "The Lord hath appeared of old unto me, saying, Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love: therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee." We find in the 1st chapter of Ephesians, "Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will." These lay the foundation that the choosing was according to God's purpose and love for his people.

Fourth, was the choice made because of any merit or work of the chosen? As quoted above from 2nd Timothy, "Who hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace," etc. Before was quoted, "For the children, being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth." In the same 9th chapter of Romans we find, "So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy." Then, in the 15th chapter of John, we read, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain," etc. These show that it was not because of merit or works on the part of those chosen.

From all these references to the Scriptures, and many more, this, then, is the sum of the evidence on the doctrine of Election:

That it was part of God's purpose, before he brought anything into existence, that is, before the world began, to choose or elect a people as his own, out of the family of Adam; (who should also according to the same purpose be. brought into existence). These people were to be redeemed from under the curse of their fall in sin, (for it was also a part of God's purpose, however dis tasteful to carnal thought, that they should fall), by a redeemer who was given them at the same time they were chosen. Therefore it is said they were chosen in him before the foundation of the world. This redeemer was the Son of God, Jesus, the Christ.

At the proper time Jesus made his appearance into the world and, since there could be no remission of sins with out the shedding of blood, he died upon the cross, bearing their sins in his own body, being made sin for us, who knew no sin. Thus, being a perfect offering given of God, dying for the sins of his people, he forever satisfied the wrath of God which stood against them. Indeed, such a wonderful saviour was he, when he arose from the dead he even justified them in the sight of God. So all that Jesus died for—all who were chosen in him—are made perfect, so much so that in their standing before God in Jesus, they are as perfectly clean as they would be if they had never fallen in sin and condemnation. Nevertheless, both the sin and the redemption were necessary before they were prepared for their inheritance.

However, this state of perfection is not realized so long as His people remain in their natural life. Death is inevitable and is necessary for there must be a resurrection from the dead before they are brought "Unto the measure of the nature of the fullness of Christ." In the resurrection they are "Fashioned like unto his glorious body" and shall "Inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." When all of this work of grace is completed in them then shall they be in possession of that unto which they were chosen.

That a person is chosen of God is manifested to them in a pecular way—unmistakable way. Whoever has been made to feel the "exceeding sinfulness of sin" and to realize he is justly condemned, and knows that all of his own efforts have availed him nothing, and who has been made to beg for mercy and has felt the relief from the awful burden of sin and made to rejoice in the hope that Jesus died for him, is surely of the chosen and redeemed family. No other people have this experience. No other people feel the weight of sin. No other people know the calmness and joy and peace that Jesus only can give.

Elder John D. Wood
Roanoke, Va.
August, 1942

Dear Brother Beebe — Through the kindness of our Heavenly Father, I have recently been permitted to visit some of our Father's family who are scattered through this eastern section of country, and more particularly in Maine. The brethren had cherished fond anticipations that they should be permitted to see brother Beebe at their meetings, and sad indeed was the disappointment they experienced. Many who saw you on your visit some years since were anxious once more to grasp your hand and to see your face on the shores of time, and to hear again from your lips a declaration of the gospel and the unsearchable riches of Christ. Though denied this privilege at our meetings, we still hope to enjoy it, should we be permitted to live until they recur again.

The Maine Predestinarian Baptist Conference was held with the church at North Berwick, York county, Maine, on the 5th, 6th and 7th insts. Here it was my happiness to meet with Elders Steward, Badgar and Quint, the latter of whom is the pastor of the church at N. B. This meeting was one of peculiar interest to me, as it had not been my lot to listen to any Old School Baptist preaching since our meeting a year ago. The meetings were all very fully attended, especially that on Sunday, when it was estimated that not much more than half the number of people assembled could gain admission into the house, but were assembled around the windows and doors. I think I never attended a more interesting meeting, or one where there was more decided evidence of a desire to hear and readiness to receive the word of life. The church at North Berwick has received signal manifestations of divine care and favor, and though standing alone, at great distance from any other church of our order, is yet enabled to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. I felt, while among these brethren, that there is still a remnant according to the election of grace, and that these might be seven thousand of God's hidden ones who had not bowed the knee to Baal. Elder Steward, whom you will remember to have seen, and who for many long years has been a valient soldier for the truth, is still able to meet occasionally with his brethren, though by reason of the infirmities of age he now seldom preaches. Deacons Perkins and Staples are still at their posts, while younger brethren are being raised up to occupy the places of some who have passed before us. Thanks be to God, the rock upon which his church is built is one against which the gates of hell can never prevail. Deacons Purington and Merrill, from the East, in company with Elder Badger, were also present at this meeting, and bear witness of their attachment to principles and doctrine of sovereign and discriminating grace.

Parting with deep regret from the brethren at North Berwick, I next arrived at the town of Richmond, on the bank of the Kennebec, was soon comfortably seated in the home of deacon Hezekiah Purington, where it was my privilege to meet with Elder J. L. Purington, his son, who had just arrived from Lexington, N. York. The day following, in company with Elder Badger and other brethren, we started for the town of Whitefield, where the meeting of the Association had been appointed. The churches composing this Association we found to be both few and feeble. It was our privilege here to meet with Elder Whitehouse, whose health is feeble, but who still stands firmly upon the ground of the Old Baptists; and whose words from 1st Timothy iii, 16, were well calculated to strengthen and comfort the tried and afflicted people of God. This sermon, as well as one by brother Badger, from the words, "We love Him because He first loved us," were precious sermons to me. "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth." The meetings were well attended, especially on Sunday. Throughout this section of country there appear to be some indication of good and a very general disposition to hear what these Old Baptist say.

In some places the Signs are being circulated and read by many who do not profess to be Old School Baptists. Confusion in some instances seems to have entered the ranks of anti-Christ, and many seem to be conscious of sad and grievous departures from the simplicity and beauty of apostolic faith and practice. What these things portend is best known to Him who orders all things after the counsel of his own will, and in whose hands the interests of his church and people are safe.

The harmony and fellowship which prevailed during the meeting was most delightful to witness, and to one, at least, the occasion will be one long to be remembered. The closing sermon was preached by Elder J. L. Purington, from Heb. iii, 6, to a large and attentive congregation. It is a dark and trying time with the brethren in this Eastern section of country. Some dearly beloved brethren have been called from the family on earth to that above, among others deacon Peaselee, who was a staunch friend of truth, and Elder Bailey, who, for fifty years or upwards, held forth the doctrine of sovereign grace. Others have seemed to be turned away from the truth to fables, while some younger brethren, whom God seems to have called to the work of the ministry, have been sent to other fields of labor in the South or West. But known but unto God are all his works, and though he brings the blind by a way they know not, and leads them in paths they have not known, he has promised to make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight; these things will be do unto them and not forsake them.

These things have I written to you, brother Beebe, that brethren in other sections of the country might be reminded of our lonely and tried, situation, and when it is well with them that they might remember the scattered few whose lot is cast here at the East. There is, so far as I know, but one Old School Baptist Church in Massachusetts; that is in Woburn, and the nearest one to us is that at North Berwick, some eighty or ninety miles distant, and they were separated by a long distance from their brethren further east. But God hath not cast away his people whom he foreknew; and all the lot and circumstances of his children he orders as he knows is best. John, doultless, no less than his brethren, mourned when he was taken from them and banished to the isle of Patmos, but glorious revelations were there made to him, and which have been most comforting to the saints of God ever since. The family of God, whether in heaven or wherever scattered on earth, is one family, share in the same Father's love, have the same house, feast at the same table, and are comforted by the same precious hope and faith. To know that I am a member of this family is my most earnest desire.

"That I may see the good of thy chosen." Psalm cvi. 5.

Did you ever see any good in God's chosen? Oh! "how goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!" Did you ever see what good God has blessed his people with, and how good it is to be one of them? All God's people see that there is a "good" in God's chosen family, peculiar to them, and that they sigh and long for. But some will say, Had David never seen it when he penned this psalm? Aye, surely; he had seen it. But did he not want to see it again? Yes; he had lost the sight of it, the sweet vision of it had retired, the old veil had come back, his eyes were dim, he wanted fresh "eye-salve." So with us; we have seen, we trust, at times "the good of God's chosen," have felt our affections drawn towards them, and drawn up towards God, and have said, "Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire beside thee." That was to enjoy the sweet foretastes of heaven. But all these sweet foretastes became clouded; fogs and mists rested upon them, and hid them from our eye. Fresh sin brought fresh guilt, and darkness and deadness and doubts and temptations and fears and besetments came on of various kinds; and all these beclouded our sight. But we cannot forget the past, we cannot forget the solemn moments when we walked with God and talked with God, nor the sweet feelings that his presence enkindled. However dark, however dead, however disconsolate, however tried, harassed, and tempted, we cannot forget that. And having "seen the good of God's chosen," we want to see again the good sight, to taste again that heavenly banquet. "That I may see the good of thy chosen."

PSALM 105: 1-2.

Sing unto him, sing psalms unto him: talk ye of all his wondrous works.

MARY CONNER POFF

At the request of Salem (Head of the River) Primitive Baptist Church, I will attempt to write a memorial tribute to our dear sister in Christ, Sister Mary Poff.

I hope the Lord will guide my mind and hand to write some things about her life that will be to her honor and to the praise of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Sister Mary was born February 9, 1931 to brother Tiras and sister Irene Conner. She departed this life December 2, 2016, at the age of 85. She was preceded in death by her beloved husband, brother Wade Poff, and son-in-law Charles Creasy.

Left to cherish her memory is her precious family, whom we have come to love over the years. Five daughters and sons-in-law. Judy Ravan and C.J., Cathy Holdren and Elwood, Vickie Childress and Stewart, Cindy Sutphin and Wayne and Candy Creasy. Two sisters, Mae Vest and husband, Alvin, June Conner and husband, Dean, sister-in-law Sylvia Whitlow. Eleven grandchildren, three step grandchildren, four great grandchildren, and one great, great step grandchild, several nieces and nephews and many friends.

Her beautiful funeral service was held at Salem Church December 6, 2016 by her Pastor Elder Carl Terry and Elder Allan Terry. The church was filled with brethren and friends, a testimony of the love they held for this dear sister. She was laid to rest in Rest Vale Cemetery in Floyd County.

Sister Mary was a member of Salem Primitive Baptist Church for 51 years, and our clerk for more than 30 years. She was a wonderful clerk and always knew what our church needed, and saw that it was done, not out of duty, but out of love for the church. Sister Mary loved God, and believed in Salvation by grace. She was very dedicated to attending church.

She and her late husband traveled many miles to other churches to visit with members of our faith. They also welcomed and entertained members from other churches in their home.

In Psalms, chapter 116 verse 15, you find "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints." We will miss her sweet smiles and warm hugs, but believe she has entered in to that peaceful rest, without pain and sorrow, awaiting the second coming of our Lord and Savior. May the Lord comfort all that mourn our loss and be reconciled to God's righteous and Holy will.

HYMN

Ah! when with saints, where Jesus reigns,
My soul hath found a place,
I'll sing in loud exalted strains,
A song of boundless grace.

Nor will my pleasure, peace, and joy,
In that eternal noon,
Become extinct, decay, or cloy,
But e'er maintain their bloom.

I there will, also, raise a note
Of praise to Christ my King,
Which I shall with my warbling throat
Through endless ages sing.

There darksome clouds are never seen
To veil the happy mind;
But all is light, and all serene,
And God profusely kind.

Not plagued, and vexed with sin and care,
As is the case below;
But undisturbed, when seated there,
And naught but pleasure know.

With joyful lips I there shall own
God just in all his ways,
And bow to him who fills the throne,
And give him lasting praise.

" ... we glory in tribulations also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope: and hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us." Romans 5:3-5.

Elder Jerry B. Farmer

Once again, at the outset, I must acknowledge my great fear because of the weakness and inability of my flesh to perform anything good. If anything worthwhile is to be written, it must be by the grace and mercy of God. I am made to believe that writing spiritual things is much like preaching. One must wait upon the Lord until power comes down from above, and only then may any spiritual preaching or writing be done. God has fixed it this way so that no man is able to take God's glory to himself. Any one attempting to write or to speak apart from the power of God will always err from the truth and manifest his own carnality. Is it any wonder that we fear and tremble at the prospect of coming before God and His people in the way of writing or of preaching the gospel? Without Him, we can do nothing.

It is altogether against nature to willingly enter into troubles or tribulations. We flee from them as one would run away from a raging fire or from a wild beast. But the things of God are opposite to the things of nature. Jesus said, "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted the prophets which were before you." There is a wonderful blessedness in partaking of a measure of the sufferings of Christ.

Who, in a natural mind, wants to be persecuted and reviled and lied against? It appears that none do. But the blessed apostle said that he gloried in tribulations. He must have been out of his natural mind to say such a thing - and no doubt he was. I believe he was caught up above this world in a spiritual mind which is contrary to nature. Instead of hating the troubles which he endured, he was made to embrace them and even to glory in them. The apostle has not been alone in these things. The Lord's people all through the ages, even until now have suffered for the truth's sake and have been made to rejoice in the blessedness of it.

God mercifully made known through the apostles that tribulations are necessary in order that the faith of each little one must be tried. And when that little one is tried, by the mercy, grace and power of God, he is brought forth as gold, purified by the fire, to the glory of God. The apostle Peter said, "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you. But rejoice, inasmuch ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad with exceeding joy. If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you..." It is a needful part of our experience for us to suffer with Him if we are to reign with Him.

There is a golden chain of events that is in store for each of the children of God each time one is tried. The links are tribulation, patience, experience, hope, and love. The tribulation that shakes to pieces the world of the believer leaves him in fear and trembling at the end of his wits, and at the end of his strength. He is brought to the place of the publican, who had no place to go or to look except unto God. He was in great tribulation because he was made to see his corruption and his inability to do anything about it. He thought he must surely perish unless God should intervene for him. He was like the disciples in the little ship in the great tempest in the sea, who said, "Lord save us: we perish." Daniel found himself in that case in the den of lions. The three Hebrew children also had to cast all their cares upon Him, since they could not deliver themselves from the fiery furnace. And this is where we sometimes find ourselves, if we are His.

Instead of running from the trial of faith, the child of God is made to endure it for Christ's sake. This is the patience, or long suffering or endurance of the saints, which is part of the fruit of the Spirit. By being given grace to endure the trial, and seeing the manifestation of patience in his life, each of God's children is given some of the experience of a child of grace. Without God given patience there would be no experience.

But God's little ones are given grace to wait upon the Lord and to trust in Him.

When one is brought through a difficult and trying experience, he is given to compare his journey to that of the saints who went before him. And when one is blessed to see and identify his experience with those that God loved and protected and delivered through the ages, he begins to have hope that he may be among the family of God that has been misunderstood and abused by the world. Without this experience there would be no reason even to think one might have a part with God's people. But this experience causes one to hope, even though he feels so unworthy of the least of the mercies of God.

And this hope makes not ashamed. The child of God who has suffered for the sake of Christ and the gospel, and has patiently endured it, and has been given the experience of grace, and has been made to hope he is a part of the finished work of Christ: this one shall not be made ashamed or disappointed at His appearing. The disciples, when they had forsaken all and had followed Jesus, asked what they should receive in return. Jesus told them that if they had forsaken father, mother, brother, sister, houses and lands, that they would be given in this life, fathers and mothers and brothers and sisters and houses and lands an hundred fold, and in the world to come, eternal life. God's little ones find that when they have been made to turn away from the world and its false doctrine and to suffer reproach with God's children, they are given the abundant life here with the elect family of God, and are given the promise of eternal life in glory. These are the sure mercies of David. David was blessed to say, "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever." This is our hope and our trust.

This hope is Christ in you the hope of glory. And God's little ones have no place to run, except to Him, for help in time of need. The world is not our home, and it has nothing to give us in the way of spiritual help. All our help must come from Him. In the book of Hebrews we are reminded of those, "... who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us: which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil; whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made an high priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec." This is the Hope that will not let you go. He is the anchor of the soul, which holds the ship fast against all storms and danger. And all within that ship shall be preserved unto the day of Jesus Christ. He is the secure anchor; He is the strong threefold cord or cable (Father, Son, and Holy Spirit) that is not quickly broken, or snapped; and He is the ark or ship in whom the family of God is kept safe. He is all in all to His people.

What is it that affirms all this? What is it that gives assurance to God's little ones that they are truly being kept in the true Hope, and are not deceived? How may we have assurance that we are born of God and have passed from death unto life? How do we know that we have really suffered tribulations with patience, and had some of the experience of God's children, and have a true hope of eternal life, and that we will not be ashamed or disappointed when the Lord comes to separate the sheep from the goats? The inspired apostle Paul said, "•••because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us." And the blessed apostle John, by the Holy Spirit of God tells us, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." The love of God, which He shed abroad in the hearts of His people, is sufficient to assure them of their part in the kingdom, to keep and to carry them to the end of their journey in faith and hope, and to deliver them beyond this life into heaven and immortal glory.

Thanks be unto God for the unspeakable gift of His Son by Whom we are saved. Thanks be unto God, Who hath saved us and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to His own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began. Thanks be unto God, Who has promised that He would never leave us or forsake us but that He would be with us unto the end of the world. He has loved us with an everlasting love, which cannot fail. Everlasting praise be unto God from Whom all blessings flow. I trust that this was written in love and in hope of eternal life, unworthy as I am.

Dearest Ones in Christ Jesus,

Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hates you, "It hated me before it hated you." We find this in 1st John 3:13, and John 15:18. Also John 17, beginning in verse 9-16, here Jesus, was speaking to his Father saying I pray for them: I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me; for they are thine. vs. 10. "And all mine are thine, and thine are mine; and I am glorified in them," vs. 11 "And now I am no more in the world, these are in the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own name, those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are" vs. 12, "While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name: those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition: that the scripture might be fulfilled" vs. 13, "And now come I to thee; and these things I speak in the world, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves."vs. 14, "I have given them thy word: and the world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." vs. 15, "I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil." vs. 16, "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." The scriptures that I have quoted above, is truly the word of God: of whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. And that there is surely a time and a day not far off when this world shall end as we know it now, and be no more, though we know not when it shall be. None know except the Lord our God. The Lord is our shepherd, Prophet, Priest, and King. This world is not my home, but we seek one not made with hands, eternal and in the heavens, whose builder and maker is God. I believe that the dear Lord did fix all things, places and events, in this world that has been, is now, or ever shall be in this time world. Yes all that shall ever be housed in heaven, and immortal glory was all eternally fixed by God the Father through his dear Son Jesus Christ. He adds to the church daily, such as should be saved, even from the beginning to the end of this time world. The Lord God said, I am the first and the last, the beginning and the end. Man cannot add one to this heavenly number; For it is the body of our dear Lord and Savior. Jesus Christ, nor can he take one away, All that our Lord savior Jesus Christ died to redeem by the shedding of his precious blood. He is the good Shepherd. He paid the redemptive price, in full, with his own precious blood, therefore he is the good seed. He is the good shepherd. He does the planting, and the harvesting of the same. Man's planting is of no value, and shall be rooted up and burned.

Blessed be the God and Father of our Great God and savior Jesus Christ: Who hath blessed us, and hath made us to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, as we journey on through this world of sorrow and grief, and have been given a sweet hope by God the Father through his dear Son, Jesus Christ: which is an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you who are kept by the power of God. May the Lord keep me humble in my walk here, among the brethren, and may I be kept at the feet of the brethren, and to take the low seat in the meeting house, lest I take liberties that are not mine to have. Let me not be a burden to those, the dear household of faith. O that I may be allowed to just follow on in the footsteps of the little flock, until the day come, that I shall join those that have gone on to their rest to walk the shores of time no more. In this beloved Psalm of David, 17:15, "As for me I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness." If this be too much trouble, or not sound in doctrine, please cast aside and all will be well with me. Love to the household of faith in truth as it is in Christ Jesus: I hope.

VOICES OF THE PAST

CHURCHES I HAVE SERVED BY
O.K. TENCH

FORWARD

It won't be too long that my voice will be silent and my service shall end. Not for any glory that's due me, for by the grace of God, I am what I am. If in my life or ministry, someone has felt to have been benefited . . . Give God the praise. Perhaps, after I am gone, someone might like to know what I believed and where I served.

I was born January 23, 1911. My parents were Isham F. Tench and Sallie L. "Campbell" Tench. I was the third of seven children. My life was like most poor boys. I went to school until I was thirteen years old, barely finished the seventh grade. In 1926, my parents sent me to Ferrum Training School which was very religious at that time. The first night I was there, we were told to go to our rooms and pray and if our roommates refused to report to the authorities and they would take care of them. At that time, I thought everybody there but me was a Christian. I felt to be such a sinner that I was afraid to try to pray.

On Sunday, the only Sunday I was here, we had to go to church. It has been fifty eight years ago, yet I can close my eyes and see that scene. The president sitting inside of the round railing during the service and a group of students kneeling around the outside. This service I witnessed there caused me to want to leave the place more than any other thing. I felt that I would be forced to engage in this worship. So after six days, I came back home. My mother was very disappointed. As time past, I still have serious feelings about my soul. At a revival meeting, the old minister said, if we would give him our hand or join the church, the things that caused us to sin or our unworthy feelings would be taken away. So I went up with others that were joining. I remember one lady saying to me... Kinsey, I am glad you have joined the church, you have always been a good boy. Down in my heart, I knew it wasn't true. The next day I was miserable, now I had become a hypocrite.

I thought maybe when I was baptized, maybe I would feel better, but this also failed to give me relief. Then I thought when I take communion, I'll feel better. After the one time, I was so condemned... I never took it again. One of the members said to me, you must have done something wrong, yet he would get drunk and still take it. I still went there, but took no part in the service. I started to dance, but never really learned how. But then I began to be miserable on the dance floor.

One Sunday, on the outside of the church a boy said that the Bible said, "Jacob have I loved" and "Esau have I hated" and I disputed it but he told me where to find it. I found the scripture and began to read and had never read before. I found that the bible taught election, but I wasn't in it. There became a great conflict in my life. It seemed that there were two of me — one was against the other. I began to talk of the bible to anyone who would listen. I really didn't know who believed this doctrine. But when I went among the Old Baptist, I could detect a difference in their preaching and others. In my mind, I could see each of them building as if it were a house of logs. The difference was he Old Baptist finished it and topped it off, while the others always left it unfinished, as if I had to finish it. I could find no comfort in this doctrine. Also, when I began to talk on the scripture, someone would say, if they didn't believe it, "That's Old Baptist Doctrine." Others who believe it would say, "You are going to preach." I began going down to Old Chapel Church to hear Elder Stegall and I found comfort in the gospel of grace. But I became afraid if I kept going, I was going to join. One Saturday afternoon when they had services down there I had a great conflict of mind. I decided to take the mule and plow that afternoon. I got about half way to the field when something caused me to rush the old mule back to the farm and get ready as quickly as I could and go to church.

In the year of 1930, something very drastic happened to me. I think for a few days, I was very disturbed in mind. I left home on a T-Model Ford car and went to Roanoke. As I think of those days, I have a very hazed memory. I found myself staying just a few doors from the Old Baptist Church. On a Sunday, I went to their service. It seemed I had just found a home. However, I did not join that day. But since that day, I have never doubted that the Old Baptist is the true church. These were the depression days, but I got a very poor paying job and worked there a few months. I was satisfied just to go to church for awhile. But one day, Elder J. P. Helms was preaching about the shepherds hearing the angels, saying glory to God in the highest, peace on earth and good will to men. I couldn't keep my seat, I went up and was received in the church. I didn't know anyone there and they didn't know me. They asked me about being baptized and I told them I had been baptized. They said, they didn't accept that, so I left then and came home. After a few weeks I became anxious about it and asked Elder Stegall to baptize me. One cool morning in May, he baptized me, and something was left there that hasn't bothered me since.

I had my membership at Old Chapel. Then I became impressed to preach, and Elder Stegall encouraged me. I went with him to meetings. We went to Town Creek Church and stayed all night at Dock Davis' home. They had a service at someone's home that night and we went. Several preachers preached and I couldn't hold back any longer, so I got up and tried to talk a few minutes. I really don't remember what I said. Elder Stegall was very kind to me under this burden. At times at Old Chapel and Bethel where I was known, I tried to preach without much liberty, until one Saturday afternoon at Old Chapel. It seemed to me as I began to talk, the words flowed to me and the most pleasant sensation I had ever had. The members rejoiced with me. And me a fool, thought... Now I have learned how and it is so pleasant and easy. In my folly, I thought now that I had learned how — I'll dress up tomorrow and come here and really preach.

I believe now the Lord had a lesson for me. The next day it rained so hard nobody went, and it was six months before I had liberty anymore. Now after 50 years, I know that I can't preach, unless it's given to me at the time. In the year of 1937, I was ordained. That year I was called to Union Church. I went the first time on the first Sunday in October 1937. I had married on Friday before.

In the year of 1938, I was called to Weatherford, which I am still serving. After six years, I gave up Union Church because of the lack of interest of the members. I had concluded that the Lord had not called me there. In the year of 1946, I was called to Chapel Church, where I am still serving. In 1947, I was called to Springfield, where I am also still serving. In 1952, I was called to Malmaison Church and am still serving there. I think sometimes I am greatly blessed to have these churches.

I was quite a bit younger in the year of 1937, and I would like to recall some of the pleasant memories of the past when I started to Weatherford. There was a little boy named Raymond Goad, just three years old who came with his parents and often sat with his grand father. I saw him grow up to manhood. In the meantime, I baptized his grandfather and his mother. After he had sown his wild oats, I baptized he and his wife, Phyllis, and his sisters Mabel and Dianne. I shall never forget going with Raymond and Phyllis home one day for lunch. We sat down to eat and I felt impressed to encourage them to join the church, they both began to shed tears. The next month, they were received. After a few years, Raymond was burdened to preach. We think he has a great gift. Most of the old members who were there at Weatherford in 1938 have passed on. We now have about 50 or 60. One Sunday, I baptized 12. Some of them went to Springfield, some went to Malmaison and some to Weatherford. We have good attendance. A lot of young people, boys and girls bring their friends, which we appreciate.

In the year of 1946, after I had served Chapel Church several years as the Pastor. Elder Stegall had been absent serving Roanoke Church. After he resigned, they called me to serve. We now have 18 members, as the older ones pass on, others come in. I baptized 5 on one Sunday. We have good attendance.

In 1947, I was called to serve Springfield. Elder Stegall's health had failed. Several years ago, Elder Denver Simpson felt impressed to preach, and is now serving as co-pastor. Under his leadership, the building has had many improvements such as new pews, and an addition with tables and bathrooms. I couldn't name all the members I have pleasant memories of. I think often of brother Louis Willis, a deacon who I baptized — the most spiritual man I ever knew. Sometimes, it seems I can hear him say "Amen" when a preacher says something that he loved. Another member, Raymond Dalton, a deacon who carried mail until retirement. Before we had telephone service up here, when I needed to conduct a funeral at Gretna, many a night have I heard a car drive up to my yard, and maybe I had already gone to bed, but I'd come to the upstairs window and he'd call brother Tench... They want you to hold a funeral service many of them I didn't know. I wonder how many funerals I have had, and tried to remember them a few years ago, but after 4 or 5 hundred, I knew I couldn't remember them all. I baptized a young man named Melvin Shelton at Springfield, who was impressed to preach. After a period of time, he went to another church and now he is their pastor.

In the year of 1952, I was discharged from Roanoke Church where I'd been supplying.

Upon receiving a letter from Malmaison Church, I went and have been going since. I have many pleasant memories of things that have happened there. Years ago, a lady came to me and said, I am a member of the Methodist Church — they are good friends of mine, but I am not happy there, and I want to join Malmaison. I advised her to go there and tell them just how she felt and then to come back. I thought if she was sincere, she'd be back. She took my advice and came back with the blessings of her former friends. I baptized her and she became a faithful member until she died.

Time and space will not permit me to mention all the members and memories. But sister Kate Dodd, who passed away two years ago, was a person to someone who knew her, you just couldn't forget. She was clerk at Malmaison for many years. She had her place to sit and she said what she thought. She attended long after her body told her she wasn't able to. If one tried to help her, she would say, "Get out of my way." I can still close my eyes and look to the left of the pulpit and see her sitting there looking like she was asleep, but she wasn't.

Sister Mattie Williams who passed away several years ago, had her place that she always sat. When we built the new church, she found the same geographical location in the new church that she had in the old one and sat there. She was facing from the pulpit about the center of the left row of pews about the third pew from the front. She was very kind to me and faithful to the church. It has been a pleasure to baptize two of her sons, Julian and Burnell and the daughter, Naomi. After brother Julian joined the church, he'd write me rich letters. I asked him if he was impressed to preach, he denied it. But it was like fire shut up in his bones, he couldn't resist it. He is now co-pastor at Malmaison and is serving other churches. Brother Burnell Williams is a deacon at Malmaison and song leader one of the best that I know.

I regret that there isn't space enough to mention all the members of these churches we've tried to serve. But I'd like to mention the deacons who have taken much of the load and responsibility off of me and are such a blessing to the churches. As an overseer which an elder is called to have faithful deacons to council with is a great blessing. The deacons at Malmaison are Burnell Williams and Richard Stegall. At Springfield, Homie Dalton and Walter Hamlett. At Weatherford, Stafford Houston and Marvin Brumfield. At Chapel, Clay Brown and Fred Murphy.

I don't know how long I'll live or how much longer I'll be needed at these churches, but I have no ambition other than to finish my course in the service that I feel to be called to.

The following is a circular letter I wrote to the Association.

TO THE MESSENGERS AND ELDERS THAT COMPOSE THE PIGG RIVER PRIMITIVE BAPTIST ASSOCIATION AND TO OUR CORRESPONDENTS ---

Greetings:

According to the law of averages, this will be the last circular letter, I shall ever write. So we might call it a farewell address.

I implore you that we might make this a time to associate, rather than to legislate and all that is within us seek to keep peace. May this association never attempt to Lord over the churches that it is composed of. May it not interfere with the internal affairs of our Sisters' Associations. Above all, let us remember that we too are frail.

Let the beautiful words of the Bible — grace, patience, long suffering, forbearance, forgiveness and charity, which is the love of God rule in our hearts. When we add all the good sermons, all the sweet fellowship, all the good meetings, and the precious memories of days gone by, and subtract peace from it, we have nothing left.

The time is soon coming when our voices will be silent. The earth will claim our bodies. The mourners go about the streets, because man goeth to his long home. (Ecclesiastes 12:5).

"Let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to thee which also ye are called in one body; and be ye thankful." (Colossians 3:15).

HEBREWS 13:2

I am a stranger here below,
And what I am 'tis hard to know;
I am so vile, so prone to sin,
I fear that I'm not born again.

Fear and trembling takes hold on me as I come into your presence by way of the written page. For some months I have been in the "Slough of Despond" with Bunyan, and at times have so despaired of ever being lifted out that it has caused me to seriously doubt that I have ever known anything of the Lord's graciousness to me, a poor, rebellious wretch, full of sin, and vile, polluted, cankerous sores. But at the same time I have been so deeply in the dark, that my life (if indeed I have any spiritual life) has been despaired of. I have not lost some little impression to write and speak in the name of Him who fills heaven and earth. My pen has been still for some time, and I have not done as much speaking, being compelled to work on Saturday and, to honestly confess to the truth, because I have had such little liberty that I have been afraid of the pulpit. Ah! brethren how I hate my ways. How vile I am when, as I hope, the Lord gives me grace and light of the Holy Spirit to look into the dark recesses of my soul or self-righteous self. But there is a strange peculiarity about all this. I cannot teach it to any man, I cannot explain to them why I cannot. Here is something that, if we know anything about it, we must be taught it from above by the teaching of the Holy Spirit. Here is a mystery. The wise and prudent know nothing of it. It is completely hid from them by him who rules heaven and earth. As a whole, the noble, the wise, and the mighty cannot fathom its mysterious depths, but the poor, the afflicted, the despised know it. Heaven reveals it to them. It seems good in the sight of the Lord to do this. My readers know this, the mercy of the Lord has taught it to them. How hateful they appear to themselves; how lean, barren and destitute they are; how poor, afflicted and wretched have they become; how hungry, thirsty and empty they are; how polluted, sinful and wretched they are; how weary, footsore and ragged they are; how sick of sin, of worldliness (in themselves) and the flesh they are; how they would quit sinning if they could; how close to Jesus and his followers they would live if they could; and Oh, dear brethren, how strange they are; how little can they understand themselves; how different they have become. Once all their goods were in peace; their way was smooth and easy; they had gotten religion and were feasting on the riches of arm-of-flesh God. But now, Ah yes, now; their goods, they have none; their way, it has become rough, hard, stony and thorny; their religion, it has been taken from them, and their feasts have gourds in them; and how the children of God hate all this. How they do wish and long and hope to measure up to the standard of those that know the Lord. But (and here is the mystery, the characteristics of strangers and the peculiarity) as much as they hate and abominate themselves they love those that are like them.

Now let us see how Peter would talk about this matter. "Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is within you, with meekness and fear." 1 Peter 3:15. I have my doubts about the children of God being under any obligation, or having any admonition given them to entertain and care for every stranger (in the flesh) that comes along. If that were true, some of us who live on the main thoroughfares would have to turn out some of our own at times in order to do it. I cannot see how the Lord's people can take literally what the Bible says. Let me give you some examples of what I mean. "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it." Prov. 22:6. I think this is to and concerning the church. I cannot believe for an instant that I can, by training, instill into my two boys morality and good citizenship to where they will not depart from it. To so understand the above text would mean that by good parents the depravity of the human race might be overcome. In the sixth chapter of Paul's letter to the church at Ephesus he gives some admonitions to children, parents, servants and masters. Brethren, I cannot take that literally. I do not think it is written to parents, children, etc. after the flesh. To me it spoils the Bible. It is a flat contradition of Old Baptist doctrine. There are fathers in Israel, in fact, Paul called himself Timothy's father and Timothy, his son. There are the children, those that are young, that still speak as a child. They are admonished to obey their parents. After the flesh? No, sir; not that, the law teaches that, and it is a good law, and it is nice to see people with regulation and system and obedience in the family although they are not acquainted with grace, but their parents in the Lord. The parents in this chapter, and the children, are each the Lord's handiwork. One has grown in grace, the other is a new arrival in the church. I think I have given sufficient hint to show what I mean. Now under this taking of the Scriptures does not our text take on new meaning? The chapter starts out with brotherly love continuing. We are told to let it continue. What kind of love? Continue to love (in the Spirit) those that show by their talk and walk that they know nothing of the travel of a heaven born soul? No, continue to love the brethren. Now what kind of a character is a brother? Go back a few paragraphs and read a description of a child of God, or read Paul's experience in the seventh chapter of Romans. A man with this kind of complexness is a stranger to himself and to one another, and yet, well acquainted. This man is told to give answer to his hope. When strangers in the flesh stop for entertainment speak to them of their hope. If they tell you what, Paul tells you about his then take them in, they are strangers indeed and in truth. If they do not I do not think the admonition has you bound. In the entertainment of these strangers sometimes we have lodged and succored to the needs of angels. An angel is a messenger or agent (not free) of the Lord. It does not necessarily mean a preacher, although that might be the primary meaning. I feel that many times the Lord has sent some poor, afflicted child of God my way. They had a message for me. A message from afar, a message from heaven, a message that was as cold water to my thirsty soul, a message that enabled me to rejoice in the fact that I am a stranger and far from home, that I have no abiding city here but that I seek one not made with hands.

Yours cast down, yet in hope.

Elder W. D. Griffin

JOHN 4:16-18

"Jesus saith unto her, Go, call thy husband, and come hither. The woman answered and said, I have no husband. Jesus said unto her, Thou hast well said, I have no husband: For thou hast had five husbands; and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband: in that saidst thou truly."

Brother S. L. Roberson, of Haile, Louisiana, has asked that we present our views through the Signs of the Times on the above portion of Scripture. This incident of our Lord and the woman at the well should undoubtedly be considered as being intimately associated with the miracles at the marriage at Cana of Galilee, the healing of the impotent man at the pool of Bethesda, and others, all of which have a material bearing upon the dispensations of law and grace. The numbers five and six are both legal numbers. The law which God gave to Moses consisted of five books. The legal or work period of time is six, for we are told in Genesis that God created the heavens and the earth and all that in them is in six days, and that "he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made."

There are some things to which we wish to call attention in the record which John gives us of the Saviour and the miracle he performed in converting the water into wine. First, we are told that this took place on the third day, which is significant of the last or gospel day, and, second, that there was a need for more wine at the marriage feast. John says there were set there six waterpots of stone, and when Jesus' hour was come, or the time for him to manifest his power, he commanded the servants to, "Fill the waterpots with water. And they filled them up to the brim." Then he said unto them, "Draw out now, and bear unto the governor of the feast." And "When the ruler of the feast had tasted the water that was made wine, and knew not whence it was: (but the servants which drew the water knew;) the governor of the feast called the bride groom, and saith unto him, Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine; and when men have well drunken then that which is worse: but thou hast kept the good wine until now." John:9-10. The six waterpots were used under the law in connection with the puriation of the Jews, and as there could no justification or cleansing of a sinner in the sight of a just and holy God except the law be perfectly fulfilled, the waterpots were of necessity filled to be brim, thus denoting in type that all the demands of the law were absolutely let in full when Jesus shed his blood for his people. When the servants drew of from the pots the wine was pronounced to be the best wine. All of the blood that was shed on Jewish altars could not atone for the sin of a single sinner, but the blood which Jesus shed on Calvary's cross could and did make full and complete at-one-ment for all of his people throughout all ages of the world — those who dwelt upon the earth, before he came into the world as well as those who were to follow after him. This wine was therefore the best wine and signified the blood of the gospel dispensation, without which there could be no mission of sin. This miracle then set forth the fulfilling of the law and the ringing in of righteousness by Jesus Christ.

In the fifth chapter of John we are told that "There is at Jerusalem by the sheep market a pool, which is called in the Hebrew tongue Bethesda, having five porches," and that "In these lay a great multitude of impotent folk, of blind, halt, withered, waiting for the moving of the water." This was legal Jerusalem, and to be sure a great multitude of sheep, or the Lord's people, lay there in these five porches, being held for ransom until the law's demands could be met. How pitiful was their condition! Some were impotent, or absolutely helpless and unable to do anything for themselves; some were blind, and some were halt, and some were withered. It would be difficult to picture a more pathetic scene. But in the providence of God there was this pool called Bethesda, which means, "House of Mercy." Wonder of wonders it is to the dear child of God that "Justice and Mercy" have met together and kissed each other in the Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore, he could say to the impotent man, "Rise, take up thy bed, and walk." It is said that, "immediately the man was made whole, and took up his bed, and walked: and on the same day was the Sabbath." Truly, never man spake like Jesus, and when he speaks it is done, and when he commands, it stands fast. When he heals, or delivers, it is invariably the Sabbath, or the day of rest with the sin burdened soul.

In connection with the text under consideration, it is said, "He (Jesus) must needs go through Samaria." There was a necessity for all that Jesus did, and nothing that he did was in vain. Jesus did not go through Samaria by chance, but according to the providence of God, who orders all things after the counsel of his own will. In the purpose of Almighty God this poor Samaritan woman was to come to Jacob's well and there find one whom she would be astonished to have take any notice of her. Neither was it by chance that his disciples were not to be present at the time, for Jesus must needs converse with her alone. He who discerneth the thought and intent of the heart of man, who knoweth all the secrets thereof, and from whom naught can be concealed or nothing hid, he communes with the sinner in the solitary aces and, independent of all human aid, when he speaks, his words carry force and conviction.

This Samaritan woman was accustomed to drawing water from Jacob's well, where she had to come again and again, for it was only a shadow or type that living water which Jesus had to give. When he said unto her, "Give me to drink," she was surprised that he should condescend to look upon her since, as she said, "the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans." Jesus then told her if she had known the gift of God and who it was that spake unto her, she would have asked of him and he would have given her living water. Seeing that he had nothing visible to draw with, and the well being deep, according to her natural powers she could not perceive how he could give her living water. She was soon to learn that she stood in the very presence of him who was indeed far greater than Jacob, who gave the well from which she had come to draw water. Jesus first told her of natural things, that "Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again," which he well knew to be the case, and then he said unto her, "But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." Here was something different from anything she had ever heard of before. She I would not have to draw water from this well day after day, and year after year, for the lack of which she would thirst again, but this water would indeed be living water, and it would constantly be springing up into everlasting life. She, therefore, thirsted for this water, and said unto Jesus, "Sir, give me this water, that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw." She was thus made to experience that salvation was not by works of righteousness which the creature can perform, but that it is "by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God: Not of works, lest any man should boast." Having learned this and having ceased from her labors and entered into gospel rest, Jesus said unto her, "Go, call thy husband, and come hither." Surely, no one will doubt that Jesus knew the inner most desires of her soul, and needed not to be told by her that she had no husband, even though she had had five husbands, but it was for her sake and our sakes that he said this to her. She typifies the Church of the first born who has come to the end of the law and must con fess before men the wonderful works of our God. When she said she had no husband, Jesus commended her by saying, "Thou hast well said, I have no husband: For thou hast had five husbands; and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband: in that saidst thou truly."

Our understanding is that she had done all she could to comply with the demands of the law, but had utterly failed in every point and had become guilty before God. The law condemned, and she was miserable and wretched and poor and could receive no comfort or consolation from it. Being brought to the end of the law, she realized it was her schoolmaster unto Christ, and there he was revealed and she perceived of a truth that he was some wonderful one. After Jesus had instructed her more perfectly regarding the true worship of God, he said unto her, "God is a spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." Thereupon came his disciples, and the woman left her waterpot and went her way into the city, and saith to the men, "Come, see a man which told me all things, that ever I did; is not this the Christ?"

It is after this manner that God brings his children from nature's darkness into the marvelous light.of his glorious gospel, teaching them that his blessed son is the end of the law for righteousness sake. Then it is they know the difference between law and grace, and once they have been truly taught it, it is all of grace forever afterwards, for they can never believe anything else, and they should not live in adultery by pretending to be married to another by partaking of the works of the law. Let them come out from among Babylon and be separate and not partake of her sin, returning to give glory and honor unto him who hath loved them and gave himself for them.

We trust our thoughts will prove satisfying to our brother and all who may read them, and if so may everlasting praise be rendered to him to whom everlasting praise is due.

LONELY I AM NOT
John A. McKellar

PROVINCE OF ONTARIO
October 23, 1870

Dear Elder Beebe:

I am living in a place where the truth is not preached, and as I cannot countenance error and rejoice in humanly devised schemes of our day, I choose rather to stay at home when those around me go to their places of worship. On this account, I am a wonder unto many, and on coming into my room on Sunday morning I found the following lines left, written upon my table. I wrote the reply which follows them and left it where it could be seen. I send them both to you, and if you think them worth publishing, they may be of some use to some one of the "little flock," the good pleasure of whose Father it was to give them the kingdom.

Why make yourself so lonely?
Why don't you friendly be?
Why don't you go to church,
where you
May other good folks see?

Why are you always by yourself?
No reason can I tell,
Unless It is because you think
There's no one like yourself.
Am I right?

REPLY

You think I am lonely, but no not at all,
For Jesus is with me, who saved from the fall:
When walking the broad way, when wandering to hell,
He sought me, he found me, deigned me to dwell.

You think me unfriendly because I don't go
To some place of worship, as other folks do:
Though the charge of unfriendliness thus do you bring,
Yet I must remember the law of the King.

Cease, my son, says that law, the instruction to hear,
From the words of true knowledge that causeth to err. (Prov. 19:27)
Come out from among them, and stand not within,
And be not partaker with them of their sin. (2 Cor. 6:17)

When to church I go, I hear a great deal
Of poor, lost man's merit, and human free-will:
Both notes are detested by me, who must own,
That saved I am by God's free grace alone.

Why so much by myself you cannot conceive,
If it is not because that I fully believe
No one to be like me, nor no one so good,
That is not the cause why I love solitude.

For in me (in my flesh) no good thing does dwell,
All my good is from Jesus, of Him I will tell:
In myself a poor sinner, do the best thing I can,
With Paul I must cry, Oh poor, wretched man. (Rom. 7:24)

Perhaps you still wonder, and yet do not know,
Why a pilgrim and stranger through life I should go;
Let me tell you, and oh may I tell you in love,
'Twould all be quite plain were you "born from above." (John 3:7)

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES THE CHURCH BUILT UPON CHRIST

"Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Matthew 16:-18.

Christ, the one foundation stone,
Tried, precious and elect,
God hath built His church upon,
Though men this stone's reject.

Rock of ages! rightly named!
Living stone in Zion placed!
Believers shall not be ashamed,
Nor shall they yet make haste.

Nothing can this stone remove,
Against it nought prevail;
Fix'd by everlasting love,
In vain its foes assail.

Here the house of God is placed,
By our great Zerubbabel,
And on the Rock of mercy based,
Defies the gates of hell.

Laid with pleasant stones we view,
The superstructure rise;
Polished stones of gorgeous hue,
To feast our wondering eyes;

Lively stones with colors fair,
Sapphires of a price unknown;
The lofty gates carbuncles are,
The windows agate stone.

Prophets of the olden time,
Apostles of the new;

Men of every age and clime,
The Gentile and the Jew;

On the same foundation laid,
Are a building fitly framed.
For God a habitation made,
His holy temple named

IT BECOMETH US

Today as many are brought into serious thinking about the conditions of the world in general, and especially the Church of God, the pillar and ground of the truth, in our meditations we are wondering what relation there is between the world events and the elect of God.

When wars, famines, earthquakes, pestilences and divers things of this kind are sent upon the earth, the country is usually filled with men who use certain Scriptures to try to point out by them present existing conditions. Often prophesy that has no relation to the present time is used to excite people. The question with many of us is where do we fit into this picture, that is unfolding over the world today? The only way anyone understands these things is by revelation, and we should all take heed that the things we lay hold of are not imagination, instead of revelation. The Church of Christ is a chosen generation, a royal priesthood that shows forth the praises of Him who hath called them out of darkness into his marvelous light. Of Christ's fullness have they received, and regardless of what happens his word says that all things work together for good to them it love God, to those who are the called according to his purpose. Nothing has, or will happen but what will be for their good and his glory. Even wrath of man shall praise him, and remainder he will restrain. He is King of kings, and Lord of lords; the one-eternal, immortal, invisible, the all wise God.

As far as I know the Old School Baptists are agreed among themselves that salvation is wholly of the Lord, by grace, through faith, and that not of themselves, it is the gift of God. Not of works lest any man should boast. There is now even as there has been through the ages some differences of opinion on some points of doctrine. Preaching and believing the doctrine of the sovereignty of God, election, the necessity of a new birth, before one sees the kingdom of heaven, the perseverance, preservation and resurrection unto eternal glory, for all whom Christ died are the things that separate us from all the people upon the face of the earth. Moses asked God that if he had found favor with him, then separate him and his people from all of the peoples of the earth.

Are we adorning the doctrine we preach? As faith without works is dead, even so the preaching of doctrines that we do not lay hold of with the heart, as well as the head, is a dead thing. Paul commanded Timothy, his son in the ministry, to take heed unto himself, and unto the doctrine; and continue in them; for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee.

The things which are in accord with Holy Writ that are wrought in us by his Spirit, such as an orderly walk, and a godly conversation, become God's people, as they by his sovereign grace are suited to these things. I want to mention here some of the things that become us. Are we following the word in practice? Do we search the Scriptures as did the Bereans, to see if the things we hear are in the word? Do we lay aside all traditions and traditional practices? How easy it is to accept some point of doctrine because it has been generally believed. Let us hold fast the form of sound words. Sometimes when a point of doctrine has been accepted for years the tendency is to ignore other Scriptures that often have some bearing on the same matter, but because these Scriptures cannot be harmonized with the opinion that has been held on the subject these other Scriptures are ignored.

The subject of the resurrection is one which I thought when I united with the Church that all Old School Baptists believed alike on this important question. For many years I thought that, but in later years I heard it remarked that some among us did not believe in the resurrection at all. I wondered then what those who were accused of not believing in the resurrection did believe, I have talked with a number on both sides of the question, and I have not found any who did not believe in the resurrection. There seems to be a difference as to when it is, and the kind of body we will have, if indeed we are so favored by his grace to awake in his likeness. In my humble opinion these things should cause no strife or confusion. It doth not yet appear what we shall be, and as brethren it becometh us to be charitable towards one another on this subject. We would all do well, even though we are settled in our minds about the matter, to try the spirits and see if the attitude towards the brethren who differ is right, and whether we receive the word with meekness. Surely, a frank discussion of these things might be profitable, if we adhere to the word and take heed unto ourselves and unto the doctrine.

Where are we in Church matters? Are we exhorting one another, confessing our faults one to another? Do we do things without partiality? When a brother is overtaken in a fault, do we restore such in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted? Do we manifest a respect to persons? There is often a carelessness about attending church meetings. In coming in to the church one agrees to abide by the rules of the church, by the help of God. When possible, we should always attend services. You may think you won't be missed if you don't go, but you will. Suppose all felt that way and stayed at home, the meeting houses would soon be closed. We are bound unto the Lord and unto one another in ties far greater than earthly bonds, and it becometh us to adhere to these things.

We are told not to receive an accusation against an Elder except before two or three witnesses. So if any should accuse an Elder of something, we are commanded to have witnesses present before we should listen to them. Jealousy and malice sometimes causes one to try to destroy the usefulness of an Elder, and, it certainly becomes us to first find out for ourselves about the matter before it is repeated. This also applies to our criticising brethren behind their backs, and, often things that belong to the church and should be kept within the bounds of the church are broadcasted. These things ought not to be.

We are commanded by the King of kings and Lord of lords to love one another fervently, to be tender one toward another, forgiving one another; to be of one mind one toward another; to avoid old wives' fables and striving over words to no profit, but to edify one another. I think the entire matter is summed up when we are told to add to our faith, virtue, and to virtue, knowledge, and to knowledge, temperance, and to temperance, patience, and to patience, godliness, and to godliness, brotherly-kindness. and to brotherly-kindness, charity. For if these things be in you and abound they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his own sins. Wherefore brethren give diligence to make your calling and election sure, for if ye do these things ye shall never fail.

The pure mind is to be stirred up by way of remembrance of these things, and we do not tell you these things because ye do not know them, but because ye do know them.

One reason we have written as we have is because we fall short of attaining unto these things and, yet, having the welfare of Zion at heart, we trust. We desire very much to see the doctrine adorned and to live as becometh the followers of Him. If anyone knows that we cannot do these things in and of our selves it is the writer. There are a number of things that become the ones who preach and believe the doctrine of salvation by grace more than they would become any other people, such as following the Lord in being baptized, manifesting our love one toward another, mentioning the loving kindness of the Lord, and many other things, and greatest of all ascribing all the praise unto the Lord.

DIVINITY AND HUMANITY OF OUR LORD

Friend Beebe: Will you please give your views through the Signs, on the divinity and humanity of Christ? Should you comply with my request, you will oblige,

AN INQUIRER AFTER TRUTH.
Indiana Creek, Iowa, Sept. 9, 1856.

The terms divinity, and humanity, which are in much use among theologians, are not used in reference to Christ, by the inspired writers; we must therefore, take them in the theological sense in which they are commonly used. By the divinity of Christ, so far as we can learn, is generally intended his independent, eternal Godhead, and by his humanity, that body of flesh and blood in which he became incarnate, which was made of a woman, made under the law, &c. We have been engaged for many years in trying to exhibit our views of the blessed Redeemer, in reference to his Godhead, his manhood, and also in his mediatorial identity as the Head and Life of his body, the church. But after all that has been said and written on the subject, we have yet to say, "Without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness; God was manifest in the flesh," &c. So absolutely is he God, that all the angels are commanded to worship him, and so truly was he man, that he could be born of a virgin, cradled in a manger, grow in stature to manhood, hunger, thirst, be weary, and his soul could be exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death; could feel the infirmities of his people, groan in spirit, and sweat, as it were, great drops of blood; yea, he could die upon the cross, and be buried, and finally be raised again from the dead, by the glory of the Father, and ascend up into heaven. As God, he is one with the Father, independent, self-existent and almighty. By him all things were made that were made, and he is before all things, and by him all things consist. As man, he could be tempted in all points like his brethren, and yet remain uncontaminated by sin. None can deny his essential, eternal and unbegotten Godhead, and consistently hold that he is a Savior, for he says by the prophet, "I am God, and beside me there is not Savior." If, then, he is a Savior, he is also God. In his incarnation he took part of the same flesh and blood that his children are partakers of. The propriety of calling his Godhead, divinity, or his manhood, humanity, we will leave others to decide; we prefer, when treating on a subject so awfully sacred, to use only such adjectives as the Scriptures furnish. Peter speaks of the divine nature, but as he also speaks of the saints being partakers of it, we have supposed that the mediatorial fullness of which John also speaks (John i. 14, 16,) was intended. Brethren must read and judge for themselves, but we do not feel prepared to say that the life and immortality, which Christ gives to his saints, is anything short of divine nature, while the Scriptures plainly teach that the essential attributes of eternal Godhead are peculiar to the Godhead, and incommunicable to any inferior beings. On the other hand, we dare not say that that perfect, mystical body, or stature, which comprehends the Head and body of the church, was only human.

We may not have comprehended the design of "An Inquirer After Truth," but we have briefly stated some of our views on the subject, according to the very limited light we have of that Savior whom we desire to worship, adore and trust as the God of our salvation, who came in the flesh, and was found in fashion as a man, but we do most heartily say,

"Other refuge have I none,
Hangs my helpless soul on thee:
Leave, ah leave me not alone,
All my help must come from thee."

No couplet in the celebrated stanzas of Watts has ever afforded more sweetness to us than these,

"Jesus my God, I know his name.
His name is all my trust."

We have neither the time nor space to extend our remarks at this time. May the subject be opened gloriously by the Holy Spirit, to the understanding, joy and rejoicing of all the saints, for the Redeemer's sake.

HYMN - Phil. 1:21.

DEATH is no more a frightful foe;
Since I with Christ shall reign,
With joy I leave this world of wo:
For me to die is gain.

To darkness, doubts and fears adieu,
Adieu, thou world so vain!
Then shall I know no more of you:
For me to die is gain.

No more shall Satan tempt my soul;
Corruption shall be slain;
And tides of pleasure o'er me roll:
For me to die is gain.

Nor shall I know a Father's frown,
But ever with him reign,
And wear an everlasting crown:
For me to die is gain.

Sorrow for joy I shall exchange,
For ever freed from pain;
And in the heavenly regions range:
For me to die is gain.

Fain would my raptured soul depart,
Nor longer here remain,
But dwell, dear Jesus, where thou art:
For me to die is gain.

Horne.

"Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." Hebrews 12:14. "For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." Matthew 5:20. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." Matthew 5:48. "For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." Hebrews 10:14. "And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth." John 17:19.

Elder Jerry B. Farmer

The longer I live, the less I seem to know, and the more wretched my case seems to be. The blessed apostle was given to say, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord." It seems that the letter and the location of the scriptures escape me more and more, even though the essential meaning seems to remain in my mind and heart. It seems that even though I have been kept from many hurtful things by the mercy of God, there is still an inward sense of sinfulness that is most often with me. The greatest enjoyment and peace I experience is when my mind is caught up in spiritual things — sometimes when with the brethren, and sometimes when alone. And these seasons come and go as the good Lord has seen fit to bring them and to take them away. Job, when brought down to the earth in sorrow and great loss said, "Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked shall I return thither: the Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." We are taught to cast all our cares upon Him, for He cares for us. He is our hope and strength.

My mind is being exercised upon the subject of sanctification, which is but one aspect of the doctrine of Christ. We are taught that there is only one true doctrine, and that this doctrine has many facets that fit perfectly together into one glorious teaching of the sovereign grace of the God of heaven and earth. We know that there are many doctrines in the world, but they are the doctrines of men and of devils, and are contrary to the truth. Every doctrine outside of Christ shall be burned up and destroyed, but the truth is eternal and shall abide forever. May God be merciful and keep us in the truth for His praise and for our comfort and edification.

The word sanctification and its many derivatives are found throughout the scriptures. If not deceived, to be sanctified means to be made holy. To be made holy is to be set apart, cleansed, and prepared to serve the purpose of God. To be set apart is to be chosen of God in eternity, and to be separated from the world in this life. To be cleansed is to be purged of every sin by the blood of Christ and to be made righteous in Him. To be prepared to serve the purpose of God in holiness is to be given the Holy Spirit. From His Spirit faith, hope and love toward God and His children comes forth. Very early in the scriptures, we see all things pertaining to the Tabernacle and the Temple of God being set apart, being cleansed by washing with pure water, and being sanctified by the sprinkling of the blood of animals upon them. If natural things were set apart, cleansed, and made holy for use in the natural Temple by natural things, how much more shall be the children of God spiritually sanctified or made holy by the Spirit, word, and blood of Christ? By the grace and mercy of God, we must "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord."

Many come exhorting men to live holy lives by their own choices and voluntary obedience. They seem not to perceive that that would be impossible since the carnal mind is enmity or opposite to the things of God. They seem not to know that God chose a particular people before He made the world in order to show forth His praises, and to be holy and without blame before Him in love. They seem not to understand that voluntary obedience, such as that of Cain and of Saul in the Old Testament, was rejected of God. For the things that are approved of men are abomination in the sight of God. Only those chosen of God, given His Spirit, and given a spiritual love for Him and His children can ever do anything that is approved of God — and those things are done altogether by the grace of God through faith. Only those whom God has made holy have any part in His holiness.

For one to be sanctified or to be made holy, he must be without spot or blemish of sin. He must be altogether righteous. But how can a sinful man be righteous before the holy God? Jesus said, "For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter the kingdom of heaven." The scribes and Pharisees did all in their power to strive for righteousness by attempting to keep the law of God perfectly. They failed miserably and became self-righteous, religious hypocrites, thinking they had done better than others in their pursuit of righteousness. But only perfect righteousness is acceptable unto the perfect God. Jesus commanded, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." Of course this is impossible with men, but all things are possible with God. The perfect righteousness and obedience of Jesus was imputed to His saints, while their sins were imputed to Him. By doing this unsearchable work of mercy and grace, God made Jesus, who knew no sin, to become sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him.

According to the eternal, sovereign will of God, Jesus offered Himself up without spot unto God as the sinless Lamb of God, a sacrifice pleasing to the Father. His blood was shed that it might be sprinkled upon the elect children of God to sanctify them and make them holy, and to atone for their sins, and make them fitting for His service. So, before one of God's little ones ever drew a breath, Christ stood as a lamb slain from the foundation of the world. They were loved with an everlasting love. Their names were written in the Lamb's book of life. They were chosen in Him and given grace in Him before the foundation of the world. They were vessels sanctified — cleansed, and made holy — prepared for the Master's use. "For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." God made provision for those He loved. Those chosen in Christ were perfected forever by His one offering of Himself. No sin shall ever be counted against any one of them. They are as righteous in Him as He is righteous. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."

We also know that no man is without sin. According to the inspired apostle, "If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves and the truth is not in us." But if any man sin we have an advocate with the Father, even Jesus Christ the righteous. According to the inspired apostle, "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." So, we see that God's little ones are being continually upheld by the perfect work of Christ, and that nothing may ever be brought against them — but they do sin. This is a great mystery. However, the children of God are taught that in the sight of God, according to the Spirit, they are perfect, while according to the flesh they are imperfect. "Blessed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity." God's children are a blessed people. They are in the world but are not of the world. They are pilgrims and strangers here, and go forth groaning until they shall be altogether delivered from their burdens they bear here.

The saints had been sanctified or set apart and made holy in the sight of God before they ever knew anything of the kingdom of God. When they were brought out of darkness into His marvelous light, as newborn babes, they began to be exercised in the things of the Lord. They began to fear and to cry. They began to hunger for the milk of the word.

They realized their weakness and helplessness. They began to be taught the language of grace, and began to know and love their Father and Mother. As little children, they often stumbled and fell, and often came into trouble because of curiosity and stubbornness. While in the world they are being taught line upon line and precept upon precept, here a little and there a little. They are little children growing in grace and the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. They are being led about and instructed and kept as the apple of God's eye while in the wilderness, as was Jacob. And even now they are being set apart from the world, and are being manifest to be the children of light. They are being cared for and instructed and nourished until they grow into adults, at which time they shall be given to strengthen their brethren, as was Peter when he was converted.

The saints are continually being sanctified or being set apart from the world and the things in it. As they are taught of God, they are made to see how unprofitable the things of the world are. For all that is in the world is the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes and the pride of life. The world is passing away and the lust thereof. The chosen of God are continually being washed and cleansed of all unrighteousness, as they are made to confess their sins and are forgiven of them. They are taught how great a price Christ paid, with His life's blood, to redeem them from all iniquity and from the curse of the law. As they view Him suffering upon the cross, they are made to hate the sins that He died to redeem them from, and to love Him for His goodness and mercy. They are not getting better and better as they are being sanctified, as some suppose; but rather see themselves worse and worse as the hidden corruptions of the heart are revealed to them. The change in God's children because of their sanctification in this life is in their heart. They are made tender in their feelings toward Christ and for their brethren and friends in Christ. They are made to hate the sins that cause them to mourn, and are given to know that this world is not their home — that they are only passing through as strangers and pilgrims.

It is by the truth that the saints are set apart. The word of God abides within each one and by this word they are being sanctified. Jesus said, "And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth." And He said, "You shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." The Truth shall set you apart and free you from the bondage of sin, from the fear of death, from the terrors of hell, from the curse of the law, from the love of the world, and the things in it. And as Christ sanctified or set apart himself from the world and to heaven and immortal glory so shall all saints be set apart by the truth. They are chosen vessels, made to fit in glory. They are vessels made up unto honor and unto eternal life. And all shall be brought to glory without the loss of one, for our God is greater than all, and no man is able to pluck one from His hand. God's children were all sanctified before the world was and were made holy unto God. And even now they are being sanctified. And all of God's children, in this perfect holiness wrought of God, shall see the Lord.

This was written in love and in hope of eternal life, I trust.

"Abide with us"

"Abide with us: for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent." (Luke 24:29.)

Abide with me, O gracious Lord,
For evening cometh on;
Be Thou my Helper, Guide and Guard,
O keep me near Thy throne!

My day of life may far be spent---
O then with me abide!
And lest I stray in evil paths,
O keep me near Thy side!

Abide for me, for troubles oft,
Like heavy clouds, arise;
Thick mists they spread around my path,
And darken all my skies.

Abide with me, for unbelief
Oft hides Thee from my sight,
And e'en at midday makes me grope
As though 'twere darkest night.

Abide with me, leave not my soul
In Satan's cruel power;
But fix my heart and eyes on Thee
In every trying hour.

Abide with me, O leave me not
To journey on alone;
If Thou forsake, I am a wretch,
Most helpless, lost, undone.

Abide with me while life shall last,
And when my change shall come,
Glad I'll resign my soul to Thee,
My body to the tomb.

PROVERBS CH. 27:1-6.

Boast not thyself of tomorrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth.

Let another man praise thee, and not thine own mouth: a stranger, and not thine own lips.

A stone is heavy, and the sand weighty; but a fool's wrath is heavier than them both.

Wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous; but who is able to stand before envy?

Open rebuke is better than secret love.

Faithful are the wounds of a friend; but the kisses of an enemy are deceitful.

Dear Elder Robertson,

Many times I've pondered the mysteries of God
Many times I've tried to change the road I trod
Often times my feet were tired and sore
Many times I searched and searched for His door

A lonely pilgrim just trying to make it home
In crowds of people one can feel so alone
I've told many my family lies in the cemetery
The ones who so loved me live in the cemetery

My tears have fallen and they still do
One can miss their family and I do cause mine were true
Their words of comfort ring true to this day
God never lies and His love is the only love thats true

Precious memories is a beautiful hymn, inspired by God Almighty
The beautiful words were inspired by the God Almighty
Jesus Christ did walk this earth
His days were numbered that He walked on earth
He was no stranger to pain and grief from His birth
He came to save the ones His Father gave Him
I've been blessed to know a few His Father gave Him
A helping hand along life's way is a great gift
A smile or a tear can give the heart a great lift

I watched His work on all my loved ones
They suffered much but were God's chosen ones
Family don't always make one kin
No matter how one tries they are not kin

God never made a mistake and His word is true
The mountains are high and have a heavenly view
The valleys are low and one feels no place to go
God is the same in the highs and lows

His presence disperses all gloom and doubt
When He smiles on one from prison they are out
May He reign and reign from way on high
May His joy forever remain from on high

My mom passed away held in His arms
Joy sprang up in my heart as I held her in my arms
A river of tears of joy from my eyes did flow
Oh thank my God from this world she did go
Only God can carry one home,
Everyone on earth is just a loan

They are not gone they are just away
Far away with Jesus till the home coming day

If I could I would but fly away too
But I must stay till He calls me too
Try as I might I cannot excape this vale of tears
God has seen fit to give me many years

A wandering pilgrim who desires a helping hand along life's way
Just give me strength as I greet each day
Prison walls may around me stand
But I know somewhere there is a glorious land

I know somewhere my Savior does dwell
I know because He has taught me so well
Patience is a virtue one cannot attain
Unless given by God from His gracious hand

Every day of my life I am mindful of my Lord
He has blessed me much and I love my Lord
The darkest days are but a memory when He comes
The sun shines once more in my heart when he does come

May we all be blessed to seek His face
May He always come first as we run our race
May we be mindful to love one another
Be forgiving and true and always help one another
When its all said and done He is all we have
In times of plenty and times of lean He is all we have
His glory does outshine the sun
God's greatest gift was His Son.

Dear Robertson,

I am sending a copy of my late wife's funeral publication about us being in a rainbow together. Many years later Tommy Middleton would tell me the day she joined the church he sat down in the seat she would set in. A voice, spoke in him saying get up from that seat that the Lord was going to visit that seat that day so he moved to another seat and she sat in that seat when she asked for a home at Sardis. If you find it fitting print this and funeral publication.

A brother in Christ,

Dear Elder Robertson,

With the enclosed check, please renew my subscription and use the remainder as needed.

The articles printed in the Signs are always eagerly anticipated and re-read many times.

On occasion, I am able to find comfort in reading of someone's similar experience in Voices of the Past, and I receive a small measure of hope that I may be counted among the remnant.

Dearest ones in Christ Jesus: Blessed be the name of the Lord: A dream of great trees, that I had several months past. I hope the Lord will bless me if it be his will, to write a little concerning the great trees of the garden of the Lord. I would like to tell of a dream that I had several months back. This dream concerns a garden that looked to be freshly plowed, and made into rows, and two well known elders that I knew and they were well known the country wide. And as I approached this garden, there was a man standing alone at the far end of the garden, and as I got closer to him, I knew who he was though he was facing in the opposite direction. It was Elder Wayman Chapel, and I knew that he was deceased, and as I got closer to him, I called his name twice. There was no answer. And as I started to leave I noticed that he was leaning to the left. His left hand and his arm was stretched out away from his body, and pointing to the earth, as if to say I must return to the dust of the earth, and at this point I went down out of the garden, and there I called for help, did not call any name. Elder Graydon Smith came. I saw the headlights of the car when he drove up. I went back up in the garden.There I saw Elder Smith, and knew that it was him. I told him that I was concerned that Elder Chapel was going to fall down. And he said, well we will lay him down. I leveled a place between two rows at the beginning of the garden, and there they laid him down, and after this they went away. I say they because there seems to have been a dark figure at the upper end of the body that I did not know. Elder Smith was at the feet.

This dream was sometime after Elder Chapel had passed away. And as I looked at Elder Smith he was not in an earthly body. I can not explain just what he looked like, but it was so plain he was in a body not of this world. I have told this dream just as I dreamed it. I cherish this dream, because I believe that it has some meaning concerning the great trees of the garden. I believe that those two highly esteemed Elders of the gospel preached every sermon that the Lord God put in their hearts and mouth to preach. And not only these but all of the dear elders that the Lord hath set aside for the work of the gospel ministry, for they are all taught of God. I am speaking of those of the old school Primitive Baptist faith and order that is loved by the children of God raised in the garden They are all taught by the same Lord that this world knows nothing about. The Lord does the planting, the growing, and the gathering of the same. Dear ones, is there anything impossible with our great God and savior Jesus Christ? The Lord gives, and the Lord takes away. He wounds and he heals, he kills, and he makes alive. Blessed be the name of the Lord.

These men have fought a good fight. They have finished the race that was set before them to run and are now at rest in the paradise of God waiting the second and glorious return of Jesus Christ the king as is all of God's little children. I submit this writing for the consideration of the editors of the Signs of the Times to do with this as he may see fit, and all will be well with me.

PREDESTINATION

If God has from eternity purposed a certain event to come to pass, has He not also eternally purposed and therefore made certain every link in the chain of events by which the end is to be accomplished?

Does any one of those things that make up the chain of events come to pass by chance? If any one of those events comes to pass by anything else other than by God's eternal decree and purpose, then fate or chance must receive at least some praise for the fulfillment of the event. A chain is only as strong as its weakest link. There are no weak links in the chain of the fulfilling of God's eternal purpose, no not with Him who declared the end from the beginning. Did Joseph's brethren commit an evil act by selling him to the Midianites? Their evil deed against Joseph was a link in the chain of events which led to the fulfillment of the eternal purpose of God to preserve the children of Israel (Gen. 37-50). All was predestinated by God and it involved the sinful acts of men.

Lot committed incest with his daughter but did not Ruth come from that line, and she was the great grandmother of David through whose line Christ came. We all would admit that the adultery of David and Bathsheba was sinful, but out of this union came both Solomon and Nathan, and from these two lines Matthew and Luke give us the lineal descent of our Lord, according to the flesh. These sinful acts are in the chain of events by which the predestinated end is to be fulfilled, that is, the coming of Christ into the world. But God could have purposed some other way to fulfill His promise concerning the coming of Christ, some will say. If so, then what became of God's "some other" purposed way when these things came about the way they did? Was the purpose of God set at naught or frustrated? We think not. What God has purposed, He will also do it.

Was the crucifixion of our Lord predestinated or not? An inspired apostle of Christ said that this came about by the "determinate counsel and foreknowledge (predestination) of God" (Acts 2:23). He also said to the men of Israel concerning Jesus, "ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain". These men with wicked hands took Jesus and crucified Him. In so doing, they transgressed the law of God. But in so doing they also fulfilled the eternal counsel of God wherein He predestinated that Jesus, the Word made flesh, should suffer and die. The sin and wickedness of the murderers of Jesus is presented to be altogether in harmony with the eternal and immutable decree of God to deliver the Lord Jesus into the hands of men to be crucified.

The inspired Apostle Paul wrote: "Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honour, and another unto dishonour?"(Rom.9:21). Any one who assumes to question God's right to "make one vessel to honour and another unto dishonour" is replying against God (Rom. 9: 20). I pray that I am not one of that number.

It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto thy name, O most High:

To shew forth thy lovingkindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night.

For thou, Lord, hast made me glad through thy work: I will triumph in the works of thy hands.

VOICES OF THE PAST

GOSPEL STANDARD 1837 OBITUARY

Messrs. Editors, — The report of the triumphant departure out of time into eternity, of a valuable friend of mine, having reached the ear of several friends, they are very desirous of having a copy of what she uttered, from me; but having too many applications, I was resolved to write one, and send it to you for publication, if you think proper, that the persons anxious to see the contents, may fly to your valuable publication, and not only hear of the triumphs of her that died rejoicing in a crucified Redeemer, but hear what is to be chosen before gold, that is, the truth as it is in Jesus. If you think these few lines worthy of a place in your Gospel Standard, please to attend to them as soon as possible, for several lovers of the truth are anxious to read them; and others, unknown to me, love to hear of the goodness of the Lord to his chosen family. At the time of death, she was a lover of the truth, and therefore a lover of your publication. The distinguished truths of the gospel she loved, and the faithful ministry of the word of life she admired. Highly she was favoured during her afflictions, which lasted about nine months, but more particularly immediately before her departure. She lay for some time meditating, and apparently noticing no one, when all upon a sudden, she called her mother to her, who is a member of the same chapel as she was, and said, "I know that my Redeemer liveth; I know that my Redeemer liveth," twice over, and several other things with great delight before I reached her, and the first thing she said to me was, "What! Have you come to praise the Lord with me once more?" Praise the Lord, O my soul! O bless his precious name! O what a friend he is to me! O can't you praise his name with me! Come, sing a hymn. I asked her what hymn she would like us to sing; and she said, with great fervour,

> "I'm not ashamed to own my Lord,
> Nor to defend his cause."

I likewise asked her whether it would hurt her for us to sing. She said, "O no! What! Hurt me to sing my Lord's praise? O praise him with me." I looked for the hymn, and read it; and when I came to the second verse —-

> "Jesus, my Lord, I know his name,
> His name is all my trust;
> He will not put my soul to shame,
> Nor let my hope be lost;"

I thought she surely must have quitted her tabernacle, for her soul was full of glory and joy unspeakable. We sung the hymn, and truly her heart was in tune to praise the Lord. She stretched out her poor withered hands, and her whole frame was in motion. Her countenance looked delightful, and most assurely, in her heart, she sung the loudest of us all; and when we had finished she said, "I shall soon praise him, I shall soon praise him. O that I could now adore him, like the heavenly hosts above!" She said she should like me to engage in prayer, which I accordingly did, and we then sung part of another hymn,

"Sons we are, through God's election."

The third verse was a favorite with her in health, and so it was at this time. Shortly after this, being spent, she dosed for about twenty minutes, and her conversation was evidently in heaven, for her lips kept moving, and her hands were lifted up, and when she awoke she called me by name, and said, "O can't you praise the Lord? Can't you hear that beautiful singing? Can't you see them angels? O how they are singing!" (Should any be disposed to call this enthusiasm, let them remember the case of Stephen, who saw the heavens opened, &c.) "O that a wretch like me should be clothed in a robe of righteousness! I shall soon be at the fountainhead! What a friend has Jesus been to me in this wilderness! I have not had one trouble too many! O death, where is thy sting? Thou art no monster to me, for my Jesus has taken thy sting away!

"Jesus can make a dying bed Softer than downy pillow are."

O that I had breath to praise the Lord! What a clog this body is to me, but I shall soon be freed from it!" Being wearied out again, she again dosed for a short time. Her hands were clasped together, her lips again moved, and a sweet smile was on her countenance. When she awoke, she said loudly, "O precious blood, precious blood! O what Christ has done for me! I shall soon see him as he is, and I shall be like him, and then I shall be satisfied! I can pity princes on their thrones, now I can call thee mine!" And so she finished!

Dear Sirs, — Had you beheld her half an hour before she spoke out her joys, you would have thought she could not have uttered a word.

May the Lord grant that the perusal of these few words may be as sweet to the reader as the hearing of them was to the writer.

The Gospel Standard
THE HIGHWAY OF OUR GOD.

"Prepare ye the way of the Lord" — Isaiah xi. 3.

We who dwell in a civilized land can form but little idea of the task which the ancients had to perform in the constructing of their ways. It was a performance which even a conqueror at the head of his army thought not beneath his notice. They had, as Isaiah declares, to pull down mountains and fill up valleys, — the former dreadful from their inclemency, the latter from their unhealthiness, and both infested with barbarians and beasts of prey, who molested the works and put the lives of the workmen in danger.

And is it not thus in our souls? Could a mountain summit be more frightful in its snows of barrenness and its adamantine rocks? Could a valley be more pregnant with noxious vapours than our souls are with the pestilential effluvia that arise from the waters of sin and corruption? And do not our worldly cares form a thick forest wood impervious to the rays of light? Need I go on to enumerate the dragons that dwell there? We all know them too well, and want our trees felling, our waters drying up, and our vapours dispelling by the wholesome blowing of the wind of the Spirit.

It is through this valley that King Jesus has formed his highway. He hath all things under his command, even our corrupt hearts. He could have purged us thoroughly at once, but be chose to display his conduct in conducting us safely through them, and then he will free us from them, and take us home to be like him and with him.

When he maketh his way through the valley, he exalteth it. In him we rise to a sense of the forgiveness of sin. In him we rise to have a sweet communion with God. In him we learn at times to be content in every state wherein he has placed us. In him we are exalted to sit together in heavenly places; and in him we shall rise to glory at the last. Thus all our exaltation is in him who is alone our way; and while we are thus raised above self in him our way, if we look at self on either hand we shall find reason enough to put our hand on our mouth and our face in the dust, and cry, "Unclean." This will produce that humility of heart which is genuine.

A mountain appears a more serious obstacle to overcome; but all things are easy to the Lord our God and his Spirit. Our rebellion and unbelief, our pride and presumption, are cast down before him; yea, they flee as chaff before the wind at his rebuke, and the place where they stood is scarcely to be found, and we think for a time we shall see them no more. But ah! we soon find our arch fiend at work again, and to our shame he succeeds too well again. He tells us the Bible is false, our experience false, our belief vain, and vain our hope; or at any rate, that our experience is not the experience of a child of God, that our prayers are mere form, and that God never will regard us. But what are all these? They are but the mountains which the Lord will cast down before him, and instead of gazing at them in dread dismay, we had better, like good Hezekiah, spread the whole matter before the Lord, tell him how the heathen have blasphemed his name, and beseech him to protect his own inheritance; and so sure as we are led to do this, he will interpose in our behalf, and save us from the hand of the enemy.

The Lord also makes the crooked places straight. We were at enmity with his holy law, declining from his rectitude. We walked in a zigzag path of our own inventions, but be sent his word and healed us, and taught us the truth as it is in Jesus. Then we gladly acknowledged his word; we loved its precepts, walked in its ordinances, and sucked in the sweetness of its promises, through the divine influence of the Holy Spirit. O that we could more and more, through the selfsame Spirit, mortify the deeds of the flesh, and, counting ourselves dead to sin, be indeed alive to righteousness, by virtue of the death and resurrection of our blessed Redeemer, and be holy even as he is holy.

The word of the Lord is as a guide post, to direct us in this way. It is full of exhortation, direction, and comfort. We come to no place of difficulty, but we find some memorial of one who has been there before, and a relation how the Lord delivered him out of his trouble, and set his feet in a safe place; and we have moreover the voice of the Spirit making the means effectual as he will, and saying, "This is the way, walk ye in it," which, as my paper is already full, if the Lord will, I will consider at some future opportunity.

VERICULTOR.

QUERIES OF D. EGBERT, AND REPLY.

LAWRENCEBURG, Ky., June 16, 1838.

G. BEEBE — Sir: — I read some time last year, in one of your papers, a statement, showing the difference of belief between the Old and New School Baptists; and if I understand the Old School, they contend for the doctrine that God from all eternity, or before the universe, or man was created, did predestinate and foreordain a part of the human family of our progenitor Adam, as his own children, such as he determined should be saved and that he sent his Son Jesus Christ into the world to die, that they might be saved. Now I cannot see how this can be attributed to a God of justice; but a God of justice he must be, if a God at all. Permit me, therefore, to ask you a few questions, which I hope you will not hesitate to answer, in relation to this matter.

1st. If God be the creator of all men, why did he so arrange it in eternity, before the beginning of time, in his decrees, so as to save some, and not all!

2nd. If he has made such an arrangement, is he not an unjust, and an impartial God?

3d. If he determined to save this number elected, why did he send his Son into the world to die for them, that they might be saved, when they were to be saved any how?

4th. Why did Peter say, he, God, is no respecter of persons; but in every nation, he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him,

5th. Why does he command "all men, every where, to repent," when repentance will do them no good, if they do not belong to the elect? And what good will it do them?

6th. Why is it said, He came to his own, and his own received him not; but as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, when they were sons already, and had been from all eternity; and what need had they for power to be given them to become the sons of God, if they were sons? (In the mind of God, as your brethren say)

7th. Why is it that all men are not created upon equal footing, as it respects salvation, which is to be attained through the medium of the gospel of the same God, which is to be believed and obeyed?

8th. Why was it that he directed his gospel to be preached to every creature, and he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned, if every creature to whom it was, and is preached, had, and have not, a chance to be saved?

If you will answer these questions, and show the justice of God, you will greatly astonish me, and perhaps thousands of others; and besides, you will greatly accommodate your humble servant and well wisher,

De Lancey Egbert.

REPLY.

ALEXANDRIA, D. C., September 7, 1838.

1st. That God is the creator of all men, is clearly revealed in the scriptures; nor is it any less certain from the same authority, that by an eternal arrangement in the divine counsel, he has decreed the salvation of some, but not of all mankind. Why God has revealed his sovereign grace to some, and hidden these things from others, is because, "So it seemed good in his sight." Luke x. 21.

2nd. He has made just such an arrangement; yet he is not unjust, but he is impartial.

3d. Because he had determined eternally to save his people from their sins, he, in the fullness of time, sent his Son to redeem them from sin, death and hell; to all of which they stood exposed as the sons of an earthly Adam, in whom they had all sinned; they were to be saved only according to the purpose and grace given them in Christ Jesus before the world began. Tim. ii. 9, Eph. iv. 4. Which purpose and grace provided tor them all that was necessary to cleanse from sin, to constitute them "holy and without blame before him in love."

4th. Peter made this declaration, because it was, and is the truth. Peter, as well as other Jews, had once thought God would have respect to their persons, as Jews, and personal relationship with Abraham, and personal righteousness, as doers of the law of Moses; but now being taught by the Holy Ghost, in his vision on the house-top of Simon the tanner, that God had cleansed all that the sheet (or covenant of grace) contained; and as a consequence (not cause) of their being cleansed, they would invariably fear God, and work righteousness, irrespective of the notions from which they were called by grace. All such are accepted (already) with him.

When he as their legal representative arose justified, and by the blood of the everlasting covenant entered, and was received into the holy place made without hands, &c., even then his reward was with him. They were crucified with him representatively; together with his dead body they arose from the dead; and as he rising from the dead became the first fruits of them that slept, he of course represented (according to this figure, borrowed from the ceremonial law) the entire harvest of his people; so that his being accepted, they were of course accepted with him; for they could be accepted at no other time or place, nor in any other way. And the only way Peter, or any of the children of God, can know who were, and are thus accepted with Christ, is by such evidences as Cornelius gave to Peter, viz: He feared God, (was not found presumptuously calling Jehovah to account to him for his eternal purpose, or divine decisions. and everlasting decrees; "they that fear the Lord, tremble at his word") and worked righteousness. God had given Peter abundant evidence that Cornelius was cleansed, and that he was of that chosen number in whom God worketh, both to will and to do of his good pleasure.

5th. God commandeth all men every where to repent; because all men every where have sinned; and it is proper and right that they should repent, or, in the sense of the apostle at Athens, that they should cease their worship of idols; and those in Kentucky should also renounce their idols, and cease to look for salvation through the works of their own hands.

6th. He came to his own; i.e. his kindred according to his birth, the Jews, his nation; and in a ceremonial relation, the Jews were the people of God, to the exclusion of the Gentiles; but the Jews as a nation rejected him, being disobedient, whereunto they also were appointed. 1 Peter ii. 7. That God gave his people power to become the sons of God, shows that men have no power of themselves to become such. As to the difficulty in the mind of Mr. Egbert, why they should need power to become the sons from everlasting, as some of our brethren in Kentucky say; can Mr. E. comprehend the idea of all the human family being actually created in Adam, and existing in him as his sons before they were born? And notwithstanding their existence in him as such, God has given us power at the time appointed, by our natural birth to become the sons, by blood and birth, of Adam; for we have no more power to regenerate than we had to generate ourselves. As in this respect the earthly Adam represented all the human race, so his anti-type, the Lord from heaven, represented all the spiritual race; and because they are sons, God has sent forth the spirit of his Son into their hearts, crying Abba Father. This number is precisely as many as receive him; for as many as were ordained unto eternal life believed; and as many as he gives this power to, shall receive him, and no more. "All that the Father giveth me shall come unto me; and he that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." "No man can come unto me, except my Father who hath sent me draw him, and I will raise him up at the last day."

7th. In one sense, all men are on equal footing, in regard to the matter of salvation; that is, all are, as men, totally depraved, lost, helpless, and justly condemned, and must be saved by sovereign grace, or sink down under the curse of the righteous law of God. But we presume our correspondent wishes us to tell him why God has not made the same provisions of grace for all, that he has for some of the human family. We can only say, as we have virtually said before, so it did not seem good in his sight. We are not at liberty to question the will of God; but if Mr. E. will inform us why all the animal creation were not made rational intelligences, why beasts were not men, why men were not angels, why angels were not gods, perhaps he might let in such a flood of light on this subject, as to enable us to assign some other reason than the sovereign will of God, in answer to the seventh statement of his queries. Salvation is not to be attained through the preaching of the gospel; the gospel will bring home the glad tidings with great joy to the elect of God, in due time; not as something to be attained, but of eternal life secured, hid with Christ in God, for them who are kept by the power of God, &c.

8th. Christ commissioned his apostles to preach his gospel to every creature, for a witness to all nations. Matt. Xxiv. 14. "As many as were ordained to eternal life believed." Hence, as many as believe, (with that faith which cometh from God, which is the fruit of the Spirit, not of themselves, but it is the gift of God) are ordained to eternal life, and shall be saved accordingly; and the standard by which the apostles were to determine whether their faith was genuine or spurious, was by their obedience; genuine faith will lead those on whom it is bestowed to connect themselves with the Old School Baptists; and this will require that they be baptized; not as a cause or condition, but as an effect resulting from the work of the Spirit in their hearts. For unto them it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake. Phil. i. 29. We know nothing of a chance salvation. The covenant of God with our spiritual David, and through him, with his spiritual house, is ordered in all things and sure. Hence we see a good and sufficient reason why the gospel should be preached; not as a proclamation of uncertainties, chances, contingencies, means, proffers, conditions, yeas, and nays, free will and human powers, but a declaration of the sure mercies of David, abounding with God's immutable wills and shalls, to the declarative glory of his great name, and the triumph of all his dear children.

Our querist requires of us, not only that we answer his questions, but that we show him the justice of God, and that too, in a manner which shall greatly astonish him, and perhaps thousands beside him — and what then? Why, in that case we will greatly oblige him. Willing, as we certainly are, to accomodate our friend Egbert, we candidly confess that it is not our province to display the divine attributes of Deity to the understanding of those who have never been made experimentally acquainted with them, through the quickening operation of the Holy Ghost. No man knoweth the Father but the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him.

Yet on this subject we would say to our friend Egbert, and to the thousands he thinks may feel interested in this matter, that we have seen the day (and now we tremble when we call it to mind) when we could also challenge the justice of God, when we set bounds for our Maker, and concluded that if he exceeded them, he must be unjust. And strange as it may seem, we knew no other, thought of no other, cared for no other standard of Judgment than that of our own carnal reason, which is enmity against God. Yet we expected an equitable and just decision from such a judge, even carnal reason. But, O Egbert! had not the Sovereign Lord displayed his naked arm in our salvation—had he not stopped us in our mad career — had he not prostrated this hellish opposition to his goverment, and given us a new heart, and a new spirit, we should have lived and died, and sunk down to hell, raging and blaspheming against him, as we then did; but forever blessed be his holy name, if we are not altogether deceived; he has taught us that all that he does is just and holy, simply because he does it; and we have been permitted with his ransomed children to sing, "It is even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight."

In conclusion, suffer us to say, that unless you are brought by that sovereign, omnipotant grace of God, to be reconciled to his government, to see, understand, love, and rejoice in his absolute, sovereign decrees, in another and a dreadful world, you will find your last question more than answered. His justice will break forth on you, and on all who die in sin and unbelief, in a manner which will need no further explanation. From which awful state we pray God may save you, and the thousands of whom you speak, if in accordance with his all wise purpose and decree. Amen.

"Then shall he make his justice known,
And the whole world, before his throne,
With joy or terror shall confess,
The glory of his righteousness."

THE HIGH ROCK.

Convinced as a sinner to Jesus I come,
(Informed by his gospel for such there is room,) O'erwhelmed with sorrow for sin did I cry,
Lead me to the Rock that is higher than I.

But tempted by satan my Saviour to leave,
Who sets forth religion as meant to deceive,
I claim my relation to Jesus on high,
The Rock of Salvation that's higher than I.

When sorely afflicted and ready to faint,
Before my Redeemer I'll spread my complaint:
Midst storms and afflictions my soul shall rely
On Jesus, the Rock that is higher than I.

When I my poor feelings with others compare,
And learn from reflection, what mercy I share,
My backsliding heart is constrained to reply,
Lead me to the Rock that is higher than I.

When judgments, O Lord, are abroad in the land,
And merited veangeance descend from thy hand,
O'erwhelmed at the sight for protection I fly,
To hide in the Rock that is higher than I.

When God from my soul doth his presence remove,
To try by his absence the strength of my love,
I'll rest on the promise of Jesus, and try
The force of that Rock that is higher than I.

When summon'd by death before God to appear,
Through free grace appointed I'll yield without fear,
Most gladly to venture with Jesus on high;
The Rock of Salvation that's higher than I.

Tis there with the chosen of Jesus I long
To dwell, and eternally join in their song,
In praising and blessing with angels on high,
Christ Jesus the Rock that is higher than I.

OBITUARIES

SHELBY MINTER

The members of Sardis Primitive Baptist Church bow in humbleness in the passing of our dear sister, Shelby Minter. "A precious one from us is gone, a votes we loved is still: a place is vacant in the Church which no one else can fill."

Sister Shelby was born February 27, 1945, and departed this life January 27, 1987, making her stay here 41 years and 11 months. She leaves behind to mourn her passing her dear companion, Elder David Minter, who is our dear pastor; her mother, Sister Bertha Clark, a grandmother, Mattie Kendricks, a stepson. David P. Minter III of Martinsville, Virginia, and a host of friends.

In the last few months of her life, she had many afflictions, but she was always faithful to attend church with her companion as she had always done for the 16 years they were together. "God works in a mysterious way." She was given a dream in which she saw Sardis Church and the beautiful colors of the rainbow — God's blessed covenant to His people. Shortly after the dream and after attending church, she and her companion drove through a storm after which appeared a beautiful rainbow that followed them for a distance and then shined into their car and on them. Her remarks were, "Have you ever felt like this? I feel as I never felt before." After reaching home, she retired and began to cry, saying to her companion, "I know I'm not fit to join the church, but I do want to join worse than anything I've ever done." At this time, the telephone rang. It was a man and his wife who were friends from the New River Association. The friend stated to Brother Minter that he dreamed Sister Shelby was going to offer to the Church the next day, which was the fourth Sunday in September, 1986. It came to pass that they came from the New River Association and did witness her asking for a home at Sardis Church, near Madison, Rockingham County, N.C.

On the day that she asked for a home in the church, it seemed her soul was full of joy and she remarked to her companion, "I thought you'd never get to me. She was baptized the next month which was the fourth Sunday in October, 1986, being led into the water by her pastor and dear companion, Elder David Minter, assisted by Brother Allen McBride and Brother Arthur Martin of Matrimony Church. After the singing of the hymn, "Beside the Gospel Pool," she was so beautiful standing there dressed in white. The previous full night's rain did not mar her beauty. Lunch was served at church that day, and after lunch, she remarked "Next time I'm here, it will be my body."

She was given another dream of a big snow — so deep the people had trouble traveling, but she made the road so smooth and reached home safely. At the time of her death, January 27, 1987, there was a big snow. Several people shoveled paths through the roads and through the cemetery.

Sister Shelby's funeral service which was attended by a host of brethren, sisters and friends from far and near, was held at Sardis Church on January 31, 1987. The service was conducted by Elders Jack Hawkins and George Flippin. Her body was laid to rest to await the resurrection when Jesus will call for the jewels of His mercy together to live with Him where there will be no more tears or sorrow and there to be like Him and be forever satisfied.

It is, therefore, resolved that three copies of this obituary notice be made, one for the family, one for the church record, and one to be sent to the Zion's Landmark for publication.

HYMN

There is a land of pure delight,
Where saints immortal reign,
Inifinite day excludes the night,
And pleasures banish pain.

There everlasting spring abides,
And never-withering flowers;
Death, like a narrow sea, divides
This heavenly land from ours.

Sweet fields, beyond the swelling flood,
Stand dressed in living green;
So to the Jews old Canaan stood,
While Jordan rolled between.

But timorous mortals start and shrink
To cross this narrow sea,
And linger, shivering, on the brink,
And fear to launch away.

O! could we make our doubts remove,
Those gloomy doubts that rise,
And see the Canaan that we love,
With unbeclouded eyes:

Could we but climb where Moses stood,
And view the landscape o'er;
Not Jordan's stream nor death's cold flood
Should fright us from the shore.

Watts.

"And Ruth said, Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God: where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried: the Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me." Ruth 1:16-17.

Elder Jerry B. Farmer

These are some of the sweetest words recorded in all of scripture to me. I wonder, what makes it so? Is it that these words are the words of my own heart? Is it that I have had a part in the feelings, desires, and hopes of one of the Lord's saints who lived so long ago? Is it that I have been given a deep and abiding love for the church, the people of God? I dare not claim any of these things for myself, other than to say I have a hope that it could be true. For I know that I am not worthy of any of all of the mercies, or any of all of the truth that God has revealed to His people. Nevertheless, I have been given a great desire to follow along after the children of grace wherever they are led - to rejoice with them and to suffer with them all the days of my life.

We see Ruth, the Moabite, in a situation where all her earthly plans and natural desires of a home with her husband and family had been dashed. Her husband, the son of the widow Naomi, had died and Ruth was childless. Her mother-in-law, that she loved so much, had heard that the Lord had visited His people in giving them bread, and was going forth from Moab to return to her home in Bethlehem. Naomi told Ruth and her sister-in-law Orpah to return to their people and their gods. We see Ruth torn between her natural love for her own natural family and her spiritual love for Naomi. In her father's house she would find acceptance and her natural needs met. But with Naomi, she had no certain dwelling place, and no promise of anything she would need. By grace, and against nature, Ruth chose to follow along after Naomi. We see her made destitute of the world's goods, and of the world's protection, and altogether at the mercy of the God of heaven and earth. Nevertheless, she followed Naomi by faith and not by sight.

Ruth's sister in law, Orpah, whose husband had likewise died, at first said she also would cleave to Naomi. But when it was explained to her that there was nothing for her if she should follow Naomi, she returned to her father's house and her gods. I cannot help believing that she is typical of the worldly-minded persons. They seem to have a love for the true church, but when persecutions come, or when there is no hope for gain there, the natural mind prevails and they turn away to follow after the flesh. There is nothing in the true church that will satisfy the natural mind.

Ruth's experience makes me think of Moses when he was come to years, how he refused to be called the son of Pharaoh, but chose rather to suffer affliction with the children of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. He also by grace went against nature. It also makes me think of what the Lord said to His disciples. "If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and even his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." I am made to believe that this is the true experience of grace for each of God's chosen people. This world is not their home, because they are strangers and pilgrims here. They are blessed to seek a city, not made with hands, whose builder and maker is God. And they by faith, which works by love, follow on after the Lord.

Ruth, being a creature made subject to vanity, as we are, could not see the future, or the great things that were laid up in store for her. She must have, by grace, pressed on by faith from day to day to find what was ahead, to the glory of God. Ruth and Naomi were brought safely along the way and came to the little town of Bethlehem. It was the beginning of the barley harvest. None of these things were by chance. The timing of the death of Naomi's husband, Elimelech, and the timing of the death of her sons were of the Lord. The timing of their departure from Moab and arrival at Bethlehem in the beginning of the barley harvest was perfect. And Ruth's hap to light on the part of the field belonging to Boaz, of the kindred of Elimelech was no accident. Everything came to be in such a way that the children of God through the ages would understand, without a doubt, that God had worked the whole matter for the good of Ruth and to His glory. We are taught that "all things work together for good to them that love God, to them that are the called according to His purpose." And so it is, and so it is evident in the travels of this little one.

And it was no happenstance that Boaz came to his field and noticed the damsel, Ruth, as she gleaned there. I am made to believe that Boaz was blessed with a great love for Ruth before he ever saw her face. I trust I have been brought along a little in this way of experience. I can remember, about forty years ago, when I first heard of the old Baptists and of their humble, honest and loving ways, how my heart burned with love for them. And I thought within myself, (but I hope and trust the Lord heard me) if only I could meet and know these people. Nevertheless, listen to the words of Boaz. "And Boaz answered and said unto her, It hath fully been shewed me, all that thou hast done unto thy mother in law since the death of thine husband: and how thou has left thy father and thy mother, and the land of thy nativity, and art come unto a people which thou knewest not heretofore. The Lord recompense thy work, and a full reward be given thee of the Lord God of Israel, under whose wings thou art come to trust." I am made to believe that this is the true experience of grace. The Lord's people are given grace for grace. By grace, they are given faith to walk in the light, and by grace they are given to speak the truth in love. And by grace they are rewarded in their good works, as was Ruth. "O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." The children of God are not blessed for their good works, but blessed in their good works, which are of Him. "For all the promises of God are in him yea, and in him, Amen, unto the glory of God by us." There are no negatives in the gospel of grace.

I believe that Boaz was given a great love for Ruth that passes natural understanding. That love for Ruth was proven by the many manifestations of his care for her. He made her dwelling place sure. Boaz told her to glean in no other field, but to abide there fast by his maidens. He put his protection over her. He commanded the young men not to touch her. He made provision for her. Boaz commanded his young men to "let her glean even among the sheaves, and reproach her not; and let fall also some of the handfuls of purpose for her, and leave them, that she may glean them, and reproach her not." I must believe that the Lord has blessed and will bless His people exceedingly abundantly above all that they are able to ask or to think, as He did to Ruth.

Because of the love Boaz had for Ruth, he desired to take her for his wife. In that day, upon a man's death, his possessions could be redeemed or claimed by a near kinsman. Naomi, the widow of Elimelech, and her daughter-in-law Ruth were eligible to be redeemed by the near kinsman in the family. To receive Ruth for a wife meant that Boaz had to redeem the possessions of Elimelech, which included Naomi and all that pertained to her deceased husband. There was an obstacle for Boaz to overcome if he should marry Ruth. The nearest kinsman had first rights for the redemption, and Boaz was not the nearest. So Boaz met the nearest kinsman in the gate of the city, and took ten elders of the city for witnesses. Boaz made it plain before all that the nearest kinsman had first rights of redemption, but that Ruth, the Moabitess was part of the purchase. Boaz said that if the nearest kinsman would not redeem it, he would. Upon learning that Ruth was a Moabitess, the nearest kinsman refused to purchase the possession. Because to take her, since she was a Gentile, would mar his inheritance.

I believe there is a wonderful teaching here for the Lord's people. It appears that the nearest kinsman represents the law. Under Jewish law it was forbidden for a Jew to marry a Gentile. If one should do so, he would take a blemish to himself and be subject to reproach from the devout Jews. The Gentile was considered a sinner, who should not be touched, much less married. So, the nearest kinsman could not do his part. No flesh is saved or redeemed by the law, neither can it be. The law was not given to save, but rather to be the ministration of condemnation and death. But salvation is by grace. Jesus came to save sinners. He looked past national and cultural boundaries and saw the vessels of mercy that God had loved with an everlasting love. He loved them, sought them out, came unto them, gave Himself for them, made provision for them, redeemed them and took their reproach to Himself. He purchased His people from the curse of the law with His blood, and forever removed their sin from them, never to be remembered against them forever.

Ruth, who was despised by some because of her nativity, but beloved of others because of her faith, became the mother of Obed, the father of Jesse, the father of David. And we know that they were all in the lineage of the Lord Jesus Christ. We see that God, in His great wisdom has chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty. He has done this so that no flesh should glory in His presence. It is written, "He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord."

This, I trust was written in love and in hope of eternal life.

The Lord willing, I will mention a little experience I was given, that stayed with me for days until sitting down to write this. I was filling the bird feeder and became concerned about the birds that are ground feeders (mostly doves) that cannot get onto the feeder itself, but must gather the little that falls to the ground while the other birds are feeding. Because of this, I dropped some handfuls purposely on the ground for the doves so they might find more when they came to feed. Then the scripture appeared concerning Boaz's instruction to let fall also some of the handfuls of purpose for Ruth, who was gleaning in his field.

CORRESPONDENCE

Dear Elder Cleo Roberton,

My name is Ralph A. Hocutt, Jr. son of Ralph A. Hocutt, Sr. and Agnes Utleg Hocutt and grandson of Elder Walter Roe Utley and Bama Utley. All of my grandparents and parents are deceased. I am 79, soon to be 80 in Jan. 2018. Please advise when I am to start paying!!! I have included the address label of the July issue of the Signs and the two past due stamps concern me. Allow me to defer and give some background on the Utley family. All were Primitive Baptists except one of the 3 boys, then 3 girls of my grandparents. One, Aunt Viva Dean Utley married Howard Poe, a member of the Church of God. All four of their children, grandchildren are Church of God. When Howard Poe died, Aunt Viva Dean returned to the Primitive Baptist.

My mother always took a camera to church and took pictures of Elders and their wives. I have the photos of 45, but do not have a picture of Elder Lambert of Memphis, Tenn. My late first cousin Sara Utley Stone worked in Elder Lambert's bookstore in Memphis before she passed with Multiple Sclerosis and Parkinson's disease. According to her husband, Bill Stone, she is buried approximately 20 yards from Elder Lambert in same cemetary. I went to Sara's funeral. Elder Lambert passed later. One of the 45 pictures supposely is of an Elder John D. Wood in his office at Signs of the Times in Manasses, Va. According to my mothers notes, he was publisher of the Signs. I personally did not know about the truth of this. My parents were there.

One of the P. B. Ministers lived in a swampy area of Florida and had a pet dog/wolf. Elder J. Y. McCormick was his name. When dad passed in 1991, mom called him to come to Tuscaloosa and handle Dad's funeral. I called him in 1998 to come to Tuscaloosa, Ala. and handle mom's funeral.

I have truly been blessed. From age 16 in 1954, I have driven my late parents to churches/associations from Texas, Mississippi, within Alabama, Georgia, Tennesee and North Carolina. At age 21, I married a young lady Beverly Clay, of Atlanta, Ga in East Atlanta Primitive Baptist Church with Elder Huff crying during the ceremony. Beverly was raised as a Primitive Baptist. I first met her when she was 13 at Shady Grove Primitive Baptist Church near Hanceville, Ala. Her parents and Bill Ivey drove over from Atlanta for the association. Also Elder Biggs of Madison, Tenn. was one of the preachers. Beverly's parents wanted her to meet Elder Biggs' son Kenneth. However she must have been impressed with me as Beverly and I were married June 20, 1959 in Atlanta. She was 18 and I was 21.

At an association in Tennessee at Elder Bigg's church, he had a red barn that he installed a shower. All the males slept on sheet/quilt covered hay, showered and shave. I was not shaving much then. After our marriage, Beverly accompanied my parents and I to associations. Currently we attended Bethel Primitive Baptist Church in Doerun, Ga. Elder Louie Hornsby, a retired high school prinicipal in Albany, Ga and Elder Dexter Brooks preached at Bethel. Elder Brooks passed away Dec. 24, 2011. Now 92 year old Elder Hornsby lives in Corton, Ga near his son. His son and wife Maggie have passed away. He now makes the 5 hour 200 mile one way trip on 4th Sunday only. Occasionally Elder Hasley Hale of Huntsville, Ala. comes to Bethel Church in Doerun. (My mother wrote the paperwork required for his ordination.) And his Father in Law also–Elder R. O. Semmeons.

Yes I have been blessed. Had a light stroke Nov. 24, 2012. Had family at our house from Pennsacola, Fl. and Savannah, Ga. And asked to be signed out to spend Thanksgiving. All three doctors that saw me in hospital were shocked that my heart had no scar tissue and if they didn't see me in hospital, they wouldn't know I had a stroke. Yes, God looks out for me. Must have other plans for me. It and everything else is in his heart and mind. I accept it with thanks, Sorry this is so long. Enjoyed all the associations and dinners on the tables, Primitive Baptist ladies are great cooks. Forgot to cover Elder H.C. Moon of Cullman, Ala. Elder Moon had been on crutches for years due to a car accident. He was preaching at his home church in Cullman when he stopped. Said "I believe God has cured me," called his wife and walked out, leaving crutches in church.

Respectively,
Ralph A. Hocutt

P.S. I know I am getting old when I've heard many of the preachers reflected in "Voices of the Past" in the Signs. Elder W. D. Griffin of Fayette, Ala. always looked I thought at me when talking of sin. Yes I've heard many, but not Elder Beebe. My mother had the entire collection of Elder Beebe's sermons. Also have an 1880 Signs wherein my grandfather Wm. Jackson Hocutt sent $3.00 to Signs. Have 1st cousin June Utley, sent funds to Signs.

VOICES OF THE PAST

1 COR. VI. 13; HEB. XII. 1;
1 JOHN III. 9.
New Vernon, N. Y., Oct. 15, 1842.

The text 1 Cor. vi. 13. The apostle makes use of what seems to have been used in his day as an adage, by which he illustrates the transitory character of natural things, and by a striking contrast sets forth the redemption of the body, which is applicable to the church as the mystical body of Christ or the individual bodies of the saints. Neither the church as a body, nor the individual bodies of the saints, being redeemed from corruption, are to be polluted by unlawful connection with the world. The Corinthian brethren had probably been guilty of applying to the secular powers to adjust matters of aggrivance between them, which, according to the law of Christ, ought to have been settled in the church; and although as a citizen of the world, "All things were lawful," for Paul that were lawful for other citizens of the same commonwealth, "Yet all things were not expedient;" and in his estimation it were better to forego one's privilege than to carry our matters before the unjust for their decision. If as a body the church be married to Christ, it is a breach of chastity for her to appeal to any other Lord: "He that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit;" and this separation from the world in our church or religious capacity, is as imperiously demanded as constancy is enjoined by the counubial bands.

Heb. xii. 1. The "cloud of witnesses" in this text, we understand to be the same spoken of by the prophet," Ask ye of the Lord rain in the time of the latter rain, so the Lord shall make bright clouds." — Zech. x. 1. In illustrating the nature and the power of faith, the apostle has cited a cloud of testimony in the preceding chapter; in addition to which time would fail him to speak of Gideon, Barak, Sampson, Jepthah, of David also, and of all the prophets. This cloud, like that which once overshadowed Christ and the two disciples, embodies the law, the prophets and the apostles, with their entire testimony centering in our Lord Jesus Christ, and all producing but the one sound, the voice that came out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved Son, hear ye him. By this same cloud the gospel church is still encompassed about, and upon this glorious reality the apostle predicates his exhortation: "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us." Many speculations have been offered in regard to the weights and besetting sin mentioned in this text; but to our mind the figure taken from the Olympic races is intended to show that under the gospel dispensation the saints are called to run a spiritual race, in order to which it becomes us to cast aside every weight calculated to impede our progress. Coming out from Judaism, these brethren were much encumbered with Jewish traditions and legal ordinances which belonged to the worldly sanctuary of the old covenant; these would be great hinderances to gospel saints, as we see from the account given of the churches at Antioch and Galatia. Of the latter Paul says: "Ye did run well, who did hinder you?" The weights by which they were hindered, evidently were those legal rites and ceremonies which belonged to the former dispensation, and which were now abolished and blotted out with the hand-writing of ordinances, which were nailed with the Redeemer to his cross. The apostle says, "Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years;" these observances he pronounces "beggarly elements," whereunto they desired again to be in bondage.

In being stripped therefore for their spiritual race, the Christian church was required to lay aside every particle of Jewish rites, to touch not, taste not, and handle them not; for as the true substance of what these former ordinances were but the elements or shadows had come, there was no longer any need of the shadows. These Jewish rites could no longer point forward to a Messiah to come, nor to a spiritual kingdom to be revealed; and as a continued observance of them would imply a still looking for the coming of Messiah and fulfillment of the former promises of his coming, it would of course involve a denial that he had already come. And if Christ had not already come, and become the end of the law for righteousness to all that believe, they were running in vain in regard to gospel ordinances, "For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse." "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them." Hence we see the necessity of laying aside the law as a rule of life, being lawfully delivered from its dominion and its curse through the redemption of our Lord Jesus Christ; as the apostle testifies, that if under it at all are bound to continue there, and as to continue in one place would prevent our running a race, we are altogether disqualified for the christian course if loaded down with legal weights and impediments. These weights are spoken of by the inspired apostle as a yoke of bondage, and as a yoke which neither we nor our fathers were able to bear; and the apostles considered that it could be tempting God for them to lay that yoke upon the necks of the gospel saints.

It is frequently urged by arminian speakers and writers that we should, as christians, take all these weights along with us; for, say they, if we are not under the law as a rule of life we are at liberty to sin. But they betray a lamentable ignorance both of the law and of the gospel. While the apostle commands that we lay these weights all aside, he commands that we should run the race set before us, (the gospel course) "Looking unto Jesus (not Moses) as the Author and Finisher of our faith." Our Lord also admonishes his disciples on this subject: "He that putteth his hand to the plough, and looking back, is not fit for the kingdom." Should we run the christian race, looking to Moses or his law, we would have to run backwards, and that would disqualify us for the kingdom of the Redeemer.

If a man in ploughing should place his back to the plough, and look back instead of looking forward, he would be likely to make very crooked furrows; so in running the christian race or following the gospel plough, we must look forward unto Jesus as the Author and Finisher of our faith. Jesus has gone on before his people, and has commanded his people to follow him; and except they follow him they cannot be his disciples. Who then shall dare to say that in following Jesus we shall be liable to sin? Or that the heaven-born souls, looking unto Jesus and pressing towards the mark for the prize of their high calling, will need Moses with his flaming sword to urge them onward in a different course from any ever taught by him?

When these United States were colonies under the British Government, our citizens could not enjoy a republican form of government, and at the same time maintain a loyalty to the British crown; but when redeemed from the British yoke by the blood of our revolutionary patriots, we as free and independent states had an indisputable right to form our constitution and enjoy our own distinct form of government. So when we were under the law of Moses we were not allowed to claim allegiance to Christ as our King, but were bound to continue or remain in all things written in the book of the law under which we were held in bondage; but when by the obedience and blood of Christ we were delivered from the yoke of bondage, we could, without the charge of rebellion or treason to the old law, bow down to the sceptre of Christ and claim him as our Sovereign and King. In receiving him as our King we receive him as our Law maker, our sole Legislator, and we are, in this relation to him, to regard his law, now written, not on tables of stone, but on the fleshly tables of our hearts, as the only and infallible rule of our faith and practice. The sin that so easily beset the Hebrew disciples is undoubtedly the sin which doth also easily beset the disciples of Christ at this day. There was with them a lamentable want of faith and confidence in Christ, and a strong propensity to be again in bondage to the law. The apostle marveled that the Galatian brethren, before whose eyes Jesus Christ had been evidently set forth crucified among them, were so soon or so easily beset or bewitched with this legal heresy. In order that we then as christians should make good progress in the divine life, we must be stripped for the race, we must lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset us, and look unto Jesus as the Author and Finisher of our faith.

The other and last passage proposed by A Stranger, is 1 John iii. 9. "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him, and he cannot sin, because he is born of God."

This passage is in perfect harmony with those on which we have just offered our opinion. The contrast is most strikingly drawn between the condition of those under the law, and those who are born of God. Those Israelites to whom pertained the giving of the law, were Israelites by a corruptible seed, a carnal or fleshly relationship to Abraham's family, being born in his house, &c. and this seed was not to remain but for a limited period. When the Pharisees came to John's baptism, pleading that Abraham was their father, they were informed that that seed was no longer valid — that it was corruptible and perishable. And our Lord declared most positively to a ruler of the Jews, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." "Marvel not that I said unto you, Ye must be born again." That seed and birth which brought them into Abraham 's house did not qualify them for membership in a Baptist church, neither did it secure them from sin, death and hell; for by grace publicans and harlots were to be brought to the spiritual kingdom, and of these stones God was able to raise up children to Abraham, while the children of the kingdom, the natural seed of Abraham, were to be cast out. The children of the flesh were not counted for the spiritual seed; but "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." The principal difficulty in understanding this text is the declaration that "whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin." This has led many to doubt their own experimental knowledge of the new birth; they find so much corruption, depravity and sin in their nature that forbid the thought that they, of all men, are exempt from sin. But let such remember that neither their nature nor their natural bodies are yet born of God. Their bodies are indeed destined to be, when the Spirit of him that brought again from the dead the body of our Lord Jesus, shall also quicken their mortal bodies in the resurrection, then shall they be free from sin in body as well as spirit.

Sin is the transgression of the law, (see verse 4th, same chapter) but whosoever is born of God is redeemed from the law of sin and death. They are not under the law, but under grace. There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit; for the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus has made them free from the law of sin and death. Being therefore no longer under its dominion, they can no longer transgress the law, and consequently they cannot commit sin in that sense. Although they can and do transgress the law of the kingdom to which they now belong, they cannot be convicted of guilt or sin by the law from which they are delivered; nor is it necessary, seeing that the law of Christ provides that for the transgression of its precepts the offender shall be beaten with many stripes, and this chastisement shall be administered in love for their good, but not in wrath, as sin is punished by the law of sin and death.

It is by the implantation of that seed which remaineth that we have the evidence that we are the sons of God; and this seed is life, it is Christ in you the hope of glory; and this principle of life in us is called the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness, and of which the Lord has said, Thou art all fair, my love, I will behold, no spot in thee. Although the apostle Paul possessed this abiding seed in him, yet he was constrained to acknowledge that in his flesh dwelt no good thing. He found, as all who are born of God do find, a law in his members warring against the law of his mind, and bringing him into captivity to the law of sin that remained in his carnal members. Hence we hear him saying, "But ourselves also, which have received the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." --- Rom. iii. 23

October 15, 1842

Elder William M. Smoot, May, 1905

"My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest." Exodus xxxiii, 14.

What a precious and assuring promise is this! And how full of deep interest and unspeakable comfort the connections in which it stand!

The apparently insurmountable difficulties pathway, loomed up before the sorely tried Moses, the man of Divine appointment, and in the work to which the God of Israel had most surely sent him. The consciousness of his own weakness pressed heavily upon him; and the idolatry, murmuring, bickering, unthankfulness, perverseness and wickedness of the Israel which he was to lead through the terrible wilderness filled him with alarm.

He had already evidence of their unbelief and idolatry, their murmurings against him, and the difficulties which thronged the pathway over which he was to go. He could not rely upon them, for some of the worst enemies to confront him was to rise up out of their midst. He must look alone to the God who had sent him, to give him ability to withstand the enemies within and without the camp, and his own evil spirit as well.

Truly was there need to look no where else, for a fullness of wisdom, strength, and every needed grace was there. No power short of Divine could prepare him for his work, as no power short of this can qualify the ministry of today; "our sufficiency is of God."

He was conscious of his own inability to successfully encounter the trials of the way, and hence he must bring his case to Him who had most surely called said to this great and exalted work. "And Moses the Lord, ...Now therefore, I pray Thee, if I have found grace in Thy sight, shew me now Thy way, that I may know Thee, that I may find grace in Thy sight." Verse 13.

What a wonderful prayer! How distrustful of self! How needful of that supporting grace that could alone lead and keep him in the long, laborious way over which he was now to pass. No power but that of God could sustain him, no wisdom but of God could direct him.

To the cloudy pillar by day he must look, the flaming fire by night, as his Guide and Protector. He must look away from all human help, for he had been taught its utter vanity, and look to God alone. Hence he could well say, "If Thy Presence go not with me, carry us not up hence," verse 15. True indeed did he know that he with him were doomed to fall by the way without Divine Protection. Hence in fervent prayer he calls to God, and Oh! What an assuring answer! "My presence shall go with thee." What boundless comfort this precious assurance! No doubts or congencies are in the promise. "My presence shall." Already he must see by faith the flowing fields of Canaan, the goal of the long the Divine victory in every conflict, and triumph over every obstacle. And what, dear saints, of this to us? As ministers of Gospel grace we have similar assuring testimony: "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." - Matthew xxviii, 20. What blessed power in this assurance as it comes direct from the heavenly throne, as it is spoken in our hearts, as we feel its magic and divine Presence, for "the chariots of God are twenty-thousand, even thousands of angels" The Lord is among them, as in Sinai, in the holy place."- Psalm lxvii, 17.

When worn and weary, hard pressed by foes without and within, when sore trials press upon us, and the billows roll in upon our soul, then do we find Him "a very present Help in trouble."- Psalm xlvi, 1.

"While the raging billows roll, While the tempest still is night."

And when we are fast reaching the end of our mortal pilgrimage, and the waves of death tower high shutting us out every earthly object from our sight then does this blessed Presence dispel the awful gloom of death, and open before us the pearly gates of our immortal home, for the text continues, "I will give thee rest. It is probable that more especial reference is here made to the rest given Moses in the toil and trial through which he was to pass, but this could not be the full meaning of the promise, and the connection in which it stands indicates a far more glorious sequel. 'Tis a blessed thing to rest here in our labor and toil as children of grace to experience the truth of the testimony, "I will give you rest. . . . For My yoke is easy, and My burden is light, Matthew xi, 28-30. To rest in the arms of God, to bask in His smiles; dreary, desolate beyond expression would the world be without such "heavenly places;" for

"Beneath His smiles my heart has lived,
And part of heaven possessed."

It has been perhaps near thirty years now since our attention was first directed to these words. It was on the threshold of a long and laboring journey of near a thousand, beset with difficulties from which our flesh shrank. Again we desired once more to ask the Lord for His divine guidance and protection, the cry had been in our heart for days in anticipation of the journey, but the morning for the start had now arrived, and deepening in our heart arose the cry, similar we trust to that of Moses: "If Thy Presence go not with me, carry us (me) not up hence." Our mind turns back over the waste of years, and as vivid as on that eventful morning we hear again the wondrous words, and our heart feels anew the thrilling power of that blessed assurance; "My Presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest." We went out from the chamber of prayer to face the dreaded journey. It was bright and beautiful day. The sun shone high in the heavens; the earth was full of His praise, while our whole being was filled with an unspeakable calmness, a quiet resting in the arms of our God.

Yea, and all through the long and tedious travel the power of this assurance filled our heart making it a most delightful journey. Here indeed was rest we trust, in the Presence of God. But there is a fullness of rest beyond all these changing scenes of time, and of which this is a delightful foretaste. "I will give thee rest." It is not then dependent upon earthly obligations, it comes as the gift of God.

It comes from His boundless mercy despite our rebellious, vile, carnal complainings and murmuring, our wanderings and perverseness, our sins and iniquities, "if we believe not, yet He abideth faithful: he cannot deny Himself."- 2 Timothy ii, 13. In the same school where Moses learned the lesson of patient waiting upon God and the enduring and supporting nature of His Presence, so do the ministers of Christ learn to look unto Him who has promised to be with them "always, even unto the end of the world." In this severe school they are tried "as by fire." It was said of Joseph, "the archers have sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him. But his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob."- Genesis xlix, 23, 24.

The subjects of their ministration are prepared through similar scenes to receive the word of truth, to appreciate and rejoice in the Gospel, and the ministration thereof. "Blessed is the man whose strength is in Thee; In whose heart are the ways of them, ... They go from strength to strength, every one of them in Zion appeareth before God."- Psalm lxxxiv, 5, 7. It is the Divine Presence alone that sustains the children of Gospel grace in their pathway through time.

It is the promise of rest unending that dispels the gloom of the grave, that overtakes its dark portals in rays of light eternal. "I will give thee rest." Surely such a rest in its fullness can never be found upon mortal shores. Well indeed may it be said with reference to all this, as was declared to Israel in days of old; "Arise ye, and depart for this is not your rest: because it is polluted, it shall destroy you, even with a sore destruction." There is no rest to children of grace in houses and lands, in wealth and or in fame, in mortal relationship, or in any thing that bears the impress of time or mortality. Away from all these we look by faith to climes unclouded by mortal woe, undimmed by earthly night, untainted by mortal pollution, and forever free from sin and death.

"Oh sacred rest for thee we groan,
And bid the wheels of time roll on,
To bring that hour, when we shall rise
To join the chorus of the skies."

It was said of Israel "In all their afflictions He was afflicted, and the angel of His Presence saved them: in His love and in His pity He redeemed them, and He bare them, and carried them all the days of old." Isaiah lxiii, 9. It is this blessed Presence of God that upholds, protects, defends, and sustains the children of grace here, and until faith stretches her pinions for the immortal flight; "For this God is our God forever and ever: He will be our Guide even unto death."- Psalm xlviii, 14. "Nevertheless I am continually with thee: thou hast holden me by my right hand. Thou shalt guide me with Thy counsel and afterward receive me to glory."

Then of what we have written this is the sum that the guiding, sustaining Presence of God shall be made manifest in all the pilgrimage of saints here, and open before them the portals of endless rest hereafter:

"For grace shall guide and glory crown, The happy objects of His care."

"My flesh and my heart faileth; but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion forever."- lxxiii, 26. "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hast Thou ordained strength because of Thine enemies, that Thou mightest still the enemy and the avenger."- viii, 2. "As for me, I will behold Thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied when I awake with Thy likeness." Psalm xvii, 15. May, 1905.

Of God: the Holy Trinity

Truth, in all ages of the world, has been unpopular, but probably never more so than in the present age; and in no part of the world more so, than in America. I cannot therefore flatter myself, with the pleasing hope of gaining much applause from the public voice of my readers, nor do I aim to court the smiles, or fear the frowns of men; but to take the word of God alone for my criterion. To it I make my appeal, by it I wish my doctrine tried, and if anything should appear in the following work repugnant thereto, myself alone is accountable.

When I think of the very important work in which I am about to engage, and know my own imperfections, both as to talents and literature and the general taste for criticism that is almost predominant, I am ready to decline, but when I see the errors, and delusions that are spreading over our land, and the infatuated multitudes, that are floating down this complicated torrent, to the whirlpool of endless ruin, I am again resolved to prosecute my purpose, and if but one be profited thereby, I shall be well rewarded, and my God and Saviour shall have all the praise.

As one of the most important subjects in Theology is God and the Holy Trinity; I shall here invite the attention of my serious reader, to a dispassionate and Scriptural elucidation of this momentous article of the Christian religion. May God lead my mind to write the Truth, and my readers to understand it.

OF GOD AND THE HOLY TRINITY

That there is one indivisible God, who is unbegotten, absolutely of Himself and without beginning, is a doctrine well supported from Scripture. Psa. 45:6, "Thy throne Oh God, is forever and ever." Psa. 90:2, "Even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God." This Truth may also be proven from the things that are seen which declare His eternal power and Godhead, from our own existence, from the existence of all things around us and from His impressions on the minds of men. I think it unnecessary to consume time in offering any arguments in support of the Being, and Unity of God; for who but an Atheist ever denied His Being? Or who that professes the Christian name, will deny His Unity? My present object is, to illustrate the doctrine of the Trinity, or show in what sense God is triune.

No article in Theology is more generally subscribed to than the unity, and indivisibility of the Divine Essence. Yet while the Christian world is so generally agreed to the unity of the divine essence, various are the conjectures, and diversified are the conclusions drawn from the same premises. The Arian, the Socinian, the Sabellian, and the Trinitarian all agree to the unity of the divine essence; but when these different sects undertake to explain the mode of His existence in this essence, they are at once divided. One infers from personal pronouns, plural nouns, etc., that there are three distinct persons existing in the one essence of God; while another infers from the indivisibility of the divine essence that Jesus Christ was not divine except by delegation. Warm have been the disputes, and fiery the zeal of each of those parties; and many are the cruelties which have betrayed the malignity of these partisans. This should admonish us to be satisfied with what the Scriptures reveal and not go farther than we have a positive "thus saith the Lord," for then we know we are right. Is it not sinful to attempt to comprehend the mode of existence in the divine essence farther than God has revealed it? If so, let us retract and like humble disciples, throw off our loads and clogs of tradition, and come as learners to the Bible for instruction. Let us not be wise above what is written.

The first thing for our consideration is, can we comprehend God? No, we cannot, see Job 11:7-9. "Canst thou by searching find out God? Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? It is as high as heaven; what canst thou do? Deeper than hell; what canst thou know? The measure is longer than the earth, and broader than the sea." Job 37:5, 23. "Great things doth He, which we cannot comprehend; touching the Almighty, we cannot find Him out." See also. Psa. 77:19, Isa. 40:28, Rom. 11:33-34. From the above passages we are taught that man cannot comprehend God. What folly then! What presumptuous folly to attempt to comprehend the very mode of His existence; but vain man would be wise. Now it is no way mysterious, that the first cause of all things should be incomprehensible; but it is very unreasonable for man, a creature of a day, a child of mortality, a finite and fallen being, to presume to comprehend the mode of existence of His infinite Creator. The next thing to which we shall invite the attention of the reader is the unity of God as an object of worship. Exod. 34:14. "Thou shalt worship no other God" 1 Cor. 8:4, 6. "There is none other God but one; to us there is but one God." See Psalm 83:18, Isa. 40:8, Isa. 45:21-22. This God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him, must worship in spirit. As I presume all professing Christians will agree to the unity and indivisibility of God, or the divine essence, I shall pass to the main object of this chapter, which is: the Holy Trinity.

This subject is of very great importance, and requires much attention, not only on account of its sublimity and worth; but on account of the spurious philosophy and sophism in which this doctrine has been long shrouded. That we may not err in this article, we come at once to the Scriptures, to hear there what God the Lord has revealed. That God is revealed in a triune manner, is evident from 1 John 5:7, "There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one." We have been often told that these three are persons, each divine, and one in essence; but does the Scripture say so? If not, it is only conjecture; and not revelation. Neither has it any foundation in good reason, for reason forbids the idea of three distinct persons, each one truly and properly God, considered by itself, distinct from the other two, and yet but one God. If the first, second and third person, each one distinct form the other two be a God, there is no reason in saying there is but one God; but if there be but one God, there is no reason in saying that there are three persons and each one distinctly considered, truly and properly God.

Nevertheless, if God has revealed this, we must believe the fact; but I challenge the Christian world, to present one solitary text in the Old or New Testament, that says anything much or little about there being three divine persons in the Godhead, or about three distinct persons being one in the unity of the divine essence. If this be a truth, it is not a Bible Truth A word on the Trinity; 1 John 5:7. "There are three that bear record in Heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one." The apostle is here adducing several evidences, by which the people of God are distinguished, such as faith, love and obedience. At the 5th verse he asks: "Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?" verse 6. "This is He that came by water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood. And it is the Spirit that beareth witness because the Spirit is truth." Here are three, the water, the blood, and the Spirit, that bear witness that Christ has come. Shall we call them persons? If so there are three persons in every man for all men have water, spirit, and blood. – verse 7 – "There are three that bear record in heaven; the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one." The eleventh verse informs us what this record is: "This is the record: that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in His Son." – verse 8 – "There are three that bear witness in earth, the spirit, and water, and the blood; and these three agree in one." See verse 10. "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself." Now it is plain; the earth that the water, spirit and blood, bear witness in is the believer; for, "he that believeth hath the witness in himself." So the heaven in which the Father, Word, and Holy Ghost bear record is the church; for "This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in His Son." Then eternal life given to us in the Son of God is the record borne in heaven [that is, in the church called the kingdom of heaven] and the Scriptures contain the record; hence "in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they, which testify" of Jesus Christ the Son of God, and of that life which God hath given us in Him. The word record, and the word witness are synonymous terms, see Rom. 10:2 -"For I bear them record" - that is, I bear them witness. The Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, bear record in heaven, [the Church, or Kingdom of heaven] and the Scriptures contain the record, which testify that God hath given us [the subjects of this heavenly kingdom] eternal life, and this life is in His Son. These three are one, that is one God, or one Testifier. God was manifest in the flesh, God was in Christ who came by water and blood, and the Spirit beareth witness because the Spirit is truth. "The Word was made flesh. "John 1:14. The Father was in Him. John 10:38 "The Father is in Me, and I in Him." The Spirit was upon Him. Isa. 61:1. "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon Me." These three are one. Christ says, "I and My Father are one." John 10:30. Thus from positive Scripture language we see, that when the Word was made flesh the Father was in Him, and the Spirit of the Lord God upon Him; here are the three that bear record in heaven in Jesus Christ - who came by water and blood, to which the Spirit beareth witness. By water He was manifested to Israel, see John 1:31. "That He should be made manifest to Israel, therefore I am come baptizing with water." When Jesus was baptized, the Spirit in the form of a dove, and the voice or testimony of the Father was given in saying, "this is My beloved Son." Matt. 3-17. Here the Father that was in Him, and the Spirit that was upon Him; bear record to the senses of John, that this was the Messiah, and John "saw and bear record that this is the Son of God." (John 1:31-34 inclusive.) Here are the three that bear record in heaven, in the one person of Jesus Christ; who was manifested to Israel by water in baptism; by blood He redeemed His church, and the Spirit beareth witness in the church. So in earth, that is, in every believer, the water, the Spirit, and the blood bear witness . The water in washing, see Heb. 10:22. "Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water;" 1 Cor. 6: 11 - the blood in witnessing to our pardon and justification [1 Pet. 1:1-2] and the Spirit in quickening the man and applying to him, both the cleansing water, and atoning blood; so these three agree in one. Of what we have said, this is the sum. The three that bear record in heaven are all in Jesus Christ, who established His kingdom on earth, and delivered this record to it in His word. He was the everlasting Father, Isa. 9:6. He was a quickening Spirit, see 1 Cor. 15:45 -"The last Adam was made a quickening spirit." He was the Word. John 1:14. "The Word was made flesh and dwelt amongst us." Now these three are one; that is, God the Father, or first cause, is a Holy Spirit, or a most pure Spirit, as says our confession, and this God was manifested in the flesh, or man Christ Jesus, or the Word, which was the Son of God. The kingdom of Heaven which Christ came to establish on earth is the heaven in which the record is borne, and the Scriptures are the record book, or in which the record is registered. The three that bear witness in earth, are the water to wash His subjects, the Spirit to quicken them, and the blood to justify them, and their earthly body is the earth in which they bear witness, for the comfort of the soul; and these three agree in one God-man, whose divine Spirit quickens them, washes them with water by the word, and justifies them by His blood. So we see nothing favoring the tri-personal scheme of Athanasius in this passage; but we find that the whole Trinity was in one person, and the man Christ Jesus, whose divine nature was the Triune God, and whose humanity, or person, was the Mediator, according, to I Tim. 2:5. "There is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus." Although this text has been so often called, or rather forced into, the tri-personal service, yet it says not one word about persons more or less, therefore it can prove nothing for them, more or less.

Objection: May we not fairly infer three persons, as there are three that bear record and bearing record is a personal act? Answer: We are no better supported in inferring persons from the three that bear record in heaven, than we should be in inferring three persons from the three that bear witness in earth, for bearing witness, is as much a personal act, as bearing record, and as no man ever will attempt to infer persons in the latter case, in any other than a figure of speech, personifying that which is not a person, there is no more justice in the former case, than in the latter. Since God is a Spirit, it would fair better to say there are "three spirits that bear record in heaven," but the text does not allow this either.

Premises must be settled by positive testimony, and then, we may infer with some safety; but inferential witnesses will not do to settle premises upon. If I read the account of three thousand souls being added to the church in one day; as recorded in Acts 2:41, and then infer that all, or some of them were infants; I am equally as well supported in drawing this inference, as when I infer persons in the other case. If it be objected on the ground that infants are not mentioned in the latter case; I answer, neither are persons mentioned in the latter case; I answer neither are persons mentioned in the former case, and if I may infer persons, from the three that bear record in heaven, then with equal propriety, I may infer infants, from the three thousand that were added to the church in a day. Then I may as fairly infer infant baptism and infant church membership in this case; as three distinct divine persons in the Godhead, in the other case.

PSALM 87.

His foundation is in the holy mountains.

The Lord loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob.

Glorious things are spoke of thee, O city of God. Selah.

I will make mention of Rahab and Babylon to them that know me: behold Philistia, and Tyre with Ethiopia; this man was born there.

And of Zion it shall be said, This and that man was born in her: and the highest himself shall establish her.

The Lord shall count, when he writeth up the people, that this man was born there. Selah.

As well the singers as the players on instruments shall be there: all my springs are in thee.

The Gospel Standard ON THE PASTORIAL OFFICE.

Messrs. Editors,---To know and clearly see the truth of the gospel of the Lord Jesus in its genuine harmony and unalloyed purity, is very important and momentous, but to be enabled to claim our own personal interest in it, and to call its sweet promises and invitations ours, is infinitely more important, at least for the present comfort of the soul, The former I have been enabled for some time past to realize, but the latter. I verily believe I have never yet been able to come at, but I have often thought my experience was like nobody's else. I can hear some tell with what condemning force and terrifying horrors the law has come home to their conscience, and what deep insufferable convictions they felt when the Lord first began with them, and that they can tell the time and place when he did begin with them, and I am far from saying this is not the way the Lord is pleased to bring some of his children; but if ever the Lord has begun with me, this is not the way I have been led. I cannot tell any particular place, time, or even means by which I was first convinced of my sins, only I remember (it is some years since) I began to feel I was not fit to die, and that I was an unholy creature before God; and I thought some change must take place in me, some way or other, or I could not go to heaven. With these feelings I firmly resolved to be better and holier. Accordingly, I set to praying, as I thought, more fervently and sincerely, and reading my Bible regularly, attended preaching, and attempted to remember all the preacher said, and was determined to practice it. For some time I followed this course, striving hard to keep up to this standard, but often falling far short, which always gave me great anguish of soul, but would again make fresh resolutions and fresh attempts to be good and holy, and would watch and guard my thoughts and words; but the more holy I strived to get, the oftener I came short, and, consequently, felt distressed and grieved in my soul, In this way, striving and doing, I went on about eighteen months or two years, without one particle of gospel hope or peace. I had no more knowledge of the gospel way of salvation, and of Christ as a complete free grace saving Redeemer to poor helpless sinners, than a ranting Arminian has, though at this time I was among independents, and with a view that I might get holier.

I joined their church; but I was only the more miserable, for I thought they should feel very holy and pious when they received the Lord's supper, and I felt myself really a vile wretched sinner before a heart-searching God, and could not be persuaded but I was an unworthy receiver. I passed amongst them as a very pious young man; whereas, I felt wearied and sick of my filthy corrupt heart; and was burdened and grieved because I could not, feel holier and better, according to the preacher's doctrine. Thus it is, if ever the Lord convinced me of my sins it was in this gradual way. Still I am persuaded, if the Holy Ghost ever did convince me, it was in a moment of time, though I knew it not.

Some can not only tell the exact time when they were quickened and convinced of sin, but they can tell equally as exactly the time and spot where and when the Lord set their soul at liberty; when they felt justified, pardoned, and accepted of God. Now whether this cut me off as being a Christian or not, solemnly in the sight of a heart-searching God, I can no more tell this than the former; and if none have a right to be called Christians but those who can thus set their seal to their adoption, I frankly confess I have no right to be considered one. When I was in the very height of labouring for inward holiness to fit me for heaven, consequently miserable in my very soul, (because I could not feel I got any better before God,) I met with a friend who held the doctrines of grace, I believe, in their purity. He laid them before me very plainly and simply, and I was enabled, without much hesitation or opposition to them, to see them very clearly, and by and bye, with some persuasion, I began to preach them, and have continued so to do ever since, as the Lord has enabled me, (if indeed he has sent me,) and since then I have often rejoiced to know the doctrines of sovereign grace. My heart has leaped within me to know there are such glorious truths for poor, helpless sinners, and a dear sight of the harmony of grace sets my soul on wheels up to this time; but mind you, I do not thus rejoice in the truth because I see it for myself, and can claim my interest in it. O, no; for I believe I never was solidly able thus to see it. I rejoice simply in the knowledge of the truth itself, and I do love the truth, to hear and see it; but I cannot tell you for why, for I really cannot see my interest in it. When I have been in the pulpit at times, I have said, "I know I am interested in Christ and his finished work," but almost as soon as I have said it, I have keenly questioned whether I was not lying, and afterwards I have thought I said it more by way of bravado in the face of Satan, than from an assurance of the fact. At times I have thought I had a little resting hope on Christ as mine, and just about to cast my soul upon him, and rest with a full assurance in him, when a gust of doubts and fears has come like a whirlwind and blown all away, — and left me in misery. This is just as much as I can say respecting my knowledge of my interest in Christ and his gospel. I am indeed very far from being able to tell the time or place when I felt justified, pardoned, and my soul set at liberty. I cannot say any such thing without making myself a lying hypocrite. Indeed, I cannot say I ever felt my soul thus set at liberty. As I have said before, I feel a pleasure and delight in seeing and knowing the truth, and I feel Christ precious for the sake of his work, but not because I know my interest in that work, for I do not; only I have a longing hope to know it to be mine.

Such has been my conviction of sin, and such is the knowledge I have of the truth for myself; and in this stage of matters I have to preach, or try to preach, Christ crucified.

Now, Messrs. Editors, I have told you as plainly and honestly as I possibly can, a little of my past and present experience, God be my witness, whom from my very heart I solemnly wish to be judged by, for man in general I am afraid of. Still I could wish you, or some of your experienced correspondents, to answer me, and tell me the genuine proofs of a man's being sent to preach the gospel; whether it be, as some say, that a man has no right to preach until he knows Christ assuredly for himself, by the Spirit of adoption, and be able to say," I am his and he is mine," and to realize his own interest in the gospel; or if feeling preaching heavily impressed on his mind be a proof; or if the Lord owning and blessing his own word by him, with unction and power, to the hearts of his poor broken-hearted children be a proof; or whatever" else may be the real proof, to state it. For me to preach, if I thought the Lord had not called me to it, I think I could almost rather suffer death, for false preachers I know are so abominable in God's sight, so hurtful to the church of Christ, and so abundant at this day, Which ever of you answer me, I hope the Lord will enable you to be faithful, and speak on the subject scripturally, impartially, and plainly; for these are solemn realities, not to be played with; and may the God of never ending mercies be the comfort and consolation of poor mourning souls.

PSALM 14:2.

ROMANS V. 3-5.

Agreeable to a desire of sister Peck, we offer a few remarks in regard to the working of the tribulation, &c., in harmony with all other things, for the special good of God's people, and the glory own great name. The inquiry is made, "How does tribulation work patience, and patience experience, and experience hope that maketh not ashamed?" In reply, suffer us to ask, What could christians know about the grace or the action of patience, if we had not trials or tribulation? Suppose that we were placed in circumstances of perpetual joy and ease, we should know something of gratification, but in that condition we could never become acquainted with patience. Nothing short of tribulation can call forth into exercise the principle and grace of patience, and it is on that account the apostle says, "Tribulation worketh patience," and in the same connection, of one of the graces of the Spirit working in harmony with all the other graces, that "patience worketh experience." This was illustrated in the case of poor old Job. The apostle says, "You have heard of the patience of Job, and seen the end of the Lord." The end, or design of the Lord, in Job's tribulation, was that in the final issue, Job might have occasion to record his experience of the dealing of the Lord with him, thoroughout that dreadful conflict. "I have heard of thee, by the hearings of the ear; but now mind eye seeth thee." This is the difference between theory and experience. He had heard before, but now he had actual experience. And it is so with us; our patience in tribulation stores our mind with rich experience of the divine goodness. Jeremiah also had tasted the wormwood and the gall, and had, like David, waited patiently for the Lord, and this had given him experience which strengthened his hope. My soul, said he, hath them still in remembrance, therefore, I have hope. Thus his tribulation worked patience, and patience experience, hope. But what kind of a hope would we have if we were destitute of experience? We remember our experience, and all the way the Lord our God has led us, and our hope is revived, and we say with the poet,

> "His love in times past, forbids me to think
> He'll leave me at last, in trouble to sink;
> Each sweet Ebenezer still rising to view,
> Confirms his good pleasure to help me quite through."

This hope being well grounded, and supported by actual experience of the loving-kindness of our covenant God, will never fail, or make us ashamed. The makers of idols shall be ashamed, and they shall all go to confusion together. But they that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion. They shall not be ashamed nor confounded, world without end.

HYMN

There is a fountain, fill'd with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins;
And sinners, plunged beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains,

The dying thief rejoiced to see
That fountain in his day;
O may I there, though vile as he,
Wash all my sins away.

Dear, dying Lamb! thy precious blood
Shall never lose its power,
Till all the ransomed church of God
Be saved, to sin no more

E'er since, by faith, I saw the stream
Thy flowing wounds supply,
Redeeming love has been my theme,
And shall be till I die.

Then in a nobler, sweeter song,
I'll sing thy power to save,
When this poor, lispering, stammering tongue
Lies silent in the grave.

Cowper.

Isaiah 43:1&2, "But now thus saith the Lord that created thee, O Jacob, and he that formed thee, O Israel, fear not: for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine. When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee: when thou walkest through the fire, thou shall not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee."

Elder Cleo D. Robertson

This chapter is very beautiful and very comforting. The Lord speaks through his prophet Isaiah concerning His work of grace. Jacob sets forth the fleshly or natural man and Israel sets forth the spiritual. When Jacob wrestled with a man all during the dark night, it was the spiritual manifestation of God applying the law to Jacob. For Jacob could say "I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved." The Lord touched the hollow of Jacob's thigh and it was out of joint. Jacob would no longer walk as he once did relying on his own strength. But, the Lord was his staff that he would lean on and be his strength and help. As the light of day began to break, Jacob asked to be blessed. The Lord said unto Jacob "What is thy name?" Jacob had to confess my name is Jacob. I am a sinner. I am a deceiver. I am a supplanter. Then the Lord said, "Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel: for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed." The nighttime of the law had past and the light of the day of grace, the gospel day, shined forth. The Lord blessed Jacob there.

How comforting the word of the Lord to His little children of grace, "Fear not: for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine." O how wonderful that with God there is no uncertainty, no chance, no leaving salvation to the fleshly man. With the Father of lights, there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning, for the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are His." By His shedding of blood, death and resurrection, He redeemed His elect from their sins. They are His. He knows their name and calls them out of nature's darkness into His marvelous light. He said that of all the Father gave Him, He should lose none but should raise it up at the last day. He said He was the good shepherd and knows His sheep and am known of them.

"When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee." The waters set forth the trials, troubles and tribulations that His people must go through in this life. He doesn't say "if" thou passest through the waters, but "when." He has promised you tribulations as He said "In the world ye shall have tribulations: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." Though you will experience many trials, troubles, tribulations and sorrows in this world, He, who cannot lie, promised to be with you. He did not promise to take you out of the tribulation, but to be with you through it. The Apostle Paul besought the Lord three times to remove the thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan that was buffeting him. This experience of Paul was purposed by God to keep him humble and meek lest he should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations. So the Lord did not remove it, but He told the Apostle "My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness." Through your trials you are made to look unto the Lord and beg for His strength, mercy, love and grace.

"And through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee." Do you ever feel that the rivers of false doctrines, lies from high places, persecutions and all the calamites of the world spewing forth from the mouth of the serpent are about to overflow and destroy you! The Lord speaks to you in that small, still voice, "Fear not, they shall not overflow thee." As David said in Psalm 27:5, "For in the time of trouble He shall hide me in His pavilion: in the secret of His tabernacle shall He hide me; He shall set me up upon a rock." David also said, "He brought me up also out of an horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock and established my goings." You, my dear people, have been set on the foundation which is Christ and you cannot be washed away or destroyed. How do you think Stephen felt when he was being stoned and gnashed on with teeth because he set forth the truth in Christ and those non-believers were not able to resist the wisdom and the spirit by which he spake. So they accused him of speaking blasphemous words against Moses and against God. These stirred up the people, the elders and the scribes against him. The Lord filled him with the Holy Ghost and he, through an eye of faith, looked up into heaven and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God. Stephen saw Jesus as the Son of man who had suffered more than he was suffering; who had shed His blood, died and rose again. What great comfort! Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints. Stephen, called upon God, saying, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." And then "he kneeled down and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he fell asleep." I believe the Lord gave Stephen such peace and comfort that it was as though he just went to sleep. With his eye of faith beholding Jesus, I do not believe he was even aware of what was happening to him. You cannot see Jesus and the world at the same time.

"When thou walkest through the fire, thou shall not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee." Peter said, "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you as though some strange thing happened unto you: But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings: that, when His glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." Isaiah 48:10 says, "Behold, I have refined thee, but not with silver; I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction." As gold is tried in the furnace of fire, so you must be tried by fire. The more gold is tried by fire the brighter it shines. So with you, the more you are tried by the trials, troubles, tribulations, sorrows, afflictions and persecutions the manifest is the fruit of the Spirit which is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance. The three Jewish men who refused to worship the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar set up were cast into a furnace of fire that was heated seven times more than it was wont to be heated. The flame of the fire slew those men who took up the three men of God. But these three were completely clothed from head to feet. So the Lord clothes His people with the whole armour of God before they ever experience the fiery furnace. Therefore, you shall not be burned and neither shall the flame kindle against you. Your loins are girt about with truth. You have on the breastplate of righteousness. Your feet are shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. You have the shield of faith, the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit which is the word of God. You go praying with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit. The three Jews were not harmed in the fiery furnace and there was a fourth like the Son of God walking with them. So with a child of grace tried by fire, the very image of Christ is manifested.

Isaiah 43:13, "Yea, before the day was I am he; and there is none that can deliver out of my hand: I will work, and who shall let it?"

Isaiah 43:21, "This people have I formed for myself; they shall shew forth my praise."

May the Lord be with each of you and bless you with peace and comfort.

VOICES OF THE PAST

AS THE DAYS OF A TREE

In a beautiful little valley, at the foot of a mountain, a little seedling burst through the earth and began to grow up toward the warm sunlight. The root began to grow downward in the rich soil. The little tree waved its tiny branches in the gentle breezes and the rains kept its bright green leaves all clean and shining.

The little tree kept growing until, one day, it was transplanted to a field on the mountain top. There it started to grow, and the root began to take firm hold in the soil. But one day a storm came and the little tree was rocked to and fro in the mighty wind that blew upon it. It was bowed over almost to the ground. But the root held firm and the tree kept growing, though it never stood as straight and proud as before. Some of its leaves had been stripped off.

Nevertheless, the tree stood firm and as tall as it could with the storms still coming. When the sun shined and the gentle rains fell the tree kept growing, waving its branches, ever stretching up toward the beautiful sky above.

In a few years another tree was transplanted near the first tree. As its root took firm hold in the earth its branches grew taller, ever reaching up toward the heaven and the bright sunlight.

The two trees mingled their branches together and when the storms came, they were both waved to and fro by the strong winds and snow and hail that beat upon them, breaking their branches and bending the trees so they did not stand as straight and tall as before; but the roots held firm and the two trees kept growing, ever reaching their branches toward the sky.

Many seasons passed and many storms blew upon them, but the root still held fast. With each severe storm the two trees were a little more scarred, some of the limbs broken off, their bark became scarred and broken.

For almost three quarters of a century the trees stood (one-half century side by side) and weathered many storms together. But the root of the first tree began to loosen its firm hold in the earth. It began to weaken and tremble in the wind. Finally a storm came, more terrible than any before and the root let go its last hold in the earth. The tree came crashing down, shaking and bending the other tree whose branches had, over the years, closely intermingled with the first tree until they were almost as one.

There the first tree lay, waiting to be dissolved back into the mother earth from which it sprang.

Now the second tree stands alone, not proud, straight and tall as before, but bowed over, its limbs broken and scarred from the many storms which had broken upon it. But the root is still holding, perhaps not so firm as before. It has stood for fourscore years, still with its scarred branches stretching upward toward the sky, waiting for the root to loose its hold in the mother earth. Then it will fall there beside the first tree, their branches still touching each other, just waiting ---

EXPERIENCE OF EDRIE T. CLIFTON
June 10, 1994

One night recently, as I was preparing to retire, a storm came up, with vivid lightning flashes and loud peals of thunder. I wanted something to read before retiring, so I picked up a back issue of Signs of the Times. It was dated September, 1992. I went into my bedroom, sat down and opened to the Editorial. I read the text which was this:

"They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands." (Isaiah 65:22)

Just as I finished reading the text, the lightning came and the room was in total darkness. I lay down upon my bed and my mind began to meditate upon the words I had just read. How true that our days are as the days of a tree! My mind was carried back over the lives of my dear companion and myself. How plainly I could see that each storm of life we had endured had stripped us of our self works, had made us see the folly of the things we had once engaged in and, storm by storm, had bowed our heads a little more. But for the Root which had held firmly, we would have long been gone the way of the world. But that Root (the offspring of David) had held strong and secure. Each storm stripped off a little more pride and self works. As we grew older and less able to bear the storms, it seemed they became more severe, until a mighty storm came upon my companion, the last trial he was to endure in this life. Pain ravished his mortal body until he suffered the last one. The Root let loose its earthly hold and his spirit was carried up to the heavenly home where the Root was anchored.

Now I am here, just waiting, knowing that God doeth all things right and when my time comes to go, may I be carried to that celestial city where I hope my Root is anchored, safe and secure.

The lights came back on before midnight. I finished reading the article and in my feelings, I reached across the miles and years and clasped the dear precious sister (who had written the article) in my arms. As I lay there, rejoicing in the beautiful meditations she had given, sleep closed my weary eyes.

Lord, my heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty: neither do I exercise myself in great matters, or in things too high for me.

Surely I have behaved and quieted myself, as a child that is weaned of his mother: my soul is even as a weaned child.

EXPERIENCE
JANUARY, 1949

"That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us."—1 John 1:3

On this beginning of a new year we are mindful to meditate upon the things which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon and our hands have handled out of the word of life. We have a desire to review the Lord's dealings with us, giving diligence to make our calling and election sure. We are writing this epistle to the household of faith beseeching you to note the waymarks along the path we have traveled. If it so be that you recognize the markers along the way as being the path you have traveled, then you have fellowship with us; if they be strange to you, then you can class us as a stranger to the household of faith.

It has been so long since we have written you that we feel some kind of explanation would be appropriate. A few months ago we were employed by a concern that required our services from eleven to seventeen hours a day for six to seven days each week. We were content to pursue this with the vain thought that at an opportune time we could again take up our communion with brethren and meditations upon the Scriptures. We held this position three months and upon its termination tried fervently for one month to renew our relationship with brethren and lay hold on the Spirit of God. It pleased God to cut us off and to make us know that our trials were vain.

When we had given up all hope and were persuaded that we had been a deceiver and that our lot was with the wicked, the Lord graciously came to our rescue, renewing our interest and relationship with Him and our brethren. Prior to this wonderful renewing of the Spirit we tried many times to pray, meditate, write and sing, but it was so cold and formal that it made us shudder. As in the case of John we had to be shown again that Jesus was the Christ. Do you ever go down into the valley so low that you forget your dependence upon the grace of God and strive in vain to deliver yourself? Are your strivings and seeming zeal ever so formal and cold that you are condemned as a hypocrite?

Now I would like to go back in my meditations, the Lord willing, and briefly state to you some of the highlights along the pathway that I have traveled. I was born September 28, 1906 in Amity, Arkansas. I was brought up under the tutorship of religious parents of high moral character who taught that a home in heaven was gained by good works done by individuals here. I was taught that I was capable of performing these good works upon my own volition. I grew up as a regular attendant in Sunday School and church, and zealously studied the Bible from my earliest recollections. I began to speak in public before I was ten years old and was given the position as Sunday School teacher in my early teens. When I was fifteen I became a member of the Kelly Division of the Missionary Baptist Church, and on the next night gave a prepared lecture on John 3:16. I was often called upon to speak in the absence of ordained ministers, and while yet in my teens was ordained to the full work of ministry in that denomination. I had a bad case of "I-itus" feeling myself to be worthy of imitation and classing myself as being the most influential speaker in that section of the country. I was very zealous in revival meetings trying to show sinners that they were treading the path that leads to hell and urging them to turn, do right and be saved.

During this period of my career I think God taught me my first lesson. An ordained minister from Hot Springs, Arkansas had been selected to conduct a revival in the community where I was teaching school. Night after night he vehemently warned sinners to flee the wrath to come. He had labored hard to move them to action but not one had come to the "mourner's bench." The night before the meeting was scheduled to close he came to me and told me that he had done all that he could do and had gotten no results, requesting me to take charge the next night and see what I could do. I agreed to do this as I saw that it was an opportunity for me to make a greater reputation.

I carried my Bible and notebook with me to school the next day and on my return stopped beside a brook and outlined a sermon on the theme, "Sinners in the hands of an angry God," using as a text, "Thou shalt be cut off and that without remedy."

I was anxious for the meeting to begin that night. I was blessed with oratorical eloquence to such an extent that hell was pictured so awful, and God as being so angry at their unconcernedness that when the altar call was made, many people flocked to the altar. I have never forgotten the anxious expression of fear amidst the tears on the face of the first one who extended her hand toward me at that time. Neither shall I forget the awful tones of the voice of Almighty God when He spake to me just before I took her hand in mine. This voice thundered, "Who are you, that you should invite?" My fears were made more terrible when that same voice convinced me that I was a sinner, a hypocrite and a liar. This was the first time that I had ever realized myself as a sinner. The blackest, vile person that I had thought of before seemed then to be my superior.

While I was in this awful frame of mind people tried to tell me how proud I should be to be able to move the people in such a way. Their intended flowers were as thorns that condemned me more. I slipped out of the house as soon as possible and tried to flee from that terrible condition. I tried to get myself right with God. The things that I had gloried in before were as filthy rags. For months and months I moped about as a condemned sinner finding no comfort or consolation in anything. I finally had given up the idea of making myself right with God when it pleased Him to teach me another lesson.

Circumstances over which I had no control placed me in a community far distant from my home where they had heard of me as being a preacher and had arranged for me to preach one Sunday night there. I was given this information only one hour before the service was to begin. My pleadings would not convince them that I had quit appearing before the public as a preacher. Being caught in such circumstances, I was finally persuaded that I could act the hypocrite at least one more time. I thought I could pick up one of my old themes and lecture to them, but I could not think of anything other than that I was a sinner.

Up to this time I had never heard of anyone posing as a preacher who would be so disgraceful as to confess himself to be a sinner. I went before a big audience unprepared, with a blank mind concerning the Scriptures. My foremost thought was that I was a sinner. I was so upset that I did not go into the form of prayer, but groaned within myself, "God, have mercy on me." "I have never known whether I read any scripture or not, but I was given to feast upon the power, wisdom and holiness of God. God revealed Himself to me that night as having all power in heaven and earth, who spoke and it was done; who commands and it stands fast. I saw Him as being so wise that He could consecrate the acts of men and devils to His own praise and glory. He appeared as being so holy that He had a wonderful and righteous purpose in everything. When I came to realize where I was that night, I closed the services, yet feasting upon the characteristics of God. I continued to enjoy these thoughts enroute home that night in my car alone. When about midway home, my thoughts were reversed from thinking upon God to thinking of myself. I saw a great gulf between God's power and my inability; God's wisdom and my foolishness; God's holiness and my sinfulness. I tried again in vain for months to span this gulf and get myself right with God. When I had given up all hope it pleased God to teach me another lesson.

Several months later I was teaching in this little town where I had this last related experience, when a member of the school board especially requested me to attend with him a Wednesday night service in the home of one J. H. Langston. Elder A. D. Wall, who then lived in Arkansas, was scheduled to preach. Up to this time I had never associated with Primitive Baptists and did not know anything about them. I had heard that there was an ignorant people who lived in remote places who were called "Hardshells" whom I was taught to fear and ignore. I was informed that they justified themselves in the many devilish acts that they performed and charged all their meanness to God. I had heard that Uncle Henry Langston was a "Hardshell" and I quickly informed this man that I did not care to attend the service with him, giving him my reason. He immediately told me that he was surprised at my attitude and further added, "If I have ever heard a Primitive Baptist sermon you preached it here in this town." I told him that I would go with him for curiosity's sake as I had always wondered what I said that night, and that had yearned for such experience again.

I went and Elder Wall was blessed to take up every question that had bothered my mind and answered it with the Bible to my entire satisfaction. Before he was through speaking that night I was blessed to view a character that I had never seen before. I saw Jesus who was very God and very man span the gulf that was between me and my God. I saw that dual character loom up before me with one foot upon the earth, and the other upon the throne of. God in heaven. I saw Him stoop lower than the angels, yes lower than men. I saw Him as He reached down into the miry slime of the slough of sin, and even reach low enough to reach vile me. I saw Him as He picked me up and washed me whiter than snow with His blood, and presented me without blemish, spot or wrinkle carrying me across the gulf and presenting me in the holiest of holies in the presence of Almighty God as a fit subject for that eternal city.

Such mercy and amazing grace I had never been able to behold before. I was made to cry out praises to His adorable name. I thought I had confessed Jesus as my Savior but found I had known nothing about Him before. I found myself speaking in a strange language that all my former associates knew nothing about and they concluded I was crazy I began attending Primitive Baptist churches and to my surprise found that the ministers were telling my experience and thoughts far better than I could express them.

In the year 1930, all my earthly possessions were taken from me; my first wife died; my body was afflicted and my parents turned a cold shoulder to me feeling that I had disgraced their good name. In the midst of all this, and my feeling of unworthiness, I became a member of the church that same year and was liberated to speak in the name of Christ. I was ordained in the year 1934 and married a Primitive Baptist girl whom the Lord has blessed to be a sweet companion to me. She understands my infirmities, and overlooks my many faults and patiently shares with me the heartaches and tribulations attached to the career of a minister of the gospel. I have traveled among this people in the different sections of the country and find such unity in belief that I am persuaded that all are taught by the same Teacher. I am determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified. He is our salvation both for time and eternity.

God has taught me in His wonderful dealings with me the doctrine of salvation solely upon the merits of Jesus Christ to such extent that any other doctrine is strange to my ears. I believe Jesus accomplished the law to a jot and a tittle, and His accomplishments were accredited to the account of the people who were chosen in Him before the foundation of the world. His blood covered all the sins that God's people have ever committed, are committing now or ever shall commit. This is not proclaimed because of any theory advanced by anyone, but because of the things that I have experienced.

BAPTISM
FEBRUARY, 1951

The subject of baptism has been a subject of great controversy throughout the centuries. Many false and erroneous theories have been advocated which have tended to confuse the minds of God's little children. This is due to the fact that theologians have attempted to supplant a theological meaning of the term that is foreign to the classical meaning in order to prop up their false theories in trying to hinge salvation on the volition and work of the creature. This has narrowed the conception of the term, baptism, to that ceremonial use of water to admit members into an organized body here upon earth termed the church. I do not believe the term is so narrow in its scope. When I think of baptism I like to meditate upon the classical meaning instead of the theological use of the term.

To baptize is to immerse, submerge, envelope, overwhelm or sink; to dip, wash, or drench; to consecrate; to completely subdue. This is the essence of the classical meaning. Even theologians who advocate sprinkling as the proper mode of baptism admit this. I think that baptism in literal water is figurative and typical of the baptism that is essential unto salvation. No man is able, empowered or authorized to do that. This is the work of God.

I want to call your attention to one Scripture that will conclusively prove that water baptism is not meant every time the term is used in the Scriptures. Jesus said as recorded in Luke 12:50, "But I have a baptism to be baptized with; and how am I straitened till it be accomplished." The word straitened means pained. He was undoubtedly speaking of His baptism in death. He was speaking of the time when death would envelop Him, when He would be overwhelmed with suffering and submerged into death. This statement was made approximately two years after His baptism in Jordan. (I think His baptism in Jordan was pointing to, and figurative of, His baptism in death.)

Now, let us consider Romans 6:3. "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?" Paul did not say or hint at water in this expression. If Paul had said, know ye not that as many of us as were baptized in water were baptized in Jesus Christ and into His death; then, the modern theorists would have something to base their arguments upon. Since he did not say this, let us take for granted that he said what he meant and meant what he said. He said, "were baptized into Jesus Christ." Can any man immerse one into Jesus Christ? We may baptize in water in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost but man cannot baptize into Jesus Christ. I believe that God chose His people in Christ in the annals of eternity before time ever began. "According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world" (Eph. 1:4). "Whom he did foreknow, them he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son" (Rom. 8:29). The entire family of God was baptized into the body of Christ by God, our Father. "For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body: so is Christ. For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body" (Cor. 12:12, 13). "We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus" (Eph. 2:10). If we were chosen in Him, created in Him, and baptized in Him, we were mysteriously in Him being bone of His bone as He accomplished the law to a jot and tittle while He sojourned in this world of sin and sorrow. I believe that as Jesus performed the law to a jot and tittle, Jehovah could see the entire family of God performing it as they were members of His body, being baptized in Him. The one baptism spoken of in Ephesians 4:5 is that performed by God, the Father in the Son through the operation of the Spirit upon His children. This baptism is essential unto salvation but cannot be performed by man.

Yes, God's children were "baptized into His death." They went down with Him into death because they were chosen, created, and baptized in Him. If we be children of God we paid the penalty of death in Him! This being true, justice is completely satisfied in Him for each and every child of God. Nothing can be charged to them.

We have touched upon the subject of baptism relative to all the family of God being baptized at once together into Jesus Christ and into His death. Now, we want to meditate upon the experimental phase of baptism. We want to consider the individual, personal baptism that is experienced by each and every child of God. This experimental phase of baptism is progressive in its application as we shall see, the Lord willing. It begins in regeneration and ends in the immortalization of the body. John preached the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins as recorded in Mark 1:4. All those who made manifest that they were in possession of this baptism by confessing their sins he baptized in the river Jordan, (Mark 1:5) which was an outward manifestation of being in this condition. The rule is according to the words of Jesus as recorded in Mark 16:16, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." The form of the verb used shows that it is not water baptism that is under consideration. The present tense of the verb shows that it is a condition they are now in. They are overwhelmed, immersed, or enveloped now. Are they now enveloped in water by the administrator? No, they are now enveloped in repentance by the Holy Ghost! This being submerged in repentance affects the cry for deliverance or salvation from their sins. This salvation is promised in this statement by Jesus. The hope of each child of God, who is so baptized in repentance by the Holy Ghost, is salvation from their sins through the merit of a God the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. When one is baptized in water he outwardly manifests this condition and hope through the grace of the Father, the merits of the Son, and guidance, operation and revelation of the Holy Spirit.

"John answered, saying unto them all, I indeed baptize you with water; but one mightier than I cometh, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to un-loose; he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire" (St. Luke 3:16). The effect of the Holy Spirit baptism is regeneration. The souls of God's people are baptized into death and resurrected unto life here in time; and, the bodies of God's people shall be baptized into death and resurrected unto life immortal into the great beyond - the end of this sphere of time. This is that for which we patiently wait and hope.

The natural soul trusts in natural man being inspired by the natural carnal spirit. This is the soul that sins. It shall die (Ezek. 18:4). All people are born naturally in this condition. When it pleases God to baptize the soul of one of His people by the Holy Spirit, He kills and makes spiritually alive the soul. Yes, the soul is over whelmed, immersed, and submerged into death and resurrected into a new life. The soul that has been so wrought upon by the Holy Spirit shall never die. It is a new creature . According to Psalms 107 the experience of the redeemed is, "Hungry and thirsty, their soul fainted in them. Then they cried unto the Lord in their troubles and he delivered them out of their distresses." This is brought about by the baptism of the Holy Spirit. We read in Luke 3:3, "And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." This does not say baptism of water but of repentance. This means that you must be overwhelmed, submerged, and immersed with repentance. It is a godly sorrow that worketh repentance unto salvation not to be repented of (2 Cor. 7:10). When you are overwhelmed with repentance you abhor yourself; you repent in dust and ashes. When you abhor yourself you die to the love of self. You sink into despair; you are immersed in trouble and distresses. As He did not leave Christ in the grave He does not leave your soul in despair but raises it up a new soul. This is verified in Psalms 23:3, "He restoreth my soul." You are then a new creature motivated by a spiritual soul. The mortal soul which is subject to death, has been baptized with immortality. This makes the soul immortal. Now, you are an immortal soul dwelling in a mortal body. This body has not yet been baptized with immortality. That will be the crowning work of the Holy Spirit.

Paul says in Romans 7:24, "Oh wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Paul realized the sinfulness and mortality of his body. All God's children are possessed with the thorn in the flesh and infirmities of the flesh. Our bodies are subject to weaken and die. We cannot do the things we would because of the evil that is present in our fast decaying bodies. The body becomes lame and tottery with age. Our bodies become weak because of disease. Our natural eyes become dim and our natural ears deafen. Our memory fails and our ability to comprehend is affected. Our natural minds fail to function as they once did. I feel that as we experience these things we become more and more desirous of the immortalization of the bodies. "Even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body. (Rom. 8:23). Yes, the bodies of the saints shall be baptized into death and shall be completely submerged, enveloped, swallowed up, or baptized with immortality. "So, when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, death is swallowed up in victory" (1 Cor. 15:54). This will be the answer to the prayer as recorded in 1 Thes. 5:23, "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly: and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

The baptism in water is figurative of this baptism that is essential unto salvation. This is not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God: which is a figure of the resurrection of Jesus Christ. See 1st Peter 3:21. There are two kinds of conscience. There is a natural conscience and there is a Holy Spirit conscience. A good conscience is a Holy Spirit conscience. I believe that God's people are wrought upon by His Spirit and are made anxious to follow Jesus in baptism. They are desirous to outwardly manifest this faith in the Father baptizing them in the Son by the Spirit by submitting themselves to baptism in water in the name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost. As the candidate for baptism is passive in the hands of the administrator in the act of baptism in water, so he manifests that he is passive in the hand of God in Holy Spirit baptism which is essential unto salvation. He manifests his faith in being in Christ as He went down into the grave and came up out of the grave. As baptism into Jesus Christ and into His death is the door of entrance into the Church which is the one invisible body including all the children of God, so baptism in water is the door of entrance into the church in its organized form upon earth.

John required those whom he baptized to bring forth fruit worthy of repentance. I believe such characters are the only ones worthy to be received into the organized Church. When one comes confessing his sins, and considering himself as the chief of sinners and less than the least of all saints, speaking of his unworthiness, my heart goes out to him and I am given to fellowship him. When such an one comes testifying that his hopes for salvation from sins is solely based on the grace of God and the merits of the Lord Jesus, I consider him as a proper subject for baptism in water into the fellowship of the organized Church. None but those who have been baptized with repentance would come bringing such testimony from the heart desiring a home with God's people. The Church receives such into their fellowship and one properly ordained will gladly administer the ordinance to that character.

I realize that I have just hinted upon this grand subject. These thoughts are my earnest and conscientious convictions. If they be true, may God be praised. If they be false, charge them to my ignorance and vain imaginations. May God bless this to your comfort and edification, if it be His will, is my prayer for Christ's sake.

CHAPTER III
EXERCISES ABOUT PREACHING

On the 14th of August I heard a man preach in the Presbyterian Church where my membership had been. The congregation was large. I wanted to get up and tell the people not to believe what he said, that if they knew the truth concerning that text it would comfort them. I thought if they felt as I had felt before my hope came he was distressing them greatly. I could hardly keep my seat. I went home with my head down. As I entered my room I spoke aloud, as though another had spoken in me, "I must preach." Then I was startled. I wanted to go to the ends of the earth to tell everybody that salvation was by grace, and that what that man preached was not true. But the word "preach" was too great a word for me.

Soon after that I wrote to Elder Beebe, telling him of that wonderful experience, and asking what it meant. In his reply he said the brethren had thought I had a work to do in the church, and were waiting till the Lord should let me know it, and that they had appointed a certain night, September 4th, for me to exercise my gift. Then I was afraid. It did not seem possible that I could preach; and I could not yet think it possible for me to leave my business. This caused me great anxiety and some distress of mind. I find in my diary of August 14th, the evening when I had first had the thought that I must preach, this sentence: "I am certain I must engage in another work than the law."

A few days after this, a large coal operator came to my office and asked me to take charge of the legal work connected with his business. I looked it over, and took time to think of it. All that day I worked hard and enjoyed the work. Much business was brought to me, and during the day I hardly thought of anything but the work. During the past winter I had done but little, having been much with my two brothers, one in Washington and one at my father's home, both very sick. Since my baptism I had not cared much for legal work, only to do my duty. And this was really the first day in many weeks that I had been devotedly engaged in work. All other things were put out of my mind, and the thought of preaching was gone, so far as I can remember. I had during all of my practice been preparing for the line of work which appeared now to be coming to me in such measure as to animate me much. I must, however, have remembered my thoughts about preaching, for I told the coal operator that possibly I might not stay there, and if I arranged to go away I would turn the business over to a friend, H. W. Palmer. He said that man would be his next choice.

That night I went into my room with very peculiar feelings. I had spent evening after evening there with the Bible, the hymn book and the "Signs," in unspeakable comfort. Now, as I entered the room, I realized that something was lacking. I looked around and the room seemed empty. I took the Bible, but there was nothing for me. I was not at rest. I sat down but instantly rose again. Unrest! It was terrible, distressing. It seemed almost as though I were going to die. All at once I thought of the day just closed, and the work I had done, and the enjoyment of it. Then I said to myself; "On Sunday night you felt that you must go to the ends of the earth and tell the glad tidings of salvation by grace, and what have you been doing today?" Then I said, whether aloud or only in thought I cannot tell; "If I were sure of making fifty thousand dollars by the end of this year I could not and I would not stay." Oh, what a sweet peace and rest and a feeling of holy solemnity came into my soul. From that day to this, nearly forty-four years, there has been no going back in my mind from that decision. I have still had times when it seemed impossible for me to preach; one so unworthy, so poor in spirit, so ignorant. Qualification has seemed utterly lacking, but the thought of business and money has never since been a hindrance to me. It seemed the words were sweetly been a hindrance to me. It seemed the words were sweetly given to me by the dear Saviour: "Your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of these things." From that day to this my needs have been all supplied, and I am sure they will be to the end, but not all my wants.

One night about this time these words were in my mind all night: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." All night the meaning of them kept unfolding in my soul and the inexpressible sweetness of them was tested in my spirit. Whether I slept I do not know. I did not need to sleep. I had a more satisfying rest than sleep could give. Not long after this I was at a conference meeting at Vaughan Hill, perhaps Sunday, August 18th. On that day my next older brother James was baptized by Elder Schoonover. My next younger brother Warren had been baptized in July, when I was not present. Both had been extremely ill during the past year, and both had received a hope, each in a most wonderful manner. At the conference referred to I spoke concerning the words of the dear Saviour which had been so blessed to me during one whole night. After this they seemed to pass away from my mind in a manner, though not by any means forgotten.

Now I began to think with trembling to try to prepare myself for the trial of my gift at Middletown at the meeting appointed for the evening of Sunday, September 4th. I thought if I could preach at all I could preach from those words: "Come unto me, etc." So I carefully laid them up in my mind for that occasion, occasionally thinking them over, and arranging my thoughts concerning them. The Sunday came and I was present at the Wallkill Meeting House in the morning. It rained and few were out. Elder Beebe said I must preach. I was in consternation. I had but one text and that was for the meeting in Middletown at night. Elder Beebe and all the rest insisted that I must go forward. Just then I remembered the peculiar language of Isa. 29:11, 12 and 18 about the book which the learned could not read because it was sealed, and the one that was not learned because he was not learned, but the deaf shall hear the words of the book, etc. I spoke a little about that, and one of the deacons, an old man, said he was edified by what I said. I looked at him sadly for I thought he had said what was not true in order to encourage and comfort me. I knew it could not be that what I had said could have been of any benefit. But perhaps at night I might preach. Elder Beebe was called from the morning meeting to attend a funeral and told me I must preach at the afternoon meeting in Middletown. I urged and begged to be let off from that; said I could not do it. The thought of trying to preach in the afternoon was frightful, and especially as I had only the one text, and that I must use at night. When I found it was inevitable, I looked around in my mind and finally thought of the text used by the Presbyterian preacher the night I felt such a strong desire to contradict him, and when afterward I, for the first time, thought I must preach: "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." But to use that I must speak upon the subject of the resurrection, and I knew that one prominent person would be present who had told me she did not believe in the resurrection of the body "in the same way that some of us did and I feared I would offend her. My mind was in a tumult. However, the time came and I tried to tell what I thought of the text and declared the resurrection of the body. Though I will say here that I did not then, and do not now, believe that the body, which is sown a natural body, is raised a natural body and then changed into a spiritual body; but "it is raised a spiritual body." Well, I got through the afternoon, and was spoken to very kindly by the one referred to, as well as by the rest of the friends. I did not, however, in my own mind, call it preaching. But if I could preach at all (which I began to doubt very much) I thought I could do it at night. My text I had kept laid away, and neither in the morning nor afternoon had I interfered with it.

At night there came together a large congregation, and I took my text. But what work I made. I talked, it is true, for near forty minutes, but I felt as though I had my hands full of dead, dry leaves, rattling them. There was no life or light or feeling, except a feeling of self-abasement, helplessness and distress. One followed me, the one I have already referred to, who afterward left us, and said some surface things in a smooth, cold manner, with no help or interest to me. I had tried to get down into the depth and sweetness of the text. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," and I could not. I felt that I had absolutely said nothing, and worse than nothing. The church gave me license to preach, but I am convinced they could not have seen any gift in what I said that night. If it had not been for the morning and afternoon meetings, and what they had heard before, they could not have thought I had a gift.

The night was a distressing one to me. I tossed sleeplessly till morning, writing bitter things against myself, feeling sure that I had made the church mourn on my account; that I had no gift, and that I ought never to have allowed them to have an appointment for me. How my soul cried unto the Lord for mercy, that he would direct me and uphold me in the right way. Toward morning I became somewhat quiet, and promised myself that if the Lord ever had anything for me to say I would try to say it if he would give me ability, but that I would never lay up a text again, nor try to arrange beforehand what I should say. I had been humiliated greatly and my pride had been broken down, and now I did feel humble. But I have not kept my promise. Many a time I have tried to arrange a sermon for a future occasion, and have as often been shut up, and three or four times during the first year I had to stop and sit down.

The next week I went in company with several brethren to the Lexington Association, and enjoyed the meetings and the preaching very much. I was called upon to speak, and felt very much at liberty in my soul. It seemed to me then that preaching the gospel was an easy and most delightful work, but I soon found that it was so only when the Lord filled my soul with the comfort of his love and gave me to feel at the time the power of his word. But when left to myself to depend upon the power of my own mind, preaching is the hardest work I ever did.

When my sister Bessie received a hope ten years before I was brought into the church, she received in her own mind an assurance that I would have to preach. When I wrote her that I had united with the Presbyterian Church, she was so deeply affected that for a time she almost lost her power to breathe. Soon, however, the remembrance of the power with which that assurance had come to her that I must preach quieted her, and she rested. I knew nothing of this until the church had liberated me to preach.

I still have times of soul searching, and of crying unto God as a little child, that he will lead me and guide me in the path of duty, and uphold me by His spirit, and I must acknowledge with humble gratitude and thanksgiving that the dear Lord has not been unmindful of my petitions. And I would love, if enabled by his grace, to recount some of his blessings, and tell of his goodness to me. I can say with the Apostle, "Having obtained help of the Lord, I continue unto this present, trying to preach as with the ability that God giveth, the unsearchable riches of Christ."

The terrible afflictions of soul I cannot describe. I cannot tell of the sorrows on account of sin in thought and word and deed, of the going down into the depths, when deep has called unto deep in my soul, when I have felt that "the bars of the earth were about me forever."But so far the Lord has showed me his delivering power and grace, and out of every one of these deep and heavy afflictions the Lord has brought me into some deeper and more glorious understanding of his goodness.

ANECDOTE.

New Vernon, N. Y., April 1, 1842.

At a great meeting held some years before the general separation took place between the Arminian and Predestinarian Baptists, one of the advocates of the former doctrine had been expatiating upon the creature exalting doctrine of chance, and having concluded, an old veteran of the cross arose with a very solemn air, and addressed the audience in something like the following words:

"Men and brethren: As I happened to be sitting and listening to what our brother happened to say about what happens to come to pass, I happened to think of an old man who happened to live a great while ago. This man happened to be a prophet, but he did not happen to possess a very patient or happy disposition. It so happened that the Lord spake to this prophet, and bade him go to a city called Nineveh, which happened to be very wicked, and to prophecy 'Yet forty days, and Nineveh should be overthrown!' Now Jonah did not happen to feel inclined to go, and as there happened to be a ship just ready to sail, which happened to be going to Tarsus, the prophet took passage in her, that he might run away from the Lord. On the passage, however, there happened to arise a terrible tempest, and the ship did not happen to be sufficient to eudure the gale with safety, and the crew happened to be superstitious idolaters, and they cast lots to see on whose account this disaster had happened; and the lot happened to fall on Jonah, who happened to be fast asleep at the time these things happened. As none of the gods of the mariners were able to control the winds of heaven, or make the seas obey them, they awoke Jonah and bade him call on his God, if peradventure he might happen to be able to be able to save them. But Jonah happening at this moment to perceive that this catastrophy had all taken place because he happened to be on board, it was determined that Jonah should be thrown overboard; and when the men threw Jonah into the sea, a monstrous fish happened to dash along at that very moment, and his mouth happened to be wide open, and Jonah happened to fall right into the mouth of the fish, which happened to start directly towards the shore; and the fish happened to become very sick, and even happened to vomit Jonah out just as he happened to reach the shore, so that Jonah happened to land on the dry earth; and it so happened finally that Jonah went to Nineveh and there preached the preaching that the Lord bade him.

PSALM 150:1

Praise ye the Lord. Praise God in his sanctuary: praise him in the firmament of his power.

DIVINITY AND HUMANITY OF OUR LORD.

Friend Beebe: Will you please give your views through the Signs, on the divinity and humanity of Christ? Should you comply with my request, you will oblige.

AN INQUIRER AFTER TRUTH.
Indiana Creek, Iowa, Sept. 9, 1856.

The terms divinity, and humanity, which are in much use among theologians, are not used in reference to Christ, by the inspired writers; we must therefore, take them in the theological sense in which they are commonly used. By the divinity of Christ, so far as we can learn, is gernally intended his independent, eternal Godhead, and by his humanity, that body of flesh and blood in which he became incarnate, which was made of a woman, made under the law, &c. We have been engaged for many years in trying to exhibit our views of the blessed Redeemer, in reference to his Godhead, his manhood, and also in his mediatorial identity as the Head and Life of his body, the church. But after all that has been said and written on the subject, we have yet to say, "Without controvesy, great is the mystery of godliness; God was manifest in the flesh," &c. So absolutely is he God, that all the angels are commanded to worship him, and so truly was he man, that he could be born of a virgin, cradled in a manger, grow in stature to manhood, hunger, thirst, be weary, and his soul could be exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death; could feel the infirmities of his people, groan in spirit, and sweat, as it were, great drops of blood; yea, he could die upon the cross, and be buried, and finally be raised again from the dead, by the glory of the Father, and ascend up into heaven. As God, he is one with the Father, independent, self-existent and almighty. By him all things were made that were made, and he is before all things, and by him all things consist. As man, he could be tempted in all points like his brethren, and yet remain uncontaminated by sin. None can deny his essential, eternal and unbegotten Godhead, and consistently hold that he is a Savior, for he says by the prophet, "I am God, and beside me there is no Savior." If, then, he is a Savior, he is also God. In his incarnation he took part of the same flesh and blood that his children are partakers of. The propriety of calling his Godhead, divinity, or his manhood, humanity, we will leave others to decide; we prefer, when treating on a subject so awfully sacred, to use only such adjectives as the Scriptures furnish. Peter speaks of the divine nature, but as he also speaks of the saints being partakers of it, we have supposed that the mediatorial fullness of which John also speaks (John i. 14, 16,) was intended. Brethren must read and judge for themselves, but we do not feel prepared to say that the life and immortality, which Christ gives to His saints, is anything short of divine nature, while the Scriptures plainly teach that the essential attributes of eternal Godhead are peculiar to the Godhead, and the incommunicable to any inferior beings. On the other hand, we dare not say that that perfect, mystical body, or stature, which comprehends the Head and body of the church, was only human.

We may not have comprehended the design of "An Inquirer After Truth," but we have briefly stated some of our views on the subject, according to the very limited light we have of that Savior whom we desire to worship, adore and trust as the God of our salvation, who came in the flesh, and was found in fashion as a man, but we do most heartily say,

"Other refuge have I none,
Hangs my helpless soul on thee:
Leave, ah leave me not alone,
All my help must come from thee."

No couplet in the celebrated stanzas of Watts has ever afforded more sweetness to us than these,

"Jesus, my God, I know his name.
His name is all my trust."

We have neither the time nor space to extend our remarks at this time. May the subject be opened gloriously by the Holy Spirit, to the understanding, joy and rejoicing of all the saints, for the Redeemer's sake.

"Through the tender mercies of our God; whereby the dayspring from on high hath visited us. — Luke i. 78.

By "day-spring" is meanth the day-dawn, the hearld of the rising sun, the change from darkness to light, the first approach of morn, in a word, the spring of the day. But what is this "day-spring" spiritually? It is the intimation of the rising of the Sun of righteousness. It is not the same thing as the Sun of righteousness; but it is the herald of his approach; the beams which the rising sun cast upon the benighted world, announcing the coming of Jesus, "The King in his beauty." This expression was singularly applicable in the mouth of Zacharias. The Lord of life and glory had not then appeared; he was still in the womb of the Virgin Mary. But his forerunner, John, had appeared as the precursor, the herald of his approach, and was sent to announce that the Sun of righteousness was about to arise. "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John. The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe. He was not that Light, but was sent to bear witness of that Light" (John i. 6-8). All nations at that time lay in darkness. "Darkness covered the earth, and gross darkness the people." But when the Lord of life and glory was about to appear upon earth, when he had already taken the body which was prepared for him, the very flesh and blood of the children, which he was to offer as a propitiation for sin, "the day-spring from on high" had begun to dawn. God's mercy, in the face of his dear Son, was just visiting the benighted world.

But there is another, an experimental meaning, connected with these words. "The day-spring from on high" is not to be confined to the approach of the Son of God in the flesh; but it may be extended to signify the appearance of the Son of God in the heart. I cannot be benefited by the appearing of Jesus in the flesh eighteen hundred years ago, unless he come and dwell in my soul. "The day-spring from on high" which visited the benighted Jewish church will not profit us except that same day-spring visits our benighted heart. "The day-spring from on high" is the manifestation of God's mercy in the face of the Savior. And when this "day-spring from on high" visits the soul, it is the first intimation, the dawning rays of the Sun of righteousness in the heart.

We shall try again as we've been asked, to write some of our thoughts on a following scripture, not by our knowledge but by faith some thought will be to some one's comfort.

First may we list a scripture found in Matt. 10:18-20 "And ye shall be brought before governors and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them and the Gentiles, But when they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye shall speak: for it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak. For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you."

This very attempt to write seems to me to trust not in the ability of the creature, but try our faith in God. Do we lack faith as we go speaking? Do we prepare a sermon? I, at least, go most of my time in fear, what have I to present, and we know before hand, nothing. I've been amazed to speak thoughts I never had until that time lie standing and again having different thoughts after sitting down. Maybe this isn't the way of one called God. I've never been sure of this, this one thing I think I know, my path leads me in a way I knew not before. While I could beg for a smoother path, I can't ask for it to change, can you?

Such has the Lord's people gone in every generation I believe, wanting to know what's ahead. We ministers, if indeed, I am in that number, go seeking and searching as we stand before a God fearing people, afraid many times to go, feeling to have nothing, yet fearful not to attempt when asked. We never know the mind of God. He has declared that His thoughts and His ways are as far above our thoughts and our ways, as the heavens are above the earth. Isn't this, if the above text was given in a natural sense, also in a spiritual way to all that fear His name, you are only a mouth piece for God.

Men in their speaking as well as writing would like to know what's ahead, what man might say about it, think about it longer, research etc., that is man's way. If the thoughts or words or writing is directed of God, can it be wrong?"For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you."

Some elder once asked me to write some. I answered I couldn't, He said, don't say no if you've never tried, you don't know. We may take notes or memorize a long sermon or article and still be of no value to those that are searching for that God instilled truth. Those apostles had to be inspired, what food they carried for the sheep was from God, and so it still is today. The minister or under-shepherd is only the carrier. Let us all be blessed not to try to add natural food to spiritual manna, it won't mix, if so it would spoil that of the spirit by pollution. He said we'll be hated of the world if we be His. Are we drawing closer to the world in our manner, or closer to the commandment of God. "Think not what ye shall speak." May His grace abide.

HYMN

And am I blessed with Jesus' love,
And shall I dwell with him above,
And will the joyful period come
When I shall call the heav'ns my home?

Think, O my soul! what must it be
A world of glorious minds to see,
Drink at the fountain-head of peace,
And bathe in everlasting bliss!

To hear them all at once proclaim
Eternal glories to the Lamb,
And join with joyful heart and tongue
That new, that never-ending song!

And does the happy hour draw near
When Christ will in the clouds appear,
And I without a vail shall see
The Man, the Christ, who bled for me?

If in my soul such joys abound
While weeping faith explores his wound,
How glorious will those scars appear
When perfect love forbids a tear!

Think, O my soul, if 'tis so sweet
On earth to sit at Jesus' feet,
What must it be to wear a crown
And sit with Jesus on the throne I

"For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid, the other by a freewoman. But he who was of the bondwoman was born after the flesh; but he of the freewoman was by promise. Which things are an allegory: for these are two covenants; the one from the Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. For this Agar is Mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all. For it is written, Rejoice, thou barren that barest not; break forth and cry, thou that travailest not: for the desolate hath many more children than she which hath an husband. Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise. But as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now. Nevertheless what saith the scripture? Cast out the bondwoman and her son: for the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the freewoman. So then, brethren, we are not children of the bondwoman, but of the free." Galatians 4:22-31

Elder Jerry B. Farmer

In these few words, the inspired apostle Paul opened up a great mystery that had been hidden from the beginning. These things cannot be received and understood by the carnal mind, because they are spiritual. According to scripture, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, for they are spiritually discerned." Happy are you, if you are given a mind and heart to receive these things. They are hidden from the wise and prudent, but are revealed unto babes. May the Lord guide our thoughts and may we be given eyes to see, ears to hear and a heart of understanding.

The apostle was wonderfully blessed to explain this hidden truth pertaining to election, and to the plight of God's people in the world. It identifies all men who ever had or shall have an existence in this world. They are separated into two groups: those born after the flesh, and those born after the Spirit. One' s understanding of the doctrine of sovereign election affects the way he sees himself and all others. It affects the way he understands the scriptures. It affects the way he thinks of God. The two opposing views about election and God's sovereign love in the choice of His people in election, seems to divide the thinking of the carnal and spiritual minds of all men upon the earth. One view is according to the Spirit, and the other according to natural understanding.

God, in His written word, manifests this difference in the account of Sarai and Hagar. Since Abram and Sarai were well stricken in age had no son of their own, Sarah, thought she could never have children. She, in a natural mind, thought she might obtain children by her handmaid. So she gave her handmaid, Hagar the Egyptian to Abraham. When Hagar saw that she had conceived, her mistress Sarai was despised in her eyes. (Abram was 86 years old when Hagar bare Ishmael to Abram and Sarai was 76.) We see here the beginning of the hatred of one people for another --- the hatred of the bondwoman for the freewoman.

When Abram was 99 years old the Lord appeared to him. And the Lord made an everlasting covenant with Abram and his seed. The Lord told Abram that he would be a father of many nations, that his name would no more be called Abram but rather Abraham, that He would give him the land of Canaan, that Abraham and his seed should keep God's covenant of circumcision, that Sarai would now be called Sarah, that Sarah should bear Abraham a son called Isaac, and that He would establish an everlasting covenant with Isaac and his seed.

The Lord at this time also made a covenant with Ishmael. He declared that He had blessed him, and would make him fruitful, and multiply him exceedingly. The Lord also declared that Ishmael should beget twelve princes, and that He would make him a great nation.

We see that God here made two distinct covenants. One was an everlasting covenant involving Abraham, Sarah the freewoman, Isaac the child of promise, and his spiritual seed after him. I am made to believe that this covenant represents a figure of spiritual things. The other was a covenant involving Hagar the bondwoman, Ishmael the child born after the flesh, and his natural seed after him. I am made to believe that this covenant manifests a figure of natural things. The blessed apostle was given to describe the bondwoman Hagar as the Jerusalem which now is and is in bondage with her children. I am made to believe that this manifests the whole fleshly family of unbelief. And he was blessed to describe Sarah as the freewoman, the Jerusalem which is above and is the mother of us all. I am made to believe that this indicates the whole spiritual family of God.

The apostle said by inspiration, "Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise." This is our hope and trust, that we are the elect of God, chosen in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world, and redeemed by the blood of the Lamb. We hope and trust that we are included in the everlasting covenant of grace, which secured eternal life for all the saints by virtue of the finished work and righteousness of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Our hope and trust is that we are not the children of the flesh, held in the natural covenant of Hagar and Ishmael, that walk after the flesh, whose end shall be misery and destruction.

The apostle, by the Holy Spirit declared, "But as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now." From the beginning to this day, and down until the end of time, the one born of the flesh has persecuted and shall persecute the one born after the Spirit. The Lord made it plain that if they hated Him, they would also hate you. But He said, "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are ye when all men shall revile you and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." He also said that if you were of the world, the world would love you. And He said, "Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you! For so did their fathers to the false prophets." But we hope and trust that we are not loved by the world.

Isaac was born, and after eight days was circumcised. And after Isaac was weaned, Abraham made a great feast. "And Sarah saw the son of Hagar the Egyptian, which she had born unto Abraham, mocking. Wherefore she said unto Abraham, Cast out this bondwoman and her son: for the son of this bondwoman shall not be heir with my son, even with Isaac." Here we see evidence of the hatred of the son of the bondwoman for the son of the freewoman. And the Lord caused Abraham to hearken to the voice of Sarah, even though it was grievous in his sight, and after giving them bread and water, he sent them away. But God saved Hagar and Ishmael from death in the desert, and Ishmael became a great nation according to the covenant of God.

The seed of the bondwoman has continued to persecute the seed of the freewoman even to this day. In the last book of the Bible, the book of Revelation, there are two women described in figurative language. They are a great wonder and a great mystery. The one woman described in Revelation 12 is clothed with the sun, and the moon is under her feet, and has a crown of twelve stars upon her head. The other woman described is in Revelation 17. John saw her sit upon a scarlet colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns. And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication: And upon her forehead was a name written, Mystery Babylon the Great, the Mother of Harlots and Abomi-nations of the Earth. And John saw the woman drunken with the blood of saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus.

I am made to believe that Sarah, the Jerusalem which is above and free, is represented by the woman clothed with the sun, having the moon under her feet. And I am made to believe that Hagar, the bondwoman, is represented by the other one that John saw sit upon the scarlet colored beast. The one is altogether lovely, holy and blessed. The other is full of abominations and filthiness. The one is of the everlasting covenant of grace. The other is of the covenant of death and destruction. The one is persecuted by the great red dragon, which is the devil. The other sits upon the great red dragon and is part of the persecution. The one was given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent. By the hindering mercies of God, the hateful woman is kept from carrying out her evil intent to destroy the freewoman.

It is impossible that the son of the bondwoman, that was born after the flesh, could ever be heir with the son of the freewoman, that was born after the spirit. The son of the freewoman was loved with an everlasting love, chosen in the covenant of grace, foreknown of God, predestinated to be conformed to the image of His Son, called, justified and glorified in the sight of God before the world was. The son of the bondwoman was never loved of God, but was a vessel of wrath fitted for destruction. He was a vessel created of God for a purpose --- to be used to bring a fiery trial of faith to try the children of God. After the purpose of God is finished for that vessel of dishonor, that vessel shall be taken and destroyed.

After explaining the wondrous and mysterious workings of almighty God down through the ages, the inspired apostle gives much assurance to the children of God and says, "So then, brethren, we are not children of the bondwoman, but of the free." None deserve to be counted as children of the freewoman, for it is all of grace. The only way one could be a child of the freewoman is by birth, by being born of the Spirit. And we know that no one has any part in his birth process. It is altogether passive. So, if you have been given a hope of salvation based upon the kindness and goodness of God our Savior, Who came and suffered and died for your sins (and I hope and trust mine also), and Who by the power of God took up His life again, you are not a child of the bondwoman, but of the free. You have been born from above, and are an heir of the promise of eternal life in Christ Jesus, the Lord. Praise, honor, and glory are due unto our God forever, Who alone is worthy.

I trust that this was written in love and in hope of eternal life.

Oct. 1973 – Zion's Landmark

How weary and how worthless this life at times appears.
What days of heavy sadness, what hours of bitter tears.
How dark the storm cloud gathers along the wintry skies.
How desolate and cheerless the path before me lies.

And yet those days of sadness are sent us from above.
They do not come in anger, but in faithfulness and love.
They come to teach us lessons which bright ones could not yield,
And leave us blest and thankful when their purpose is fulfilled.

They come to draw us nearer our Father and our Lord.
More earnestly to seek His face and lean upon His word.
And to feel if now around us a desert land we see:
Without the star of promise, what would the darkness be.

They come to lay us lowly and humbly in the dust.
All self deception swept away, all creature hope and trust.
Our helplessness, our vileness, our guiltiness to own;
And flee for help and refuge to Christ, and Christ alone.

They come to break the fetters that here detain us fast,
And force our long reluctant hearts to rise to heaven at last.

And brighten every prospect of that eternal home,
Where grief and disappointment and fear can never come.

Then turn not in despondence, poor weary heart away,
But meekly journey on through the dark and cloudy day.
Even now the bow of promise is above thee, painted bright;
And a glorious morning shall dissipate the night.

Thy God hath not forgot thee, but when He sees it best
Will lead thee into sunshine and give thee longed for rest.
And all thy pain and sorrow shall be forever o'er:
Shall end in heavenly blessedness and life forevermore.

CHURCHES OF OUR FAITH

The following was sent in by Brother Steve Everett.

Elder Thomas Parker Dudley was born in Fayette County, Kentucky on May 31, 1792.

Elder Dudley's father was Elder Ambrose Dudley who came to Lexington, Kentucky in 1786 to serve as pastor of Bryans Church of Fayette County, Kentucky where he continued to serve until his death in 1825 at the age of 75.

Thomas Parker Dudley succeeded his father and became pastor of four Kentucky Primitive Baptist churches. They were as follows: Georgetown, Mount Carmel in Clark County, Elizabeth in Bourbon County and Bryans Station in Fayette County. Elder Dudley continued to serve these churches until his death in 1886 at age 95.

He was one of the most famous and respected Primitive Baptist ministers west of the Appalachian mountains. He is also known for his published circular on the Christian warfare.

Perhaps one of the most highly respected and revered Primitive Baptist elders of eastern North Carolina was Elder Abner Beryl "A.B" Ayers of Bear Grass, NC. Ayers is pictured with his wife and helpmate Clara Lavinia Jones Ayers to whom he was wed April 24,1910, a marriage which spanned 47 years.Family members and friends still recall today what a loving and hospitable home the Ayers couple displayed,always a gathering place for Primitive Baptist brethren.

Elder Ayers faithfully served the Kehukee Association to which he had been ordained August 19,1934. His pastorates included Bear Grass of Martin County,NC and Briery Swamp of Pitt County, NC, Flaty Creek of Weeksville, NC and Singleton of Washington,NC.His ministry however was not limited to his native area as he and his wife traveled extensively throughout the eastern United States and even into Canada where his message was always the sound doctrine of "salvation by grace,and grace alone". In addition, Ayers was a long time clerk and moderator of the Kehukee Association,a position he filled faithfully and lovingly until his death.His love and compassion for his fellowman was boundless. The late Sam Rayburn, Speaker of the National House of Representatives in Washington, DC, who was also of the Primitive Baptist faith and a friend to Elder Ayers, called upon him to deliver a prayer at a political rally where Rayburn was speaking in Greenville, NC.

Elder Ayers departed this life on March 30, 1962. He is buried alongside his wife in the Woodlawn Cemetery in Williamston (Martin County) NC. Truly "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.

VOICES OF THE PAST

THE ONE STONE
Sermon preached by Elder John E. Hazelton (1853-1924)

TEXT: "For behold the Stone that I have laid before Joshua; upon one Stone shall be seven eyes: behold, I will engrave the graving thereof, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day (Zech. 3:9).

God's servant and prophet Zechariah has been well called the prophet of glory. In his prophecy, in common with the unfulfilled prophecies of all the host of Old Testament prophets, there is much which to us is still dark and mysterious, but which will become plainer as the time draws nigh for the fulfillment of the events predicted herein. But in this prophecy in an especial manner we have beautiful and glorious truth displayed concerning the kingdom and the glory, the Person and the office, and the high priestly work of the Son of God. Here in this prophecy we have the price given for which our blessed Lord was to be betrayed. Here we have the prediction of the effusion of the Spirit on the Day of Pentecost, the calling of the Gentiles, the spiritual privileges of the church of God, and the final victory which our most blessed Redeemer will have over all the foes of Himself and of His people.

Zechariah's name takes us at once to covenant realities and covenant truth: "The Lord remembers." We have a very blessed instance of this in first chapter, where the Lord is described as speaking to the angel concerning His people, "good words comfortable words." There was inwrought in the soul of God's servant Zechariah, amidst much that was distressing to him, the blessed and glorious truth that Jehovah remembers, that He "hateth putting away," that whilst a woman may forget her child our God will not forget one poor sinner whose hope is a precious Christ, and who is looking to the Lord alone for mercy and salvation.

The whole prophecy is full of grace. I dislike more than I can tell you what I sometimes read in works upon the prophets, that "the style of this book is very noble," and that the style of the other is "broken and disconnected. It is nothing of the kind. That is simply the utterance of carnal men. Every book in God's Word is in perfect order and whilst to the untutored eye the heavens may appear without plan, each orb has its own place.

And so we have in the prophecy of Zechariah, from beginning to end, our precious, glorious Christ as the substance and the light of the book. We have set forth here those truths which, applied by the Spirit, confirm the soul, satisfy the hunger and longing of the human heart, and give to us meat to eat which the world knoweth not of.

The older I grow, the more I feel that Bible is practically the only book worth the attention of men and women. Not that I wish you to suppose that I neglect the reading of other books, but I trust I can say this Book appears to grow more wonderful and precious. Dear John Newton in one of his letters says, "I have many books that I cannot sit down to read: books that are sound, but books that are like halfpence, and there go a great many halfpence to represent a small amount. Then there are silver books, and a few golden books, but I have one that outweighs them all, and that is the Bible, the charter of my hopes and the declaration of my God to me."

Now we see here in Zechariah, Haggai, Joshua and Zerubbabel, four men who the Lord says are "men wondered at." Those around could not understand them; they listened to them urging the people to go on in the erection of the second temple, and they could not understand it. And so down all the ages, the church of the living God, the children of God scattered here and there, have been, and are, men and women that are wondered at. A friend of mine was talking to me the other day. He is a gracious man, but at home he has no sympathy whatever; his wife and children look upon him as an eccentric person, and only that day they had said, "We wonder that a man of your education and ability can go to such insignificant places, and believe in such strange things." "Men wondered at," but how great the mercy to be taught and blessed of our Lord.

In this prophecy we have everything pointing for its great and glorious fulfillment to the manifestation of Christ the Branch; from beginning to end we have here the manifestation of a precious Christ. I love that word that Stephen Marshall, the author of The Gospel Mystery of Sanctification, spoke when he was upon a bed of sickness which proved to be the bed of death. Someone came to see him and began to speak about a well spent life, and that therefore it would be all right with him in Jordan. And Stephen Marshall replied, "I cannot say as you do, that I have so lived that I should not be afraid to die, but this I can say, that I have so learned Christ that I am not afraid to die." There is the secret of it all, dear friends - not a well-spent life, not usefulness, and so on; but O what a mercy so to know Christ under the teaching of the blessed Spirit, and through the manifestation of His grace and glory to the heart, as not to be afraid to die!

> "My hope is built on nothing less > Than Jesus' blood and righteous > ness.
>
> I dare not trust the sweetest frame,
> But wholly lean on Jesus' name.
> On Christ, the solid Rock, I stand,
> All other ground is sinking sand."

Now let us, in looking at our text this morning, speak first of the STONE: secondly, of the EYES; and thirdly, of the GRAVING. The Stone, the eyes, and the graving.

It is the Head Stone, the Christ Stone, the Stone—the word "one" means the particular and special Stone, to which all others stones in type and prophecy pointed --- the Stone, the "one Stone."

Jacob is dying, and he says to his son Joseph in the blessing which he pronounces upon him, "The Shepherd, the Stone of Israel, has been my blessing!" The stability of Jacob's faith amidst deepest trial rested upon Him who is the Stone of Israel. We see the Stone again that Samuel set up- Ebenezer --- "Hitherto hast the Lord helped us," the Stone of Israel and the Stone of help. We see the Stone again in the prophecy of Daniel. The Stone cut out of mountain without hands completely overthrows the fourth empire, and after that it fills the whole world with peace and blessing.

We see the Stone again in Matthew 16. Turning to poor inconstant Peter, the Lord said, "Thou art Petros, but upon this Stone (Petra) --- thy confession of Me as the Christ, the Son of the living God --- I will build My church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

We see the Stone in Isaiah 28, where God says He will lay in Zion a precious Corner Stone, a tried Stone for the help and succour of His people. We find the Stone mentioned again in 1 Peter 2, where Peter, moved by the Holy Ghost, speaks of this blessed and precious Corner Stone. Again we have it in Ephesians 2, where we see the living Stone and the lively stones being built up upon Him, growing into a holy temple in the Lord. The Stone, a precious and glorious Christ, who alone can sustain the weight of my soul, the weight of myself with all my troubles, the Stone that is laid in Zion, the Stone that is precious in God's sight, the Stone of a precious, living, glorious Christ, to whom the Stone of Bethel, the Stone of Israel, and all the other stones to which I have referred very blessedly point.

Now we must remember in connection with this Stone the peculiar position in which Joshua stood. He was the high priest of the Jewish people at the time of the rebuilding of the temple (the second). The Stone which in this figure was laid before Joshua partakes of a twofold character. Zerubbabel had laid the foundation of the temple. The foundation stone is then here referred to. The hands of Zerubbabel laid the foundation, and he was also to complete it. But as Joshua stood before the Lord, his mind must have been filled with visions of those wonderful stones which glittered in the breastplate of the high priests of old, and of the onyx stones upon the shoulders.

Now we cannot rightly understand the reference here without first looking at Joshua as the ecclestical head, the high priest of Israel: and then as representing all poor sinners, stripped of self-righteousness and brought to trust in a great and glorious and blessed Redeemer.

Joshua is there, but where are the garments of glory and beauty that Aaron and his successors were clothed with? The second temple has been completed, and when the old men who had seen the glory of the first temple beheld the second, they wept and mourned because it was such a mean building in comparison with that which was "exceedingly magnifical." There stood

Joshua, a dejected high priest, called to minister in a temple which was, as it were, but a shadow in greatness and glory to that which Solomon built and opened. Then when Joshua looked at his raiment, it is described as "filthy:" the garments of glory and beauty were missing, and Satan stood at this right hand to resist him. He said in effect, "You are a fine high priest; this is a poor, wretched place that you call your temple, and where are the garments of glory and of beauty, and the anointing oil? You are deficient." And so Joshua felt a dejected and broken man, and Satan was in this respect furnished with a pretext to resist the exercise of his high priestly office by Joshua.

There were five things missing in the second temple which had a place in the first. In the second temple there was no ark, no holy fire, no Shekinah cloud, no Spirit of prophecy on the priest, no Urim and Thummim by which oracles of God, the mind and will of God, were made known. There was a priest without an ephod, without a breastplate, without the shoulder pieces which upheld the breastplate. Well might Joshua be dejected! The word might be read: "Behold the Stone which I have set before Joshua." Joshua, be not discouraged as to thy garments! The word went forth, "Take, away the filthy garments from him. And unto him He said, Behold, I have caused thine Iniquity to pass from thee, and I will clothe thee with change of raiment." Joshua, not that the garments of glory and of beauty, which thy predecessors before the captivity wore, have vanished; mourn not that the ark of the covenant and the mercy-seat have disappeared. Here is the reality. The Lord had set before Joshua a Stone, and upon that Stone there were seven eyes.

Now for the gospel of all this. We stand before the Lord in our filthiness. A thousand things there are within and without to deject us. We ask ourselves, Where is the glory of the past days? We feel ourselves to be mean and weak and worn indeed. We can understand some of the exercises of the heart of Joshua, but there was "set," to be removed no more for ever, there was "set," not as a shadow but as a reality, the Stone that was laid before Joshua. What did the Lord say to Joshua? What in effect our beautiful hymn expresses, for it contains the very marrow and fatness of the gospel:

"Of my soul, what means this sadness?
Wherefore art thou thus cast down?
Let thy grief be turned to gladness,
Bid thy restless fears begone.
Look to Jesus,
And rejoice in His dear name."

He is the Stone, the Foundation Stone, on which there are the seven eyes: that precious Corner Stone upon which no poor sinner has ever trusted and has perished, or been cast out at the last. "Set" before Joshua, "set" before the dejected and tried of His servants, "set" before the poor sinner feeling that his own righteousness is but as filthy rags. The Stone set there to be removed no more for ever.

"Now I have found the ground wherein.
Sure my soul's anchor may remain;
The wounds of Jesus for my sin,
Before the world's foundation slain."

Here, then, is the reality. In the first place, the person of Joshua is accepted; in the second place, his person being accepted, his sacrifice and a service are well pleasing unto God.

"A debtor to mercy alone,
Of covenant mercy sing,
Nor fear, with Thy righteousness on,

My person and offering to bring.
The terrors of law and of God with me can have nothing to do:
My Saviour's obedience and blood,
Hide all my transgressions from view."

Here is the Stone, the precious Stone, the tried Stone. Here is the Foundation upon which a poor sinner' is brought to rest. Here is the "foundation opened for sin and for, uncleanness." Here is the "righteousness which is unto all and upon all them that believe." Joshua here does not say a word. He stands, before the Lord a dumb man, but he has an Advocate. There is One who stands before Joshua; the Lord rebukes Satan. And we have "an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous"– one Stone with a glory that excelleth; one Stone laid before Joshua --- one Stone, the Person of the Lord Jesus Christ in His mediatorial character and work. This one Stone is ever there, for "if the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" But the Foundation can never, never be destroyed. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid" the Stone laid before Joshua, even Jesus Christ our Lord.

In the 3rd chapter of the First Epistle to the Corinthians the apostle says, "I have laid the Foundation, and another buildeth thereon." What does that mean? Ministerially and delaratively he had laid the Foundation. All the prophets of Old Testament and the apostles of the New alike testified to the Stone, the one Stone, the precious Corner Stone. O what a mercy it is to be shut up to Christ, to be cut off and cut out of all hope of everybody and everything but the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ!

We are to understand in Zechariah the head Stone to be not chiefly the top Stone, but the chief, the principal Stone. We are told the word rendered "head" in Hebrew means the "indispensable" Stone, the Stone without which all would fall into confusion. And Christ our Lord is the first Stone; first in the dignity of His Person; first in choice, for He is God's Elect in whom His soul delighteth. He is first in suffering, first in resurrection and in power. "Behold," says the Lord to Joshua, "behold the Stone that I have laid before Joshua."

The "law made nothing perfect," and Joshua had found that out. The "law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did." The poor sinner in filthy garments stands before the Lord, and he looks up and sees nothing but the justice of a holy God. He looks at the law, and sees nothing but wrath and bondage and misery and condemnation. He looks Into his own heart and sees a mass of unbelief, a sink of corruption of one kind or another, and he Is dumb. "Behold, Joshua, I have laid the Stone that exactly meets thy case; I have set the one Stone that exactly meets and satisfies thy necessities. Justice and the law condemn thee; thine own heart can yield no spring of peace or satisfaction, but the Stone that I have laid before thee is the Stone that has satisfied justice, fulfilled the law, and yields that wondrous medicine and balm and supply which entering into the heart, like the branch that was cut down and cast Into Marah's waters, turns their bitterness into sweetness." A precious Stone, a glorious Lord, was laid before Joshua, and as Joshua heard those words and was favoured with a sight of a precious and glorious Christ, his faith was drawn forth, his doubts and fears vanished, and he stood before the Lord a reconciled child, cleansed from his filthiness, and clothed with the robe of a Saviour's Imputed righteousness.

Secondly, the eyes. Behold the Stone that I have laid before Joshua; upon one Stone shall be seven eyes. Now you will remember that the Urim and Thummim was something in the breastplate of the high, priest of Israel which no one exactly understands. By means of them the high priest, under the blessing of God, was enabled to know God's mind and will. The words mean "light" and "perfection" respectively. Seven eyes are upon this Stone. No figure in and of itself can completely set forth the glories and the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. Think for a moment or two of the human eye. What is the human eye? It is the expression of the soul. the human eye is the window out of which the soul looks, so that when a soul is in sorrow the eye bears witness to it; when glad, the eye sparkles; when you have had bad news your eyes tell the story, and when you have had that news which gladdens your heart your eyes show it, so that we know a little of the language of the beaming eye. Intelligence looks out of the eye. Love looks out of the eye. Watchfulness looks out of the eye, and power looks out of the eye. Those who have noticed some of the world's great men have noticed the wonderful power in their eyes. I have not seen many of them, but one or two especially I remember; there was no mistaking the power of the man with that penetrating eye. It is, as it were, the oracle of life.

Now on this Stone there is the perfection of vision represented by the seven eyes. This is a Stone which in its fulness and glory says, "I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go; I will guide thee with Mine eye." A Saviour who is the Foundation Stone bears my spirit up; a living Saviour, a Saviour whose eyes of love, grace and compassion rest upon every Joshua of His; upon every tried, seeking sinner, upon all His tried and exercised people.

Upon one Stone shall be seven eyes." Does not this speak to you about the vision in the Apocalypsa — the Lamb with the seven eyes? What does that mean? It means that Christ our saviour, as the Lamb of God slain, from the foundation of the world in God's purpose, raising to die no more, in the heavens of eternal bliss is the Lamb with the seven eyes, the perfection of vision, and that His eyes rest upon every poor, trembling child of God here below. His eyes look upon the unnumbered myriads in the glory. His eyes rests upon every poor sinner who is saying, "God be merciful to me a sinner": upon you who say, "Can ever God or good dwell here?" His eyes rest upon you, dejected in service, and cast down by this and that around and within you; upon you who are exercised in your family or in your business. In other words, the Saviour upon whom your soul has sunk, the Saviour whose everlasting arms are underneath you, is the Saviour with the seven-fold vision, and the Saviour of perfection of intelligence, compassion and watchfulness, and of power.

Our blessed Saviour, Christ, the eternal Son of the Father, manifest in human nature as the Mediator, as the incarnate Son, has the fulness of the Spirit. O what a mercy that everything pertaining to our salvation has the fulness of the Godhead in it! In Christ Jesus there is the fulness of the Father. In Christ Jesus there is His own fulness as the eternal Son of the Father. In Christ Jesus there is the fulness of the Spirit. We have this sevenfold anointing of the Spirit, the sevenfold vision of the Mediator through the power of the Spirit resting upon Him, set forth in Isaiah 11. There we have it in connection with the Branch, and there is a remarkable parallelism between this 11th chapter of Isaiah and that which we have before us: "will bring forth My Servant the Branch."

Now what are the seven eyes but the sevenfold anointing of the Spirit? I will just enumerate the seven described in Isaiah 11: "Spirit of wisdom, the Spirit of understanding, the Spirit of counsel, the Spirit of might, the Spirit of knowledge, the Spirit of fear of the Lord, the Spirit of quick understanding." The Man Christ Jesus in His divine nature, the Son Eternal, the Man Christ Jesus bone of your bone and flesh of your flesh, anointed by the Holy Spirit, filled by the Holy Spirit with wisdom, understanding, counsel, might, knowledge, the fear of the Lord and of quick understanding. The very Saviour I want, the Saviour of quick understanding. We say concerning one another, "I did not quite understand what you meant," and there we often make sad blunders, and wound where we mean to heal, because we are so stupid and slow, because we cannot put ourselves in the place of someone else. But here our blessed One is of Quick understanding in the fear of the Lord, knowing the desire of my heart before it is expressed, knowing me altogether. Joshua, behold the Stone, the one Stone upon which are seven eyes.

He thus contains every qualification as Redeemer. One word from Him makes darkness light. The eye of His love and sympathy is a blessing indeed to us.

> One look from that dear Lord,
> Whose brow compassion wears,
> Will much of heavenly bliss afford.
> E'en in this vale of tears."

Lastly, "Behold, I will engrave the graving thereof, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will remove the iniquity, of that land in one day" --- the affirmation of Jehovah of hosts, that is very beautiful -- the affirmation of Him who cannot lie, the affirmation, of Jehovah of hosts! Poor Joshua must have felt awfully lonely as he stood there. The enemies were all about him jeering, sneering; there he was with his companions, "men wondered at, "but Jehovah of hosts, who does as He pleases "in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of earth," has affirmed that the Stone shall never be removed, that He has graven upon that living Stone with the graving thereof that which shall cheer and bless and draw and direct poor, sinners. The graving, an inscription on a foundation stone.

Yes, the graving of an inscription upon a precious stone. Take the two together. You see right through the whole of this chapter the stones in the breastplate of the high priest, considered here as the one Stone, representing the heart of love of our dear Lord. Behold, I will engrave the graving thereof in the Lamb's book of life and upon the heart of love. Look at the lapidary. All his attention is given to his work. The work as it proceeds appears marred, but when it is finished there is complete beauty and value. Now look at the Stone, the tried Stone that has been graven with the graving thereof. "It pleased the Lord to bruise Him; He hath put Him to grief." I will engrave the graving thereof." "Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? Behold and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow." "I will engrave the graving thereof." Graven in Gethsemane's Garden; graven at Calvary's cross: graven with those deep lines - all tell us of a law honoured and fulfilled. Graven with the inscription that declares that God's justice has been satisfied, sinners have been pardoned and righteously saved. "Behold, I have set, I have laid, this Stone which my own hands have graven," says Jehovah of hosts, Jehovah the Father. Behold the whole church of God, before every seeking sinner, before every one here today who has a hope or a desire in his soul for the mercy of God in Christ. "In all our afflictions He was afflicted." "I have graven the graving thereof."

Apply this to Scripture. Think of our dear Lord who said, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." "I have engraven the graving thereof." "All the promises are yea and amen in Him." Jehovah of hosts hath affirmed this, and as dear George Doudney somewhere sings:

Come, troubled child, with fears oppressed,
By sin defiled, by guilt distressed:
The fountain open stands for thee,
Of priceless power both full and free."

And as the poor sinner draws near, and is favoured with a sight of a precious Christ, he is enabled from time to time to say, "He loved me, and gave Himself for me." The apostle to the Galatians says, "When It pleased God to reveal His Son in me." Then he goes on to speak of the blessedness that sprang up in his heart: "He loved me, and gave Himself for me." Here is the tried believer's strength and power. Here is our peace. Christ our Lord removed the iniquity of His church in one day. Whatever reference this has to the future of the Jews, it will be gloriously fulfilled; but I have sought to set before you the glory and the grace and beauty of the everlasting gospel, which sometimes fills our souls with music now, and which shall "bear our spirits up" in the hour and the article of death.

"And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed" --- Daniel 2:44.

In these days of gross ignorance and perversion of Gospel Truth among the professed followers of free grace, and while the world around us is full of prophecy concerning the downfall and extinction of the chosen few whose God is the Lord, and who alone are enabled by the Spirit to heed the teachings of the Sacred Oracles, and to maintain the Truth and Order of the Gospel, it is wise that we should pause and examine the Holy Testimony upon such an important, and vital question.

We need not refer to the connection, showing that the God of heaven definitely rules and controls all worldly governments, that He marks the rise and fall of earthly kingdoms with direct reference to the good of His chosen people; for "When the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when He separated the sons of Adam, He set the bounds of the people according, to the number of the children of Israel. For the Lord's portion is His people; Jacob is the lot of His inheritance" Deuteronomy 32:8.

The bounds of nations, of kingdoms, and races were absolutely determined with reference to the chosen people of God --- His portion, and the manifestation of that visible people, as surely as other events and circumstances were ordained to that end, and to work together for their good, and the glory of their eternal God; nations are as absolutely in God's bands as atoms and motes.

Kingdom after kingdom rises in the vision of Daniel; each succeeding the other, and all paving the way for the "days of these kings" in which the God of heaven should set up a kingdom, which should never be destroyed, and should "not be left to other people." That is, the very same character of people who were set up in it, shall continue to inhabit it. It shall not be left to strangers, foreigners, and aliens, destitute of its life, and ignorant of its teachings - the doctrine of free grace. For "of Zion it shall be said, This and that man was born in her: and the Highest Himself shall establish her. The Lord shall count, when He writeth up the people, that this man was born there" (Psalms 87:5,6). This chosen generation of Jesus Christ then shall inhabit the kingdom, which is but the outward development of its organic and eternal life.

The days of these kings" had come and the prepared material for this kingdom was at hand. And what a wonderful preparation! They came through scenes of sorrow and suffering, a poor and an afflicted people. Their haunts were among the lowly, in the vale of poverty and distress; the blind, the lame, the lepers, the deaf; "the dead are raised up, and the poor have the Gospel preached to them" (Matthew 11:4-6).

They came to their appointed places in this kingdom through the purifying flames of deep affliction; a sorely tried people, and with the deep conscious knowledge of the vain deceptive, unreal nature of all earthly power, and fancied earthly good.

The kingdom is not of this world, "a stone cut out of the mountain without hands" -- "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God" (Luke 1:35).

Jesus says in Luke 17:21, "Behold, the kingdom of God is within you." He was Himself the very embodiment of the kingdom; "the root and the offspring" (Revelation 22:16), of the house of David; the seed from which the whole development should come. And just as certain as He was not of this world, as "coming down from God out of heaven," so every one of this development, each and every child of the kingdom comes down from God out of heaven also, taking up his abode in a mortal temple or tabernacle. Necessarily then the kingdom must be indestructible as composed of indestructible subjects, "born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God" (John 1:13).

We trace the Church from age to age through the doctrine and order which she maintains. It is said that the Church when first set up "continued steadfastly in the Apostles' doctrine and fellowship." Can we find the doctrine of the Apostles, as set forth in their teaching and writing, among us today? Can we trace the clear line shining like a sunbeam, from the teachings of the dear Master, and of the men raised up and divinely inspired to succeed Him? Can we trace this Divine testimony in the doctrine and order held so sacred among us, dear brethren and friends of Truth, today? Assuredly do we answer, Yes!

The doctrine of the Absolute Predestination of God Himself without reference to men, means, or instrumentalities, or the works of men or devils; without reference to whether these things be good, bad, or indifferent, whether they be large or small, temporal or eternal, all absolutely, emphatically, and accurately ALL, were ordained of God to come to pass, exactly as they do or did so occur, without changing a note, or swerving a hair-breadth from what God did from all eternity, and before all time predestinate should come to pass.

The doctrine of the eternal choice of the Church in Christ in which each individual child of God was chosen in Christ, personally, eternally, and actually existing in Him from all eternity; the body (Church) being set up in the Head "from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was" (Proverbs 8:23). The entire, separate, exclusive travel of the Church aside from all worldly religious organization, secret orders, worldly vanities, and man-made auxiliaries are all vanities.

We ask, Who holds these things as plainly taught in the Sacred Oracles as the Sun is seen in a cloudless sky at noon? Who holds them consistently? Why no people in these United States today but the Anti-Means, Anti-Secret Order, Old School Predestinarian Baptists.

The life-throbbing power of the doctrine and Biblical order of the Gospel is manifested wherever saints meet in holy worship. The love of God is felt among them, the impulse and power of the love of His sacred and eternal Truth is felt, as the tide throbs through the bosom of the sea; the love of God flowing from heart to heart, written in the organic life of these dear people, for "by this shall all men know that ye are My disciples, if ye have love one to another" (John 13:35)

This is not for the world socially, religiously, or politically, to know anything whatever about They neither know the doctrine nor yet the people who maintain it; "The world knoweth us not, because it knew Him not" (1 John 3:1). But rather, "Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you." (1 John 3:13). "If the world hate you," says Jesus, "ye know that it hated Me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you" (John 15:18-19).

But we return to the promise that this kingdom "Shall never be destroyed." This promise has been verified through each succeeding age from the apostolic days down to the present; there ever has been and ever will be a people who "shall shew forth the praise of God."

The Church of God is His throne. He says by Ezekiel, "the place of My throne, and the place of the soles of My feet, where I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel for ever, and My holy name, shall the house of Israel no more defile" (Ezek. 43:7). Can the throne of God be set aside? Can it be corrupted by the corroding influence of time? Can His Holy Church become so changed as to lose her identity? There are two ways in which an organization may become entirely extinct. One way is to entirely lose its visibility. The other that its order may be so perverted as to entirely change its character. An Old School Baptist Church may once have claimed to hold the principles of Truth, but if such principles have been perverted; instead of holding to the doctrine of an eternal election, if they hold to a perversion of that doctrine, for instance, instead of holding to the eternal and personal election of the Church in Christ, they hold to an election in the life of Christ, which is communicated to an Adam sinner, by such a sinner in himself being born again. Such perversion of the testimony especially when continued to other points of doctrine, and backed up by looseness of order, absolutely marks the end of such as a Gospel church, and that the candlestick has been removed from their midst. The Lord has withdrawn His presence in such a case. As the once flourishing visible churches in Galatia, at Ephesus, and in adjoining parts have been removed; as the churches on the Atlantic Coast of the United States once strong and able in their ministry and membership, have ceased longer to exist as Gospel churches, through perversion and opposition to the doctrine they once maintained, and turn to gross disorder, so the Lord may continue to remove the candlestick from this or that locality. But this does not do violence to the Truth that so long as time exists there shall be a visible church, whose unperverted doctrine, clear-cut order, separating her entirely, religiously speaking, from the world, shall bring down upon such church the malignant opposition of every worldly influence. She will suffer persecution.

Our God knows where such Church shall be planted. Jesus says, "Every plant, which My heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up." 'Tis true that the primal application of this testimony was made to something somewhat different, yet it has an indirect bearing upon what we are writing. These churches are "Trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that He may be glorified" (Isaiah 61:3). And as long as time endures so long shall the visible Church of God exist as a witness to the Truth; the doctrine shall be held unperverted and the order unpolluted in His holy Sanctuary. The Church shall outlive worldly governments, and earthly orders. The promise is "it shall stand forever." No such promise has ever been made in regard to any worldly nation; nations strong and mighty in worldly power, whose armies have spread consternation and terror wherever they have marched. Nations presided over by man wise in state-craft, and able to rule, one after another such worldly nations have passed as a night vision, but there is today, as there ever has been and ever will be a church, small it is true in numbers compared to the horde, the wild rabble of anti-Christ, yet strong and aggressive as trusting in the living God who controls and directs all things.

All worldly empire must sooner or later come to an end, but this Church can never die. "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: the scepter of Thy kingdom is a right scepter" (Psalm 45:6).

We can rest assured that there will ever be, as there has ever been, and is now, located exactly where the God of heaven designs them to be, a people who hold His Truth, while earth and hell oppose.

No earthly means are used to sustain them; earthly elements do not enter into their being or support. "And the Lord added to the Church daily such as should be saved" (Acts 2:47).

May we be kept from the attempt of adding to our numbers, by leaving it where it is, entirely in the Lord's hands. He will give His Church ministers, "And no man taketh this honor unto him- self, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron" (Hebrews 5:4). We must not put forth our hand to steady the ark of the Lord (I Chron. 13) for the hand of God will securely hold His Church, adding to her numbers and giving her ministers at His own will. The light of Truth shall steadily fall from off her holy altar. And ye, dear children of the regeneration, are witnesses of these things. "Ye are My witnesses, saith the Lord, and My servant whom I have chosen" (Isaiah 53:10). For, "Even so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace" (Romans 11:5). "Now unto Him that is able to keep you (and us) from falling, and to present you (and us) faultless before the presence of His glory with exceeding joy. To the only wise God our Savior, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen" (Jude 24-25).

OBITUARIES

AGNES TURNAGE PENNINGTON

Sister Agnes was born in Greene Co. N.C. on July 24, 1928 and departed this life on March 20, 2017, in Pitt Co. N.C., at the age of 88 years. Her parents were John Roland and Williamenia Whitted Turnage. She was married to Edward Miles Pennington, who preceded her in death. To this union was born one daughter, Anne Pennington Whitehurst. Along with her daughter, Sister Agnes leaves her son-in-law, two grandchildren, one sister, the Church and many friends to mourn the loss of her, yet we believe that our loss is her eternal gain.

Sister Agnes came before the Church at Mewborn's Meeting House and expressed her love for the Church and said she desired a home with those of the same faith and order as her forebears. She was received into the fellowship of the Church and on Saturday before the second Sunday in June 1992, Sister Agnes was baptized, along with Sister Mary D. Kearney, in the Church's baptismal pool. The sacred ordinance was administered by our late Pastor, Elder J.M. Mewborn. He was also her first cousin. Sister Agnes was a great-great granddaughter of Elder Parrot Mewborn II, in whose honor our Church was named.

The Lord blest Sister Agnes with an humble spirit. A kind and loving smile always graced her countenance. Her daily walk in this life reflected Soloman's description of the Church when he said "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all Her paths are peace." Pro. 3:17. She was faithful to regularly attend her meetings and fill her seat until she was no longer able due to suffering from memory loss. She lived in full fellowship with the Church until she was called from this life.

Sister Agnes's body was laid to rest in the Mewborn Family Cemetery, Green N.C., while we believe her soul is resting in the Paradise of God. We feel that we can witness with the Apostle Paul, when he said "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." 1 Cor. 15:19. But our lively hope does not end here, for our hope is in the resurrection of these our vile bodies. "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." 1 Cor. 15:21-22. We are comforted by these words that the Apostle Paul spoke to the Corinthians, "for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"Job said, "Thou shall call, and I will answer thee" Job 14:15. We believe that Sister Agnes will be among that number that shall hear that call from on high and will answer Him.

HYMN

When I survey the wonderous cross
On which the Prince of glory died,
My richest gain I count but loss,
And pour contempt on all my pride.

Forbid it, Lord, that I should boast,
Save in the death of Christ my Lord;
All the vain things that charm me most,
I sacrifice them to his blood.

See from his head, his hands, his feet,
Sorrow and love flow mingled down;
Did e'er such love and sorrow meet?
Or thorns compose so rich a crown?

His dying crimson like a robe
Spreads o'er his body on the tree,
Then I am dead to all the globe,
And all the globe is dead to me.

Were the whole realm of nature mine,
That were an offering far too small;
Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my soul, my life, my all.

Watts.

"For all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him Amen, unto the glory of God by us." 2 Corinthians 1:20.

Elder Jerry B. Farmer

The called and sent apostle Paul, on his journey to Judea, was minded to come again to the church in Corinth. He had many things to say unto them, and before he arrived, he wrote to them some of the things he had in mind. We are made to be thankful that the Lord worked with him in this way in order that these scriptures were written down and preserved, that the Corinthian church and the faithful generations to come might have the benefit of what the apostle was blessed to teach.

The apostle Paul wrote, as he was moved by the Holy Spirit, "When I therefore was thus minded, did I use lightness? Or the things that I purpose, do I purpose according to the flesh, that with me there should be yea yea, and nay nay? For the Son of God, Jesus Christ, who was preached among you by us, even by me and Silvanus and Timotheus, was not yea and nay, but in him was yea. For all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him Amen, unto the glory of God by us. Now He which stablisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God; who hath sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts." The apostle was grave, but loving as he taught and admonished the saints in the true and narrow way that leads to life.

The things of God are life and death to the saints. In the Holy Spirit there is no lightness or foolishness. They who go on with such things are in a carnal mind. The worldly religion conducted by those walking after the flesh, must entertain their congregations to keep their attention. The true doctrine is too hard and too demanding to be received by those they lead about in their easy religion. They teach that God begins the work of Grace, but man must finish it by making the proper choices. The apostle taught no such thing. He said, "Having begun in the Spirit, are you now made perfect by the flesh?" Of course, the answer is, No. The apostle said, "He that hath begun a good work in you shall perform it unto the day of Jesus Christ." God began the work, and He shall finish it. He is the Author and Finisher of our faith. He is the Alpha and Omega, the First and the Last, the Beginning and the End.

The gospel of Jesus Christ that the apostle and his faithful ministering brethren preached was the true good news of God to the saints. It was all positive with no negatives. It was yea and Amen. Jesus Christ, the Son of God, came into the world by way of a miraculous, virgin birth according to the prophesies that were given of Him many hundreds of years before they were fulfilled. He lived the perfect life with no guile in His mouth, neither had any sin in His person. He was the spotless, sinless Lamb of God, who only was worthy to offer Himself up to God as that holy sacrifice that satisfied the justice of God and fulfilled His righteous law to the jot and the tittle. He loved His own with an everlasting love. He chose them in Himself and gave them grace in Him before the world was. He stood as a Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. He took the sins of all the saints upon Himself and nailed them to the tree. He imputed His righteousness to His beloved people, so there is now no spot in them. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." The gospel is altogether good news to those who love Him and look for Him to come again.

Jesus came into the world, and the world hated Him without a cause. Why? Because He spoke the truth, and the truth shinned light upon all the wickedness and hypocrisy of wicked men, even those deeply religious men. They no longer had a cloak to cover their works of darkness and selfishness. Their solution, since they loved darkness rather than the light, was to try to extinguish the light. They set about to kill Jesus, but they could not lay hands upon Him until He yielded Himself to them. Then they beat Him, and scourged Him, and mocked and spit upon Him, and crucified Him according to the prophesy.

Jesus accomplished that which His Father gave Him to do and He prospered in the thing whereunto He was sent. He accomplished the warfare of the saints, and finished their salvation. He was sent to seek and to save that which was lost, and this He did. He said, "I came not to do my own will, but to do the will of Him that sent me. And this is the will of the Father, that of all that the Father gave me I should lose nothing but should raise it up in the last day." Every last saint was covered in that one offering of Himself that Jesus made unto God. We are taught, "By one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." He gave His life a ransom for many. He redeemed every little child of God to Himself. He was buried, and after three days, He was raised from the dead, and appeared to His disciples, and to more than 500 at one time. He ascended into heaven where He sits at the right hand of God where He ever liveth to make intercession for the saints according to the will of God. He shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation, when He shall raise the dead in Christ and shall change, in the twinkling of an eye, those that are alive and remain at His coming. He shall gather together all the saints in their glorified bodies to Himself from the four winds of heaven. There they shall ever be with the Lord.

In the worldly religions, their false gospel is yea and nay. They say that God is sovereign and almighty, just the same as we do. But then they deny it by saying that God will not violate a man's free will, and that God can do nothing unless one lets Him. They say it is up to the man to obey God, or else he will miss a blessing, and receive a curse. By saying these things, they are saying yea and nay. But it is not so with the true servants of the living God. They are blessed to preach the true sovereign, almighty God that does all of His will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth. None can stay His hand or say unto Him, What doest thou? The true ministers preach the God that made the world for Himself, and that He does with it what He will. Of one lump he made vessels unto honor and vessels unto dishonor. He made some that would fit in glory and others that would fit into destruction. The worldly wise man says, How then can God find fault? The apostle replied, "Who art thou o man that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say unto him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus?" This cannot be. The Lord said, before either had done good or evil, "Jacob have I loved, Esau have I hated."

God has established His little ones in the teaching of grace without the works of men. They cannot be satisfied with anything less. "For by grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of ourselves, not of works lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship created in Christ Jesus, unto good works, which God before ordained that we should walk in them." It is not yea and nay, but yea and Amen. It is grace for grace. To those that God loved with an everlasting love, He gave grace in Christ Jesus before the world was. To those that He gave grace in Christ for eternal salvation, He also gave grace to obey the gospel. He made and brought His little ones into the world to show forth His praise. Shall the God of all creation be frustrated and not do all His will? Shall His people not walk in those good works that God has before ordained that they should walk in them? This cannot be. It is impossible. They shall show forth His praise, because God has declared it.

God's little ones are not only established in grace, but they are also anointed of God according to the scriptures. This anointing is their being sealed by the earnest of the Holy Spirit in their hearts. This seal is an impression made upon and within every vessel of honor, showing the ownership of God. This is what sets them apart from the wicked of the world. This seal is the earnest, or that which is given to secure the agreement that God has made on behalf of His people. His agreement, or promise to them, is for Him to return and fully possess His beloved people to Himself forever.

Conversely, the wicked are marked with the mark of the beast, which is the spirit of wickedness, showing the ownership of the devil. This is a hard saying. Who can receive it? Only those blessed with an ear to hear and an eye to see and a heart to understand. The wicked have a purpose also. God has chosen to use them as a rod in His hand, and as those who bring fiery trials to the faith of His saints, to His own glory and honor as he brings them forth as gold refined in the furnace of affliction.

Consider Pharaoh, and his powerful army, and how they held in captivity the children of Israel for 430 years. Consider how the Lord brought His people out from bondage with a powerful hand. Remember how He went before his people in a pillar of smoke by day and a pillar of fire by night to give shade from the scorching sun by day and light by night. Remember when Pharaoh came behind the people of God to destroy them and there seemed to be no way of escape. Remember how God caused the east wind to blow and how he caused the waters of the Red Sea to be parted and stand as a heap. Remember how the pillar of fire went from before Israel to the rear to stand between them and Pharaoh.

And remember how every last one of the children of Israel crossed over on dry land, and how Pharaoh and his host were destroyed when the Lord brought the waters upon them. Why was this all done? "For the scripture saith unto Pharaoh, Even for this same purpose have I raised thee up, that I might show my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth. Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth."

God must receive all honor, praise and glory, because He only is worthy. In all His mighty acts, the Lord has had His saints in view. He has given them His Holy Spirit, which keeps them through every trial and affliction. God sees to it that every trouble works for their good. "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them that are the called according to his purpose." "For all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him Amen, unto the glory of God by us."

Here is one more thought before I close. The word 'Amen' means 'so be it'. "Remember the former things of old: for I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure," God has spoken good to and for the household of faith. So be it. Amen and Amen.

I trust that this was written in love and in hope of eternal life, unworthy as I am.

Experience of Elder D. A. Poindexter

When I asleep in sin did lie
My god awakened me;
And I in unbelief did cry
That I might saved be.

I felt my sins a heavy load, -
'Twas more than I could bear;
I wept and cried unto the Lord
That he would hear my prayer.

But God abhors the sacrifice
Where not the heart is found;
He bade me trust in His free grace,
That I should wear a crown.

I bowed myself before the Lord
Lay prostrate on the ground;
I sought Him in His holy word,
But no deliverance found.

It seemed to me the time had passed,
The day of grace was gone;
And God had given me up at last,
And I was sinking down.

I laid my hands across my breast
As though laid down to die;
Till God was pleased my soul to bless
And raised my hopes on high.

Had I all language at command,
All human tongues employed;
'Twould be to speak my Saviour's praise,
Who has my sins destroyed.

My heart dissolved in thankfulness,
In humble praise to God, -
That Christ should stoop my soul to bless,
And move that heavy load.

But soon my fears returned again,
And plunged me in despair,
And my Saviour me again relieved
And bid me not to fear.

And from that hour I did believe,
And to the present day.
That through the merits of His blood
My sins were washed away.

I prayed to God both night and day,
If I should be baptized
I might be plainly shown the way,
And not in a disguise.

Five different times thus shown to me
That if I would be wise
To follow Christ who died for me -
He was Himself baptized.

The 26th of the fourth month
In eighteen and twenty nine;
I was baptized as Jesus was: -
Four more at the same time.

And then to take the sacrament
I awfully did fear.
I prayed to God with heart intent,
He still my course would steer.

He bade me take the sacrament
And it to others give;
To such as serve with heart intent,
And unto Him to live.

Now since my Saviour is so kind,
His mercies are so free;
I hope to serve him whilst in time,
And to eternity.

Then I shall bathe my happy soul
In seas of heavenly rest;
And not a wave of trouble role
Across my peaceful breast.

I hope to meet my Saviour there
In that bright world above;
With all the saints their bliss to share,
Where perfected is love.

With all the ransomed of the Lord
To ever live and sing;
An endless anthem to the praise
Of Jesus Christ our King:

Where all is one eternal day,
That ne'er shall have an end
Now if you wish to go with me
Come, follow Christ your friend

Up to the courts of heavenly bliss
To reign with Him in love;
And always live where Jesus is
To sing His praise above.

VOICES OF THE PAST

EXCERPT FROM ELDER A.P. MEWBORN'S EXPERIENCE

Before we go any further with this, we look back at the poor beginning, and will try to give some background of my being here. You see, I had a long hard road to travel, heartaches to suffer, sickness and sorrows to endure, love to share, lessons to learn, school to attend and a family to share before the beginning of trying to preach publicly. In school I managed to get along with my class mates, get good grades and get along with those who were in authority. Still I was shy and retiring in some ways, I would not speak before class or render my lessons orally, I stuttered and felt so insignificant that I would forfeit a grade rather than speak before the class or the teacher.

I was born of good parents, some would say "Godly", but they were earthly too, and I loved them dearly, and respected and obeyed them both with all the ability God gave me until He took them away on that trip that is required of "all the earth". Both were given a good hope in the Lord Jesus Christ, and loved and cared for the Church in a beautiful way. I believe this way was given them by their saviour. They lived to see two sons baptized into the fellowship of the saints, and to see one of them ordained a deacon to serve the Church with his daddy, and the other to try to serve the church as pastor. They were faithful messengers of the Meadow Church and were known and loved by the brethren in all the surrounding Churches and Associations. They lived long and useful lives in the Church and fully believed that they could serve God, only as they could serve their brethren, their children and their neighbor. I am glad they were mine and I could live with them and hopefully serve with them. As I remember the beautiful life we shared, I can only describe it as a "Joy unspeakable and full of Glory, and the Lord Praised."

As a boy I was different from the rest of the boys in the neighborhood and the mothers would often say, "Ap is a good boy, he isn't into everything and not as mean as the other boys." Lord knows I loved to hear this, I didn't believe it, but I loved to hear it. You see the real truth was, I was sick and not able to be actively disobedient, as the others were. I tried to hide this fact and soon my egotism had grown so much that I truly felt I was just as good as anybody and a little better than most. I believed in God, but it was not the same God I hope to believe in now. I believed in a God that was endeavoring to save the whole world, all the people, and I knew that as good as I believed I was, that any time I chose I could bring about the "blessed assurance" that I heard so often about. There was a faint feeling in me, my soul?, my heart?, my spirit?, I still don't know which that salvation did not come as the neighborhood religious fathers said it did, this faint and still small voice kept saying, "God is not poor, He doesn't need your money, He doesn't need your works, He doesn't need anything you have but will supply your every need. This gnawing voice caused me, and still does a great deal of concern, you see I wanted to listen to the people of the neighborhood, who spoke so highly of me, and they taught that God would do anything you wanted Him to do, If you would just let Him. As I look back I wonder why they didn't do better. I was told by the Arminians that this gnawing voice that was beginning to give me so much trouble would cease and go away, that it was sent to me from God to cause me to make up my mind, and if I would just join the Church, and really apply myself to the work and support that was necessary then all my troubles would vanish and be no more. This gnawing, still small voice did not let up, it was continually there, always accusing me of the sinful deeds of my flesh, and the evil thoughts that possessed me, until I was so much in despair, that I was willing to try anything; I set about to do better. I was not going to do anything wrong, or have sinful or evil thoughts anymore, and I was going to join the Arminian Church that promised so much to poor sinners, but still I had not seen these promises fulfilled, still this was the only hope I had; the only hope I had been given, and with all the doubts that possessed me, I had to try. About this time my best friend came to see me and he wanted to discuss salvation. He felt to be condemned to death, and was told that he must attend revival, "so called", being held next week and obey the voice of the preacher, and that he must ask me to attend with him, so we both could be saved and begin to feel good again about our lives.

Well I agreed to go, first for my friend's sake, so he could feel he had done his duty, and also because I was so miserable, I thought perhaps this might help. I still had not approached my Father and Mother about my condition, because I was so mortally afraid that they would agree with that still small voice that had not let up at all, but was still gnawing at me. I went to the revival hoping that at last I could feel some relief and get rid of the sinful condition that I had lived with so long. But alas, this "noted" Evangelist preached only to those who were saved, and his sermon did not offer the local heathens, or the unregenerate, or the unsaved any hope of salvation at all. His text was the 40th Psalm, first verse, and for the life of me, then, and even now, I cannot see that this would do much for those who knew no troubles as I felt one who was saved would be. When the invitation was issued my friend and I, who were sitting side by side, arose to go up and be saved, but when we reached the aisle, and he went to meet the minister, I weeping bitterly went out the door. The tremendous crowd, which were present, were my neighbors, my friends and my people, but when they filed out of the meeting house, and saw me leaning against a tree weeping out loud, they all went by except one real old man, a friend of my Grandfather and family, he came and embraced me and said, "Son, another time, another place," and God only knows how much that beautiful message has comforted me time after time when I have been made to return to that old tree. But my troubles were still present, no relief at all had been given me, so I concluded there was no more any need for me to attend Church services, for to me the hymns has lost their melody and message and the sermons only reiterated the sinful condition and terrible plight I was in.

It was summer time and instead of going to the meetings with my Mother and Daddy, I went swimming. There was a hurt look in their faces when they asked If I were going to Church, but they never told me I aught to go. Peter went fishing and I went swimming. I felt that with the boys I would not hear praying, or preaching, or anything to remind me of what a wretched, and hell deserving sinner I was and am. But even this would not work for me. One Sunday morning one of the boys, who was accustomed to attending Sunday School and Church, said he felt condemned, that he should be in Sunday School and Church. My older brother, Joe, was present and promptly told him, that while he did not believe In Sunday School, we could have singing and prayer at the swimming place. He then began to sing Amazing Grace, and nearly all the others joined in. Upon the conclusion of the hymn, Joe asked me to lead them in prayer, and I could not refuse, I tried to pray, to pray for sinners, and to pray that God would continue to supply the needs of His people, and show them the way.

On the next Sunday, when Joe asked me to pray, he asked me to also speak, if I would speak of the things that were troubling me and the others of the Lord's people. I was afraid to try to speak, but more afraid of not trying to, and I felt that if I failed no one would know about it but just the boys who were present. I began to try to speak, I don't know what I said, but this should not be strange, because I don't know what I said last Sunday, but I do know that when I had tried to dismiss the group, I felt some relief for the first time in many months. This was a regular appointment for us for the remainder of the summer and extended into the next when the weather permitted. We went swimming and had our meeting. Word of our attempted worship service soon spread in the neighborhood, but I did not know it, and my Father, being so much against mockery or anything sacrilegious, and was so afraid that this was what was going on at the swimming hole, until he stayed home from Church one Sunday morning, and carefully hid himself that he might see and hear the worship services he had heard about, unobserved. I knew nothing about this until many years later when my Mother told me about it. She said, "Your Pa name from the swamp weeping, and told me that whatever was said and done that morning was what he hoped to believe, and that it edified him and did praise to the name of our Heavenly Father, and Jesus who He has sent."

He never went back to my knowledge, and never mentioned his going at all to brother Joe or me.

Oh, that I could return to this time of my youth, when I was blessed to worship our Lord, and not know of any trouble that could mar it's beauty. I know this trouble must come, see John 16, 33. "These things I have spoken unto you, that in me you might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

But alas, we cannot recapture, or even capture, anything, and cannot even remember the beautiful things except our Lord recalls them for us. Even now he recalls for me the fact that I have written seven pages in the book and have not even identified myself. Even today as I think of the sweet promises of God to his children, I am just a child and my prayer is that He will ever keep me as a child.

I, Albert Parrott Mewborn, was born in Greene County, Carrs Township, May 26, 1919. My father is Levi Andrew Mewborn and my mother Nancy Jane (Mewborn) Mewborn. They have both "gone the way of all the earth, 'but I cannot say' they were", they are my Father and Mother today. My Grandfather's Dad was Elder Parrott Mewborn, my Father's Grandfather and my Mother's Great Grandfather. He was a Primitive Baptist Minister, and had three sons in the ministry. The best known of the sons in the ministry was my Grandfather, Elder D.A. Mewborn. This is becoming most confusing to me, I am definitely not a genealogist, but the best conclusion I can come to is that I am my own third cousin.

Elder A. P. Mewborn

1827 – Experience of Elder Thomas Barton

Strikersville, Pennsylvania, August 22, 1827.

Having been the subject of numerous disappointments during my life, I have thought of giving a short account of some of them. In common with all mankind, I was born in sin, in the service of which I lived till upwards of twenty years.

At that time I belonged to a debating society in Baltimore, and being full of the talking spirit, I proposed forming one in the neighborhood I was then in, the proposal met with the consent of all present, and we immediately commenced operations. The question proposed for discussion, was to test the relative merits of the miser and the libertine.

I took the side favorable to the miser, contending that the conduct of the other was productive of positive evils to society, among other evils resulting from dissipation. I was led to expatiate on the wounds inflicted by the dissipation of a son on the heart of upright parents, and particularly on that of a kind and tender mother. Little did I think that while treating on the subject of dissipation, my own conduct was so soon to be brought home to me, that my career in that course was that night to terminate. My only surviving parent was a mother, answering the above description, and whose heart had been deeply wounded by my own conduct; and while on this part of my subject, I saw her with the eyes of my imagination, as plain as I ever saw her with literal eyes.

She appeared seated on a chair before me, with eyes fixed intensely on me, exhibiting the strongest expression of affection; the big tear rolling down her furrowed cheek, while her whole countenance exhibited the strongest symptoms of deep despair.

And here I am perfectly at a loss to describe the effects that followed: I can only say, that it seemed that all the sins I had ever committed, came rushing into my mind like an over-whelming torrent, and in a moment I felt myself one of the most miserable wretches out of hell.

Such was the effect of this sudden change of things in my mind as to produce a partial derangement, and though the night was dark, and raining, I immediately left the house, and that without my hat. But instead of taking the road I intended, I took the opposite, and after pursuing it for some miles, I left it and took to the woods; but in the morning found myself in a house by the side of a fire, to which I had been led more by instinct than reason. By this time, however, reason had resumed her throne, but it was to act as a witness against me. For a few days my mind was more particularly directed to my outward sins, but it was not long before a sense of heart sin reduced my outward sin to mere insignificance. I felt indeed that my heart was a cage of unclean birds, a den of every hateful thing.

But though I soon found that I had no positive claim on Divine favor, having never performed a good act in all my life, yet I attempted to set up a negative claim — that was, that I had not been quite as bad as some others; and as an example I caught at Saul of Tarsus, but that prop soon gave way.

I soon found a balance in his favor, for though I had not persecuted the saints, yet I had far exceeded him in wickedness. In persecuting the saints, he acted from principle, and verily thought he was doing God service: while pursuing my course of sin, my conscience instead of approving of my conduct, often reproved me severely; and what I thought then I think still, that on the ground of excuses, Paul had the advantage of me, and I am sure that I shall have at least an equal right with him or any other to sing the song of free and sovereign grace to all eternity, and this is a right I cannot surrender to any one. As to the claim of superior zeal and usefulness in the cause of God and Truth I am willing to surrender that to my brethren, I believe them entitled to it; but to surrender to any one of the redeemed of the Lamb a greater right than myself to adore the riches of sovereign grace, I cannot. But I must proceed and just state that the whole process of conviction was so different to the notion I had formed on the subject, that I soon gave up all hope of its being a work of grace on my poor soul, and concluded that it was only the prelude to the eternal vengeance in reserve for me.

Herein consisted the first disappointment in my life worth noticing; and this arose from my ignorance in attempting to fore-stall the work of the Spirit. I have stated above, that instead of being under a work of grace, I concluded that I was only realizing a prelude to my just and eternal damnation. Despair had taken hold of me — as David, "the fear of hell gat hold on me," — I had given up the idea of prayer entirely, not that I had become willing to be banished from God, nor was it from a sullenness of spirit or obduracy of heart, of these things I had cured before this, but I thought it presumption in me to wish Him to depart from a fixed determination to make me a monument of His just vengeance to all eternity. Having come to this conclusion, I continued for some time under a state of most awful suspense; during which time I ventured to make but one request, which was, that when arraigned before His bar, He would make my sentence as light as could be consistently with His justice. I am now approaching a point in my experience that I shall never forget in this world, nor that to come if reason and memory prevail beyond the tomb. I refer to the night in which I was given a hope in Christ; on retiring this night, my distress (If possible) was greater than at any former period, I concluded that my state of suspense would soon terminate, and that in a short time I should realize to the fullest extent, the apprehension I then so severely labored under.

Indeed I felt as if that night would finish the respite given me, and that before morning I should be in hell. By well convinced that the sentence I apprehended would be just, that I could but say, "Amen." But while in this desperate state of mind, to my astonishment I received a proclamation of pardon to my guilty soul. Jesus appeared to the eyes of faith as my Mediator. I was enabled to run into His name as into a strong tower and find safety; I was carried from Mount Sinai, where I stood trembling amidst its thundering and lightnings to Mount Zion to gaze with unspeakable delight on a bleeding Saviour, and to realize my personal interest in His atoning sacrifice — I say personal interest, for nothing short of this could meet my case; I must have a personal interest in the blood of Jesus or I am undone. I cannot pretend to mention any particular promise that came to me, for it seemed that all I had ever read come rolling into my mind: as fast as I reviewed them, my soul was filled to overflowing, I felt what it was to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. And here I can but exclaim with Paul; "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are His judgments, and His ways past finding out." - Thomas Barton. August 22, 1827.

"Then began he to curse and to swear, saying, I know not the man. And immediately the cock crew." Matthew 26:74.

The apostles of our Lord, though called and sent of God to preach his everlasting gospel, were men of passion and subject to error. There had lingered in the minds of the Jews the belief that Jesus would reign as a natural king over them, and restore the kingdom of Israel when he came. This thought was often in the minds of his disciples. The language of the prophets, though foretelling of his coming and pointing out many things connected with his death, was such as to leave the impression that his would be an earthly kingdom. This was God's way of hiding these things until the time was ripe to show that his kingdom was not of this world. Christ was spoken of by the prophets as the king. A king shall reign in righteousness, etc. After the resurrection of Christ, before his ascension when he was with his disciples the last time before being received up into glory, he was asked if he would at that time restore the kingdom of Israel. So we see that during his life, and even after his resurrection, before his ascension there was with his own chosen an earthly hope of being restored to power again as a nation upon the earth. When one took the sword and cut off the ear of the high priests servant, Jesus rebuked him saying, "My kingdom is not of this world." At the conclusion of eating the passover after Jesus and the apostles had sung a hymn and went out into the Mount of Olives, Jesus said unto them, "All ye shall be offended because of me this night" having reference to his being delivered into the hands of them that would crucify him. Peter said unto him, "Though all men shall be offended because of thee, yet will I never be offended." Jesus said unto him, "Verily I say unto thee, that this night before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice." In the face of these words Peter yet insisted that he would die with him before he would deny him. So said they all. How little the disciples knew of what was to follow. The earthly kingdom and earthly hopes was in their minds. Here we see something of self confidence about something that they knew nothing about. How emphatic Peter was in his assertion that he would never be offended because of Jesus. How weak we all are when left to ourselves. Our vows fail, our resolutions are broken. Jesus had told Peter, "Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat: But I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not." Jesus did not pray that he would not deny, but that he would have that which would bring him through this terrible ordeal through which he was to pass, "And when thou art converted strengthen thy brethren." How necessary it was that he be sifted, that self-confidence be pulled down. Not only was it so with Peter, but it is necessary today that our props be taken from beneath us from time to time and so learn that we are kept by the power of God. One can never strengthen his brethren as long as his confidence is in himself, and he is boasting of what he has or can do himself. The time that Peter was to deny his Lord had been set. It was not a year from then, neither was it a month, it was tonight. This very night, how close it was at hand, how positive Peter was. The number of times he would deny was determined. Not once only but thrice. Nothing could prevent him from doing this the number of times Jesus had said. All things were determined of God in the matter. After the denial thrice the cock was to crow, not before. How can any who believe the Bible question the all-prevailing power of God over all worlds and events when we find the mouths of lions have been stopped; the dumb ass has been made to speak with a man's voice, rebuking a man; the fish delivers Jonah on time to preach to Ninevah; the raven fed a prophet daily; and the cock crows on time; all because of God's power. Sometimes the thought is advanced that after one has been born into the kingdom of God he can live in such a manner that he will never receive the chastisement of God, that in the new birth he is given this ability. The word teaches, "But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons." The chastening by the Lord of one of his people is an evidence of son ship. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." It was a small thing for the word of Peter to fail. Not so with Jesus. He upholdeth things by the word his power. When Jesus was taken into the judgment hall Peter followed. He had already learned that he could not watch one hour. In the judgment hall Peter as to learn a lesson he would never forget. The sifting now begins. Satan's bounds are set. He can go no farther than God allows. The sifting will be no more or less than Jesus has purposed. At times it is a great comfort to believe with all our heart that not a dart of Satan can hit, except the God of heaven sees fit. All that is necessary to cause one to forget the tender mercies of our God is for God to forsake us in a manifest sense, and when left to ourselves we are prone to wander, Lord we feel it. He now questioned, and accused of a being a disciple of Jesus. His speech is betraying him. If one is a follower of Jesus, there will be some manifestation of it.

Peter, professing not to know what they are talking about, pleads ignorance. Another approaches affirming that he was a follower of Jesus. This time he could no longer claim he did not know what they were talking about, he says he does not know the man. Twice will not do, the sifting is not over. Three times he must be questioned, and the same number of times deny his Lord. Why? Because Christ has said, he would deny him thrice. The ones who questioned the apostle knew not what the Lord had said. They knew nothing of the purpose of God in the matter. The cock could not crow until the third denial, neither could the questioning stop until the word of the Lord was fulfilled. The last time this tempest tossed one is approached he begins to curse and swear saying, I know not the man and immediately the cock crew. It could not wait. The apostle must be reminded of the word of his master. The time for weeping is at hand for a proof that the faith has not failed. What a blessing it is that God causes us to weep. All things are in the hand of him with whom we have to do. He can use anything to remind us of his word, whether it be a promise or a chastening. Peter remembers the word of Jesus. What a terrible thing he had done. Not only denied knowing his Master, but cursing and swearing about it. How enduring is the love of Jesus for his people. No natural love would endure such a test. To have one who had been so graciously blessed deny any knowledge of Jesus when he was being tried for his life, and every accusation brought against him was false so that finally a sentence is passed like this; crucify him I find no fault in him. How peculiar are His ways in revealing unto his people their weakness, and then enabling them to know something of his everlasting love, and feel beneath the everlasting arms. Jesus now looks on him, he remembers the word of the Lord. Weeping begins, what bitter weeping. Only those that have had a like experience know. The knowledge of what he had done being now brought home to him. The weeping was evidence his faith yet abided, that self confidence was overthrown, and he is not his own keeper. Weeping never goes with self works we and self confidence. It is evidence of life, only the living naturally weep. How true also is this spiritually. Do we not at times even groan because we cannot weep? Child of God is this not your experience? Though one knows the purpose of God embraced the entire matter, and that God for his own glory, and the good of his chosen ones, often leaves them to the designs of their wicked hearts, thereby causing them to learn how frail they are, yet they weep over such things, and are made through these experiences to say over and over-Lord lead me, Lord undertake for me. They cannot excuse themselves, hate their own lives, and are brought to say with the poet:

> O that the Lord would guide my ways
> To keep his statutes still!
> O that my God would grant me grace
> To know and do his will!

By these things men live, and the life we live in the flesh, (that honors

God) we live by the faith of the son of God, who loved us and gave himself for us. Peter can now strengthen his brethren by declaring unto them the all-prevailing love and grace of God. That they are kept by the power of God, through faith, ready to be revealed at the last time. That all flesh is as grass, all the glory of man as the flower of grass, each passing shortly away, but the word of the Lord endureth forever.

1836 - SONSHIP OF ALL THE SAINTS
Circular Letter, White Water Regular Baptist Association of Indiana

The Regular Baptist Association, called White Water, convened with the Church on Pleasant Run Creek, to the Churches composing our body, sendeth this epistle of love:

Dearly Beloved Brethren in the Common Faith: - So many subjects have been presented as the basis of our former Circulars, and so narrow are the limits assigned us, that we do but little more than touch the theme, and leave it for your improvement. In this brief way, we shall now invite the churches of our body and all the members of them, with all who hope for immortality, to a few thoughts on the SONSHIP OF ALL THE SAINTS. This is an all absorbing subject — in every way suitable for contemplation and gratitude, and we hope that all the children of our Heavenly Father may derive great strength and comfort from a true and sensible knowledge and enjoyment of this filial relation.

Jesus Christ is declared in Scripture to be "the only begotten Son of God, in whom the Father is well pleased." This declaration excludes all others, for He is the only begotten; or as in eternity, the lone, or solely begotten of the Father; yet all saints are owned of God as His children as being found in Him, and and are taught to invoke Him in the endearing relation of Father. Christ, as Mediator, being brought forth from everlasting ere the earth was, and the elect church with all its members, and graces set up, chosen, and given in Him, as their Covenant Head, or Executor of their Father's testament or will. The purpose, covenant or will of the Father, ordained Christ the Mediator, Surety, and only Performer in fulfilling all the stipulations and terms of this will or testament. He stood bound in this relation to meet every demand, pay every debt, and sustain the whole cost that might accrue in executing the Will or Testament of God. Hence, in Him every heir was chosen, in Him every grace was given, to Him every promise was made, in Him they were all "yea and amen to the glory of God," on Him the law had its full power, and Justice claimed its whole demand; for He was appointed of God to execute His Will in behalf of all the heirs.

This covenant relation between the Mediator of the Will of God, and the chosen heirs in this Will, constituted all His legal acts in their behalf valid and binding, and so was a lawful and final acquittal in their behalf of all demands. But in addition to this Testamentary relation,

Jesus was born of a woman, became man, was made under the law and took on Him, not the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham. This seed of Abraham was all the members of the elect church — all the heirs of the Will of God— all the children which God had given Him— all the sons He was appointed to bring to glory. In this relation He is One with them, one Son, one Seed, one heir, one Life, one Man, one Head with its proper bodies and members. Here is not the doctrine "of seeds, as of many," but as the promise runs to One, "and Thy seed which is Christ." Now if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." In this relation all the seed are one body in Christ, and members one of another. He was the only begotten Son of the Father, and they have their son-ship in Him; He is the Son of God, the seed of Abraham, the Heir of all things, and He is formed in them, "the hope of glory," the incorruptible seed by which they are born again. They have their son-ship, their portion, their life, their light in Him. The Holy Ghost overshadowed Mary, therefore that Holy thing which was born of her, should be called the Son of God. This holy child being formed in each saint, and they receiving His Spirit, His image, His nature and fullness, are distinguished as the "sons of God" by Christ. As He was set up from everlasting in this relation to them, and they were all chosen in Him, ordained and foreknown IN Him, so He was the image into which they were predestinated to be conformed, and this conformity is effected by the Holy Spirit which forms the image of Christ in them, which is the pledge, token and seal of their sonship. He is, therefore, the only begotten Son, and they have their sonship in Him, and His Spirit in them is the Testimony, pledge and seal of this filial relation. Because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of His Son into your hearts crying "Abba Father."

Now, as they were predestinated to be conformed to the image of Christ, so they were also predestinated to the adoption of children by Christ, and the Spirit of Christ is the "spirit of this adoption." So their son-ship is in Him, and He, as the only begotten Son of God, dwells in their hearts richly by His Spirit, which is the spirit of their sonship or adoption, by which they cry (the Spirit cries) "Abba Father," Father, for as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God, and if sons then heirs - heirs of God and joint heirs with Him.

The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies, hath richly and gloriously made known His will, revealed His grace and Truth in the person and gift of His only begotten Son, and proclaimed it to all nations in the Gospel of their salvation. In this Will or Testament, the eternal purpose, appointment, council and knowledge of God, which were all purposed in Himself, hid in Christ, and ordained to the glory of the Church, are now made known by the appearing of Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel. This Will was immutable and eternal with God, well ordered in all things and sure in Christ the Mediator; and the promise and oath of the Eternal confirmed the immutability of this council, for the strong consolation of the heirs of promise. This promise is made sure to all the seed, and this immutable will with all the stipulations, conditions, terms, heirs, guarantees and blessings in it, were all purposed in Himself before the foundation of the world; they were all IN Christ, in whom the heirs were chosen from eternity, the blessings given, the inheritance bequeathed, and the son-ship confirmed. He was verily ordained before the foundation of the world as Heir of all things; He was to fulfill all things required in the Will, and unfold it to all the heirs of promise. He was manifested in these last times for this purpose. He who came to do the will of God — He to whom all its promises were made — He in whom all its heirs were chosen and blessed with all spiritual blessings — He is the rich Fountain of sovereign grace and glory in whom they find their filial relation to God and all their heavenly portion. This Will or Testament, fulfilled in the blood of Christ its Mediator, and published in the form of Testament or Covenant, is the Gospel of the grace of God. The glad tidings of God's Will is herein revealed, its conditions fulfilled, its guarantees confirmed, its heirs saved, its blessings flowing, its Mediator reigning, its promises free and absolute, its inheritance sure and eternal. The Gospel is the proclamation of the Will of God to the heirs, and by it they are encouraged to come and enjoy all the blessings it reveals, and feast eternally on the rich bounties it bestows without money and without price. Grace is here bestowed to the unworthy, mercy is flowing to the suffering, life is given to the dying, pardon to the guilty, living water for the polluted and thirsty, food for the hungry, rest for the weary laborer, and salvation for the lost.

The Spirit of the only begotten Son of God is sent into the heart of the heirs of promise, and begets in them a filial longing for God, and a godly sorrow for sin; they pant for the living water, they hunger and thirst after righteousness, they confess their sins, renounce their own righteousness, die to the law, are crucified to the world, and come as bankrupt and guilty petitioners to God. They are encouraged thus to come by the Gospel which shows them Christ the Way, opens His fullness to supply all their needs, sets before them the rich bounties of a feast, and says, "eat, O friend, yea, drink abundantly, O beloved." This Gospel proclamation of Christ having perfectly fulfilled the Will of God as the appointed Mediator, Surety and Sacrifice, is the Word of faith or of the message to be received by all the heirs. The Spirit of Christ forms His image and nature in their hearts, reveals to them their son-ship in Him, or reveals the son of God in them, and seals them as the heirs of the grace of Life. The Gospel furnishes them with all needful instruction, encouragement and testimony. Faith is a fruit of the Spirit of Christ which, enlisting all the power of the soul of the heirs, enables it to take hold of Christ and His righteousness; and the Gospel is a sufficient warrant to the most unworthy sinner to come to, and trust in Him. This faith wrought in Christ when He fulfilled the law and bore the curse, when He died to sin and rose to God; and now this "faith of Christ" works in His members and brings them to Him, and in them claims His obedience in their behalf, and a portion in the Will of His and their Father. As this "faith of Christ" wrought in Christ in their behalf, it is the substance of things hoped for, and as it. testifies in them and brings them to Him, it is the evidence of things not seen. — Faith is the Spirit's evidence which it bears in the soul of us being an heir of New Testament, by which the heir comes to Christ the Mediator, and claims its portion in the Will of God. In this view of our son-ship, we see Jesus exalted as "Head over all things to His church, that in all things He might have the preeminence." He is our elder brother, our Mediator and Surety, our Righteousness and Life; in Him we have our son-ship as the children of God, — in Him we are acknowledged as the heirs in His Will— in Him we receive our portion and our crown; by the faith of the Son of God we live, for He liveth in us, and in us and for us He overcomes the world, and gives us the victory.

Now, dear brethren, while such rich grace is so freely bestowed on such unworthy sinners as we are, how humble and thankful we should feel! Why was I made to be an heir of such immortal bliss? O, let all our hearts be dissolved into contrition, and love; let every tongue be vocal in His praise; let every eye be looking to Jesus, and every foot be running the race set before us; let holy devotion, like a hallowed flame, burn on the altar of every renewed heart, and a deep sense of the unparalleled riches of saving grace, call up every ransomed power of our soul to praise the God of love. This is the work we are called to do, not to save ourselves, or to make ourselves heirs of life, nor to fulfill the conditions of our acceptance, but to serve, adore, and praise "Him who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to His own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ before the world began." In this Gospel, the poor, the naked, the helpless, the lost, the guilty, vile and polluted, may take encouragement to come to the Savior with all their crimson sins and guilty stains, and claim the promise of His grace and pardoning mercy; for the Gospel is a sufficient warrant to the most ungodly sinner to come and trust in Christ; and only as such, can any sinner come with acceptance. Our limits forbid us to proceed further.

May we all contemplate this amazing and love inspiring theme, till the heart of the mourner is filled with joy, the feet of the lame leap as an hart, Zion's pilgrims become inspired with heavenly zeal in their journey, until the tongue of the dumb sing, till the ears of the deaf are charmed into attention; and all the sons of God rejoice in hope of His glory, till the vestment of a glorious immortality adorn the mystic body of Christ, and celestial glories expand every redeemed power to swell the creed of the heavenly throng — "Not unto us, not unto us, but unto Thee be the glory for ever and ever." Amen.

Elder Wilson Thompson, 1836.

We confess that we have not special light upon the text proposed. From the context, however, it will be seen that the text relates to the object of the incarnation and death of our Lord Jesus Christ. He did not visit our guilty world, and suffer on the cross, without having an object to accomplish, and that object was, to deliver those who through fear of death, were all their lifetime subject to bondage. In order to do this, he took on him the seed of Abraham. Not the children of the flesh, for Paul says, Romans ix. 7, 8, "Neither because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children; but in Isaac shall thy seed be called: that is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God: but the children of the promise are counted for the seed." "Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham; who is the father of us all. As it is written, I have made thee a father of many nations." — Romans iv. 16, 17. "And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

The seed of Abraham therefore, thus defined, were taken on the Redeemer when he came in the flesh, and for them he suffered on the cross. They are spoken of in the connection of our text, as his "many sons," which he was to bring to glory, and for whom, "by the grace of God he tasted death." And they are also in this connection called "the children," and "his brethren." These were subject to bondage through fear of death. For the wages of sin is death, and they had all sinned, and had just cause to fear the execution of the sentence which was against them. The object of Christ's coming and suffering, was to save them from their sins, to bear their sins in his own body on the tree, and to put them away by the sacrifice of himself, by tasting death for every one of them. And thus was he, through death, to destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil, and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage.

In this work of redemption and deliverance, he hath triumphed gloriously; and upon this ground they receive the spirit, not of bondage, again to fear, but the spirit of adoption, whereby they cry, Abba, Father. And they are exhorted to "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage." — Gal. v. 1. The perfect love of God commended in the gift of his dear Son, and communicated to the saints by regeneration, casteth out fear. Fear hath torment, but the perfect love of God shed abroad in his children, overcomes it, and casts it out. The object therefore of Christ's life in the flesh, and under the law, and of his death and suffering in the flesh, is attained. The great trumpet is blown; the jubilee proclaimed; the prison doors are opened, and the prisoners are brought out of their prison houses. And there is therefore no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after flesh, but after the Spirit. (Rom. viii.) "Jehovah has triumphed, his people are free!"

"Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all." And we brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of the free woman. (Gal. v. 28.) "Loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion." — Isa. iii. 2.

Elder Gilbert Beebe
Middletown, N. Y., Nov. 1, 1855

"And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart. — Jeremiah xxix. 13.

After the Lord has quickened our souls, for a time we often go, shall I say, blundering on, not knowing there is a Jesus. We thinks that the way of life is to keep God's commandments, obey the law, cleanse ourselves from sin, reform our lives, and cultivate universal holiness in thought, word, and action; and so we go, blundering and stumbling forward. But when the Lord has suffered us to weary ourselves to find the door, and let us sink lower and lower into the pit of guilt and ruin, from feeling that all our attempts to extricate ourselves have only plunged us deeper and deeper, and the Spirit of God opens up to the understanding and brings into the soul some spiritual discovery of Jesus and thus makes known that there is a Saviour, a Mediator, and a way of escape — this is the grand turning-point in our lives, the first opening in the valley of Achor of the door of hope. And when the soul has once seen that there is a Jesus, and once felt a measure of the power of his resurrection, it never goes to any other quarter for pardon, justification, and salvation. When the Spirit of God begins to open up with power in his conscience that there is a Jesus, that he is the only Mediator, that the Son of God has come down and taken a holy human nature into union with himself, and is now at the right hand of the Father, it is the first break of day, the first dawn of hope; and upon that bright spot does the shipwrecked soul fix his longing eyes till the Sun of righteousness arises upon it with healing in his wings. It is a great step in a man's experience to be turned wholly and solely to the Lord, and renounce all creature righteousness, all forms and ceremonies as a way of salvation. It is a great mercy to be turned away from them, as the shipwrecked mariner turns away from his sinking ship, and looks to the rising sun to shew him some way of escape, and thus afford him some gleam of hope.

REVELATION 21:1-3

And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea.

And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.

And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God.

OBITUARIES

JENNYE ALYCE "PEGGY" OSBORNE

Our beloved Sister Peggy Osborne of Westminster, Maryland was called from our midst on August 24, 2016. She was born on January 9, 1923 in Catonsville, Maryland to Deacon Quincy A. and Sister Alice E. Caines Gladding of the Baltimore Ebenezer Primitive Baptist Church. In addition to her parents she was preceded in death by her husband of 58 years, Brother Eugene F. Osborne Sr., and two brothers, Henry and Melvin Gladding. Left to mourn her are her daughter, Janet L. Brooks and husband Allan of Huntingdon, Pennsylvania; her son, Eugene F. Osborne, Jr. and wife Cindy; grandchildren, Gwendolyn (Sean) Culbertson, Jessica Pellam, David Pellam, Allison Osborne, Amber (Sean) Seibel; and great-grandchildren Russell and Emma Culbertson.

Her funeral service was held at Myers-Durboraw Funeral Home in Westminster after which her body was laid to rest alongside Brother Gene in Emmanuel Baust Cemetery on a high hill overlooking the countryside and little villages below of Tyrone, Maryland. Her hope was that some sweet day she would arise in the likeness of her dear Saviour and hear those precious words, "Come ye blessed of my Father and inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Sister Peggy was blessed with many natural talents. She was employed as a secretary at Western Maryland College. She enjoyed gardening, crocheting, sewing, traveling, camping, and being outdoors. She loved to sing and play the organ and to spend time with her family, especially with her grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

On February 26, 1984 Sister Peggy was received into membership of Dan River Primitive Baptist Church on confession of faith. She and Brother Gene were loving, faithful members. Despite the many miles they had to travel, they attended our meetings until health problems would no longer allow them to do so. The Lord so richly blessed our dear Sister with the unfeigned love of the brethren. There was always a beautiful, loving smile on her face and a warm embrace for those of like precious faith. Her presence in our congregation has been and will forever be missed. She loved her God, her church, and her family with all that was within her.

May the Lord bless her family and those of us, who were so wonderfully blessed to walk with her in hope and sweet fellowship for 32 years, to feel with the hymn writer:

> "By thy hands the boon was given,
> Thou hast taken but thine own;
> Lord of earth and God of heaven,
> Evermore, thy will be done."

In all things may Christ have the preeminence and may we all be blessed to praise His great and holy name and bow in humble submission to His most holy will.

Humbly submitted by one who loved her,

Mary Hawkins

HYMN

There is a house not made with hands,
Eternal and on high;
And here my spirit waiting stands,
Till God shall bid it fly.

Shortly this prison of my clay
Must be dissolved and fall,
Then, O my soul, with joy obey
Thy heavenly Father's call.

'Tis he, by his almighty grace,
That forms thee fit for heaven,
And as an earnest of the place,
Has his own Spirit given.

We walk by faith of joys to come,
Faith lives upon his word;
But while the body is our home
We're absent from the Lord.

'Tis pleasant to believe thy grace,
But we had rather see;
We would be absent from the flesh,
And present, Lord, with thee.

Watts.

Elder Cleo D. Robertson

The Signs of the Times was established in 1832 by Elder Gilbert Beebe after the division with the missionaries. The purpose of this paper was to be "devoted to the cause of truth, and through which we could enter our solemn protest against all the innovations, new theories, and new institutions which, under the name of Baptist, had so greatly prevailed." It is "to be used as a medium for the circulation of bible doctrine and general information."

We hear from various ones around the country as to how much the "Signs" means to them. These are precious believers whom we have never met and do not know personally. Some are in nursing homes, assisted living facilities or live alone. They have no church near them nor any way to hear preaching. Receipt of the "Signs" each month is their preaching service. The Lord has provided for them.

The "Signs" is not just for a particular faction of Primitive Baptist, but is "good news to the scattered pilgrims in different parts of the land who still adhere to the doctrine and practice of the primitive church." We publish notices of various meetings from many that we do not know. Therefore, we make no recommendations. Anyone can attend these meetings and judge for themselves. John 4:1 "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world." We publish articles only if the articles are sound in doctrine and order as set forth by the apostles and expounded upon by Elder Beebe and other God-called ministers.

As the "Signs" begins a new year, we are including some writings of Elder Beebe to give you some idea and feeling of the need for this paper, the prospectus of the paper and the object of this paper. Also it is to give you some perspective of the times, conditions and challenges faced by the "Signs" and its founder.

We sincerely appreciate our subscribers and contributors. May the Lord of all grace bless you with the riches of His love and mercy.

VOICES OF THE PAST

THE NEED FOR THE PROSPECTUS, AND THE OBJECT OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES

Feeling deeply the need of a medium of correspondence, and excluded from the columns of the so called Baptist papers, after much deliberation it was concluded to attempt to make ourselves heard by our brethren scattered abroad, by publishing a paper devoted to the cause of truth, and through which we could enter our solemn protest against all the innovations, new theories and new institutions which, under the name of Baptist, had so greatly prevailed. With these objects in view, in the year 1832, we issued the following prospectus, viz:

Proposal for publishing a semi-monthly paper, to be called the "Signs of the Times," devoted exclusively to the Baptist cause, maintaining inviolably the following scriptural sentiments:

1. The Existence, Sovereignty, Immutability, Omnipotence and Eternal perfections of the Great Jehovah-- the Revelation which God has given of himself, as Father, Son and Holy Ghost. "These Three. are One." - 1 John 5:8.

2. The Absolute Predestination of all things.

3. Eternal, Unconditional Election.

4. The Total Depravity and just condemnation of fallen man.

5. That the Atonement and Redemption of Jesus Christ are for the Elect only.

6. The Sovereign, Irresistible, and in all cases, Effectual work of the Holy Spirit, in Regenerating and Quickening the Elect of God.

7. The final Preservation and Eternal Happiness of all the sons of God, by grace.

8. The Resurrection of the dead, and Eternal Judgment

9. That the Church of Christ is composed exclusively of Baptized Believers - that to her are given able ministers of the New Testament, that the Scriptures are the only divinely authorized Rule of Faith and Practice for the saints of God.

10. That there is no connection between Church and State, and as touching the proposition for a marriage between them, the Hon. R.M. Johnson, in his report on the Sabbath Question, has expressed our faith.

The "Signs of the Times" will be decidedly opposed to Bible Tract and Missionary Societies, Theological Seminaries, Sabbath Schools, &c., &c., making war with the Mother, Arminianism, and her entire brood of institutions.

Our brethren of the Old School of Christ will bear in mind that this humble sheet is devoted to the Baptist cause, as we believe the Baptist cause to be the cause of God and that its columns are designed to be used as a medium for the circulation of bible doctrine and general information.

The dear people of God who remain steadfast and unshaken in the apostles' doctrine are at this day greatly scattered through the country, and in many instances where one or more of them are found they are supposed to be the only ones remaining of the same faith and order. Indeed, they are often themselves driven to the conclusion of Elijah: "They have digged down thine altars and killed thy prophets, and I am left alone and they seek my life." In their scattered situation it affords them peculiar pleasure to hear from one another. "As cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country." Prov. Xxv. 25.

It is certainly good news to the scattered pilgrims to hear of the numbers in different parts of the land who still adhere to the doctrine and practice of the primitive church. In the days of old, "they that feared the Lord spake often to one another;" and the exhortation of the apostle is, that we "exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching."

Elder G. Beebe

PSALM 71:14.

But I will hope continually, and will yet praise thee more and more.

NEW YEAR'S GREETING 1943

The rapid passing of time has brought us once more to the beginning of another New Year, and while we would like to blot out of memory the horror, destruction, suffering and death of the past year, it will avail us nothing to close our eyes to the facts. So far as our own country is concerned, the worst is doubtless yet to come, and we might as well steel ourselves for what is ahead. To many, it must appear as though we are standing upon a great and high precipice, peering off into the unknown future, wondering what 1943 will bring forth. With unfeigned faith in our God, let us face it with indomitable courage and hope for good news before another New Year is ushered in. We are well aware of the fact that with millions of our fellow-countrymen there will be great anxiety of soul, because of loved ones who may be scattered throughout the world, we know not where, or how it will be with them, but it behooves us to stand in our lot and carry on to the best of our ability until they return; and if they never return, we shall refuge in the knowledge that they are in God's hands. There will, also, be innumerable hardships and privations for us who remain behind at our posts to endure, but we, too, must prove ourselves to be good soldiers. It is such times as these that try the hearts and test the souls of men, and it is wonderful, indeed, to those of us who have been given a good hope through grace in the mercy of God to stand still and see his salvation. That hope was given us "as an anchor of the soul, both sure and stedfast," and to be sure it enters "into that within the veil; whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made an high priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec." Heb. 6:19-20. It is the Lord of hosts who hath charted the sea of life upon which we are sailing, and he is the pilot who is at the helm and will finally bring us to the port of our desired haven of rest. The needle in the compass of faith which he has given us will ever point to him, and he that trusteth in the Lord shall never be put to shame. As much as in us is, therefore, let us trust him whatever betides. Isaiah said, "Trust ye in the Lord for ever: for in the Lord JEHOVAH is everlasting strength: for he bringeth down them that dwell on high; the lofty city, he layeth it low; he layeth it low, even to the ground; he bringeth it even to the dust." Isa. 26:4-5. In the words of the poet,

> The Lord has promised good to me,
> His word my hope secures;
> He will my shield and portion be
> As long as life endures.

"The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is longsuffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." 2 Peter 3:9. If the culmination of what is transpiring throughout the world today will be to bring all the nations of the earth down upon their knees, before their God and Creator, it will be well worth the price they are paying. So far as the Lord's people are concerned, we have the assurance in his blessed word that he will not suffer them to be tempted above that they are able to bear, but that he will with the temptation also make a way of escape, that they may be able to bear it.

With regard to the world, notwithstanding the terrible condition in which it finds itself today, we can but believe that we already see arising out of the wreck and ruin of much of the best that science and art has given us in the past — a great deal of which can never be replaced — a better and brighter world for those who shall follow us to live in. In the days of Noah the world that then was had waxed wicked and needed to be destroyed; even so, our world, before this war, had grown corrupt and much of mankind was full of haughty pride, its heart and soul being fixed upon the things which perish with the using. Greed for wealth and lust for power were things which were craved above all else by ambitious and designing men, and nothing stood in the way of those who sought it. Men and nations lost their prospective of the better things even of this life, such as honor, justice, liberty and freedom. They were steam-rollering, so to speak, and crushing to earth much of that which makes this life worth while. There is a certain law of life which works inexorably and sooner or later the sins of individuals or peoples will find them out, and whatsoever they sow they are sure to reap. The harvest only proves what was sown, and after the harvest there is a winnowing to separate the chaff from the wheat; the chaff, or that which is useless and vile must be burned with unquenchable fire, while the wheat or that which is of real value will be preserved in the storehouse. As we view it, out of this awful carnage and conflagration, there will come forth much that will be for the advancement and betterment of the human race. Unquestionably a new era is ahead, and war, terrible as it is, is only hastening its coming. Necessity, which is said to be the mother of invention, has laid much upon us, and we have already begun to get a glimpse of some of the miraculous things which are being brought forth. Sciences of all kinds are being greatly advanced; the inventive genius of men's minds is being worked overtime, and the miracle of production is abroad in our land; and in the crucible with our world Allies we shall come to know and understand them better. These things will undoubtedly bear fruit for the good of mankind, and if along with them a World Charter can be produced which will give to all nations alike, freedom of speech, freedom of worship, freedom from want and freedom from fear, great progress will have been made. These things are more precious than life itself to the human race.

While we have been writing above after the manner of men and concerning the things of this world, with which we can but be vitally interested in to some extent, we would not have our readers get the impression that we believe the millennium age is upon us, or that we are facing a Eutopian period. Humanity is corrupt at best and will ever remain so, but it has its depths and its heights and will continue to rise and fall until time shall be no more. There will be wars and rumors of wars till the end shall come, but we have the feeling that after this storm is over there will be a long lull and that during the cessational period that will follow the hell of war, the human race will enjoy as it has never before enjoyed the things which pertain to this life. We would be gloomy, indeed, if we thought all of that through which the world is passing would be for naught. We only hope that it may be the will of our God to grant wisdom to those in authority to see the errors of the past and cause them to build more solidly and securely for the future, and lay a foundation for a more lasting and enduring peace. Unless we misread the handwriting on the wall, after the great conflict is over, there is going to be far more toleration, sympathy and consideration shown to all classes of people, and especially towards the lower or less fortunate groups, than the world has hitherto witnessed.

Having devoted considerable space to the things of time, we will now turn again to the things which shall survive all time, to the things which are eternal. There is no such thing as time with God. All things are present with him. With us here there is time, but it is comparatively such a fleeting moment as to call forth from the noted apostle the following declaration: "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." 2 Cor. 4:17-

18. When Jesus came into the world to suffer ignomy and shame, he was looking beyond the things which were seen. We are told that it was "for the joy that was set before him" that he "endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God." Heb. 12:2. The joy that was set before him was that through his sufferings, death and resurrection, his bride, the church, would be joined together in everlasting wedlock throughout all eternity. He verily saw of the travail of his soul and was satisfied, and it is by his knowledge that he justified many, for he bore their iniquities. It is because of this that Paul admonishes us to "lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith." "The race that is set before us," and which we cannot alter or change in any way whatsoever, is one that will bring us into contact with many and varied conflicts and obstacles, but with patience, which means endurance, we must run it, and how wonderful it is that we have that faith by which we look to Jesus. The true church in all ages of the world has looked to Jesus. Every sacrifice and offering, made by faith during the legal dispensation was a look to Jesus, to the Lamb of God that would take away the sin of the world of the elect. He was that King whom Isaiah said would "reign in righteousness;" he was that man who was to be, "an hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." Isa. 32:1-2. In the forty-sixth Psalm we read, "God is our refuge and, strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the, waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof. Selah." What wonderful assurance is given us here! In the Scriptures the sea is often used to signify the people, while the mountains and hills signify the high places, or the rulers of the earth. It would seem as though some of the literal significance of the foregoing Psalm is being unfolded before our very eyes, for kings, emperors and those who rule the kingdoms of the world are being overthrown and their kingdoms swept away; their governments will go back to the people, and out of them will arise others to rule over them. Seeing, as we believe we do, the hand of God in it all, we shall not fear, but will wait and stay upon our God, who we are persuaded will work all things after the counsel of his own will.

In the Psalm referred to, the writer says, "Come, behold the works of the Lord, what desolations he hath made in the earth. He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth; he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder; he burneth the chariot in the fire. Be still, and know that I am God: I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth." We must first see what desolations are wrought in the earth before we stand still and know that he is God; then it is we are taught that he is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble.

Brethren and friends, in this year one thousand nine hundred and forty-three of our Lord, let us not faint or be discouraged, but rather let us take courage in the Lord; let us believe and plead his Holy Word, being assured that none shall seek his face in vain. If we know him in whom we have believed, we are persuaded that he is able to keep that which we have committed unto him against that day, and let us hold fast the form of sound words, which we have heard of him, in faith and love which is in Jesus Christ. While the SIGNS OF THE TIMES enters upon the twelfth decade its career in the midst of perilous times, our sincere desire and prayer to God is that above the din of battle shall be heard the triumphant shout in every soul, "Alleluia: for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth."

INTRODUCTORY PREFACE.

From the early settlement of our country by the Puritans in New England, and the Church of England in the Southern colonies, whose religious supremacy was established by law in their several localities, the Baptists, and indeed all other dissenting orders, suffered great opposition by proscription and oppression from the dominant parties. The Baptists, perhaps, more than any other, were violently treated, and suffered the most cruel persecution. Disfranchisement as citizens, fines; confiscation of property, incarceration in prisons, and banishment for nonconformity, to which was added corporal punishments, public whippings at the stocks, cropping of ears, boring their tongues through with hot irons, tying their heads and feet together, and torturing them in the most barbarous manner for days and nights, and in many cases they were put to death for their persistent and inflexible adherence to the faith and order of the gospel by which they were distinguished from all other orders. In those days of trial there were no worldly inducements offered to attract the worldly-minded to connect themselves with our churches, and there was harmony of sentiment and uniformity of practice among the Baptist churches throughout the whole breadth of our country.

It is true that in those trying times, the general principles of the doctrine of the gospel were not so clearly and fully preached and understood as at earlier and later periods in the history of Apostolic Baptists. As the bible doctrine and order of baptism held by them was the most objectionable to their adversaries, there were constantly called to defend the truth in relation to that ordinance against the assaults of their opponents. And when the violence of persecution began to abate, and by the interposition of the British Crown, and subsequently by the prevalence of more liberal views which were entertained by the patriots the Revolution, the powers of the Puritans in the East, and of the Episcopalians in the South were so far curtailed as to prevent farther corporal Severities; still for many years after the establishment of our federal and state governments, the Puritans of the New England States were patronized by their state legislatures, and allowed to collect their parish taxes from all within their parish limits. Afterwards dissenters, by procuring certificates from religious denominations to which they belonged, certifying that they were paying to their own respective orders, were released from the burden of the parish taxes, and finally the whole legal distinction in favor of the Puritans was abolished. Under all the trials and persecutions thus far experienced, the Baptists were a humble, meek, loving and harmoniously-united people throughout our country. But as soon as this oppressive yoke was broken, Satan was ready with other elements of discord to bring trouble and divisions into our churches.

No sooner were the Baptists of America relieved from the galling yoke of Puritanic and Episcopalian priestcraft than the doctrines of Andrew Fuller were introduced, with the professed design to raise up the Baptists from the dung-hill, to rank respectably with other religious denominations. All who were inclined to the doctrine of Arminianism, with many others who had been led but sparingly into an understanding of the cardinal doctrine of salvation alone by grace, were ready to embrace the plausible and deceptive views of Fuller, and became at once ambitious for the promised elevation.

At this period, which is still fresh in the recollection of the editor of the "Signs of the Times," there was not know among the Baptists of America a single organized institution in connection with, or under the patronage of the Baptists. Theological seminaries, on a very small scale, then began to be talked of, and a small school of this kind was started in Philadelphia, under the direction of Dr. Staughton, to give some grammar lessons to a few of our illiterate young preachers, and soon a college was founded in Washington City, and another educational and theological institution at Hamilton, N. Y., and similar schools began to spring up in various directions. Simultaneously with these, missionary enterprises were set on foot, both domestic and foreign, and Sabbath-schools and Sabbath-school unions, in which various anti-christian denominations were recognized as hand and glove with Baptists in building up these unscriptural nurseries for the church, as they were modestly called. Then followed Bible Societies, to give a semblance of piety to the whole system of religious machinery, followed in turn by Tract Societies, Temperence Societies, Mite Societies, Magdaline Societies, Dorcas Societies, and a host of other equally unscriptural institutions under the name of Benevolence and Religion, until, to bring up the rear, the Abolition Society, which had for a time been struggling into life and power under the patronage of a few New England fanatics, was with due ceremony let in and adopted as a pet institution.

While these innovations were being made upon the faith and order of the Baptists, true enough, the Baptists began to rise, according to the prediction of Andrew Fuller, and soon came to be regarded as unsound and as respectable as any other of the worldly churches of this degenerate age. The Baptists were now no longer obliged to pray the Lord of the harvest to furnish preachers; they could supply themselves with a more refined and educated class from their own schools. Converts could now be made to order, and the churches supplied with members from their nurseries and other institutions. Their machinery was now so complete that grace was no longer needed to make their members orderly; for they were supplied with societies to keep them sober and benevolent; and if perchance many of them should lose their piety, their machinery was so ingeniously geared that they could be run through again, and re-converted and re-constructed as often as might be thought advisable.

It was during the prevalence of these abominations that the "Signs of the Times" was commenced. The new order of Baptists had many religious newspapers in the field, which without an exception advocated the institutions named in the foregoing, and the general impression was entertained that there were no churches or preachers left that had not enlisted in this new enterprise for worldly popularity and respectability. A few were found here and there, isolated and despised, who sighed and groaned on account of the prevailing abominations. Yet few as we were, and far between, we were denounced violently as illiberal, inert, slothful, behind the spirit of a progressive age, and enemies to the spread of the gospel, and opposed to all that is good.

Feeling deeply the need of a medium of correspondence, and excluded from the columns of the so-called Baptist papers, after much deliberation it was concluded to attempt to make ourselves heard by our brethren scattered abroad, by publishing a paper devoted to the cause of truth, and through which we could enter our solemn protest against all the innovations, new theories and new institutions which, under the name of Baptists, had so greatly prevailed. With these objects in view, in the year 1832, we issued the following prospectus, viz:

Proposals for publishing a semimonth) paper, to be called the "Signs of the Times," devoted exclusively to the Baptist cause, maintaining inviolably the following scriptural sentiments:

1. The Existence, Sovereignty, Immutability, Omnipotence and Eternal Perfections of the Great Jehovah — the Revelation which God has given of himself, as Father, Son and Holy Ghost. These Three are One."-1 John v. 8.

2. The Absolute Predestination of all things.

3. Eternal, unconditional Election.

4. The Total Depravity and just condenmation of fallen man.

5. That the Atonement and Redemption of Jesus Christ are for the Elect only.

6. The Sovereign, Irresistible, and in all cases, Effectual work of the Holy Spirit, in Regenerating and Quickening; the Elect of God.

7. The Final Preservation and Eternal Happiness of all the sons of God, by Grace.

8. The Resurrection of the dead, and Eternal Judgment.

9. That the Church of Christ is composed exclusively of Baptized Believers — that to her are given able ministers of the New Testament; that the Scriptures are the only divinely authorized Rule of Faith and Practice for the saints of God.

10. That there is no connection between Church and State, and as touching the proposition for a marriage between them, the Hon. R. M. Johnson, in his Report on the Sabbath Question, has expressed our faith.

The "Signs of the Times" will be decidedly opposed to Bible, Tract and Missionary Societies, Theological Seminaries, Sabbath Schools, &c., &c., making war with the Mother, Arminianism, and her entire brood of Institutions.

The violent opposition manifested by the New Order of Baptists, when our Prospectus appeared, was overruled to our advantage. Immediately on its appearing, the batteries of our components were opened against us, through both the pulpit and the press. The papers of the New School sounded the alarm and warned the people to beware of the forthcoming paper; and in the Minutes of many Associations the churches were warned to withhold their support and countenance from us. In the ardor of their zeal portions of our Prospectus were copied to show that we were hostile to their newly-invented institutions; and by this means, instead of retarding, as they designed, their efforts were of great service in letting those who were imprisoned among them know that such a paper was about to be published. The response to our Prospectus from all directions was liberal, so that we were able to proceed with our work. Thirty-five years have since elapsed, and thirty-five volumes of our paper have been published, and still the publication is sustained, and we are now enabled to greatly enlarge and improve it.

The publisher of the "Signs of the Times" has been, from time to time, charged with vacillation, changing his views, or departing from the principles formerly held. Let the readers compare the articles here re-published with the platform laid in the Prospectus, and judge for themselves, if there has been any departure from the principles first announced.

One important object in the compilation of this book is to present, in as condensed a form as may be, the most important Editorial articles which have been published from the commencement, in 1832, whereby to show what has been sustained by the entire Old

School or Primitive order of Baptists for so many years, and incidentally to embody such historical reminiscences as may be useful, not only to the present, but to succeeding generations. Many of the articles which we shall reproduce will necessarily allude to what the Old School Baptists have held, the manner in which they have asserted and defended their faith, and what they have encountered of reproach and persecution, and the divine support by which they have been sustained.

It is not claimed that all the supporters of the "Signs of the Times" are pledged to endorse all the articles which have been published, and are herein republished, for such is not the fact. Some of the articles may set forth the peculiar views of but a minority of the Baptists of our faith and order, and for whatever of error any of them contain, only the Editor is responsible. But inasmuch as the "Signs of the Times" was the first periodical paper devoted to the Old School or Primitive Baptist cause, and the only one of some twenty periodicals which have subsequently been started that has been sustained by the Baptists of our order, it must be inferred that it has faithfully reflected the general sentiments of that people, to the support of whose cause it has been humbly devoted.

We do not propose a reproduction of all that has appeared under the Editorial head of the "Signs of the Times," for there are many items of a local interest, bearing on what has long ceased to be of general interest. And some articles on the same subjects, which would appear tautologous and uncalled for. Still it is our intention, so far as possible, to condense, in such cases, the substance of the several articles on the same subject, so as to preserve all that is deemed of sufficient importance to be preserved.

GILBERT BEEBE

DOCTRINE TO WHICH WE ARE PLEDGED IN OUR PROSPECTUS,

NEW VERNON, N.Y., January 2, 1833.

In our prospectus we are pledged to maintain inviolably the several scriptural sentiments embraced in the respective items which were named. We intend to notice them severally in the order in which they were presented.

The first that comes under consideration is "the Existence, Sovereignty, Immutability, Omnipotence and Eternal Perfection of the Great Jehovah — the revelation which God has given of himself as Father, Son and Holy Ghost." "These three are one."-1 John v. 8.

That God exists, we need no further demonstration than what is presented to our view in creation and in providence. In the former "the heavens declare his glory, and the firmament showeth forth his handy work." In the latter, "Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge."

The well established laws of summer and winter, of seed time and harvest, the waxing and waning of the moon, the revolutions of the earth and the planets, all proclaim the existence of the Great First Cause of all causes — a supernatural power; and we are taught by divine revelation that that first cause, that supernatural power, is God. But as the existence of God is seldom denied, we will pass on, and with the most profound reverence consider some of his perfections.

God is a Sovereign.

By the term sovereign, as it applies to God, we are not to understand an arbitrary or tyrannical being, but quite the reverse; an all-wise disposer of all events, an independent, self-existent, and omniscient God; one who holds the eternal destiny of his creatures in his own almighty grasp, working all things after the counsel of his own will, even as he has ordained all things for his own glory; and being independent of and superior to all beings in heaven or on earth, has an incontestable right to do his pleasure in heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth; having a right to make one vessel to honor and another to dishonor; to have mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will to harden; to reveal his gospel unto "babes and sucklings," and to hide the same from the "wise and prudent;" to love Jacob and to hate Esau, to save his people with an everlasting salvation, and to turn the wicked into hell, with all the nations that forget God.

In view of the sublime doctrine of the divine sovereignty, the inspired writer inquires, "Who hath directed the Spirit of the Lord, or, being his counsellor, hath taught him? With whom took he counsel, and who instructed him, and taught him in the path of judgment, and taught him knowledge, and showed unto him the way of understanding? Isaiah xl. 13, 14. The full display of this attribute of the deity would require a development of all his perfections, but particularly that of his independence and omnipotence, of which we shall have something to say hereafter. But first we will consider his right to dispose of all events according to the pleasure of his own will. And who is prepared to dispute this right? "Shall the thing formed say unto him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus?"

"Woe unto him that striveth with his Maker! Let the potsherds strive with the potsherds of the earth. Shall the clay say unto him that fashioneth it, What maketh thou? or thy work, He hath no hands? Woe unto him that saith unto his father, What begettest thou? or to the woman, What hast thou brought forth?" — Isa. xlv. 9, 10. If then we admit that it was God's sovereign right to create a world, we must acknowledge that it was his right to determine what kind of a world to create, and for what end it should be created, or else we must conclude that he was not absolutely independent; and to form such a conclusion would certainly be a great derogation from his divine perfections. If while we gaze with admiration and delight upon the beauties of creation, we should believe that God was bound by some law or power independent of and superior to himself, to create all things in the exact order in which they are and were created, we could no longer enjoy the delightful reflection that our God is the Most High. We must therefore conclude that it is his sovereign and eternal right to do his pleasure in heaven and on earth, or we must say with the fool, "There is no God." But the more resplendent is the manifestation of the righteousness of God, when we contemplate him in connection with his independence. "He is before all things, and by him all things consist." Thus, for instance, in imagination, strike from the scale of existence every created object, and what would remain? Nothing but God alone, and inasmuch as he existed before all things, he must have existed independently of all things, and we must deny his immutability, or admit that he continues to be the same independent God now that he was before the highest parts of the habitable world were made. He is self-existent and self-sufficient. He speaks the word and it stands fast, he commands and it is done.

The extent of God's sovereignty is commensurate with his infinity. It is displayed in all his works of creation, providence and grace. In creation serpents as well as doves were made — some men and some angels — all were not made alike, nor for the same end. In providence, we see the beggar raised from the dung-hill to the throne, and the proud monarch hurled from his royal seat down to the most abject state of wretchedness and misery. To some men God has given riches, and to others poverty, to one sickness, and to another health. "There were many widows in Israel in the days of Elijah," in the time of severe famine, &c. "But unto none of them was Elijah sent, save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow."

To make known to the king of Babylon this divine sovereignty, the Lord drove him from his palace and from the society of men, to range with the beasts of the field till seven times were passed over, until in providence he should learn that the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth, and as a sovereign giveth the kingdoms of this world unto whomsoever he pleaseth. The display of divine sovereignty in the kingdom of grace is most striking. The election of his people in Christ Jesus before the world began, unmoved by any regard to their virtues or good works. — "Who hath saved us and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began."-2 Tim. ii. 9. And in further testimony of God's sovereignty, we hear an inspired apostle say, "Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded." "Unto you therefore which believe he is precious; but unto them which be disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner, and a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient; where unto also they were appointed."-1 Peter ii. 7, 8. "Thou wilt say then unto me, Why doth he yet find fault? for who hath resisted his will? Nay, but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honour and another unto dishonour?"

God is immutable.

"For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore, ye sons of Jacob are not consumed." - Mal. iii. 6. "But he is in one mind, and who can turn him? and what his soul desireth, even that he doeth."- Job xxiii. 13. "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to day, and for ever." - Heb. xiii. 8. "The Father of Lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." - James i. 17. Further testimony to establish the doctrine of God's immutability seems to be quite unnecessary; were we for a moment to suppose God to be a mutable being, like unto ourselves, we might then say with the fool, "There is no God." In giving up the immutability of God we would give up all; for if it could be proved that God ever changed it would prove the forfeiture of his truth. He says, "I change not;" and could his truth fail, his holiness could not remain unimpaired, his wisdom would stand impeached, and his glory forever be eclipsed. Again, if God has changed, or ever should change, that change must be either for the better or for the worse; if for the better, he was once imperfect, and if for the worse, he is now imperfect. The awful absurdity and blasphemy of the doctrine is enough to make one tremble.

God is Omnipotent.

By the Omnipotence of Jehovah we understand that universal and almighty power which is essential to his being as God, and that this power is an attribute peculiar to himself. This divine perfection of the Godhead was manifested in the creation of the world. He said, "Let there be light," and there was light; And also in providence, as exemplified in the entire history of the children of Israel, in their elevation above all other nations under heaven, in their redemption from Egyptian captivity, in their passage through the Red Sea, in the miraculous manner in which they were fed with manna, and supplied with water, and in the signal victories given them over their enemies. Nor is the manifestation of omni potent power confined to any particular event, or train of events. It shone in dreadful majesty from Sinai's flaming top, nor with less grandeur from Mount Calvary, when the meridian sun was dressed in sackcloth, the rocks were rent, the dead were raised, the vail of the temple was rent asunder, and the most holy place exposed to view, while frighted nature, as with a voice of mighty thunder, proclaimed the doctrine of God's omnipotence. If a further illustration or demonstration of the almighty power of God were necessary, we might advert to the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ from the dead, when "God went up with a shout, the Lord with the sound of a trumpet."

In the economy of salvation, too, God has made ample display of his omnipotence. The fulfillment of the holy law, the perfect satisfaction rendered to divine justice, the opening of the prison doors to them that were bound, and the emancipation of the prisoners, the conquest of our beloved Lord over death, hell and sin, the destruction of death, and him that had the power of death, which is the devil, the regeneration and quickening of his elect, together with their preservation in grace unto eternal glory, the resurrection of their bodies in the likeness of his own glorious body, and the consummation of their everlasting happiness in the world to come. The man must surely be a stranger in Israel who can not trace the power and Godhead throughout the whole work of salvation, from the foundation to the top stone.

The perfections of God are eternal.

It cannot reasonably be expected of finite beings that they should be able to comprehend the eternity or infinity of God. For it is written, "I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent. Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?" We are therefore able only to contemplate the divine perfections of Jehovah, as far as they are revealed to us by his word and Spirit, and if through the abundant revelation made we could vie with the brightest prophets and inspired men of God in our conceptions of the Holy One, or with the tongues of men or angels, could set forth our views of God, we would be with them constrained to say, "Lo, these are parts of his ways; but how little a portion is heard of him; but the thunder of his power, who can understand?" That God is a being of infinite and eternal perfection, but few in our age are bold enough, in so many words, to deny. But yet while many will admit this truth in general terms, they will deny it in all its particular bearings on the redemption and salvation of sinners. Many very zealous professors of religion will form in their own imagination a standard of right and wrong, and then say, if God should vary from their standard he would be unequal, unjust or imperfect. But we know of no higher standard of perfection than God himself, hence all that is done or decreed by him is perfect, because, it is done or decreed in accordance with his own mind and, will, and must therefore be compatable with his nature. It cannot be the prerogative of creatures of yesterday, whose breath is in their nostrils, set up a standard of human wisdom by which to scan the perfections of their Maker. If it be admitted then that God is perfect, it needs no more than the admission of his immutability to establish the doctrine of the eternity of his perfections. As far as God has been graciously pleased to reveal himself unto us, we have been constrained to pray that he would conform us to his will, and by his sovereign grace, which is treasured up in Christ Jesus our Lord, conform us to the image of him: who is the "brightness of his Father's glory, and the express image of his person."·The above brief statement of our views of the "existence, sovereignty, immutability, omnipotence and eternal perfections of the great Jehovah," &c., are sentiments which we hold dear to our heart, and such as we stand solemnly pledged to inviolably maintain in this paper. The doctrine is neither strange nor new to the Baptists of the school of Christ.

In the revelation of Father; Son, and Holy Ghost." These three are One."-1

John i. 5, 8. On this important point of doctrine our views are happily expressed in the above scripture, quoted from the apostle John, while all human language utterly fails in setting forth the mode of God's existence. We rejoice that the record which he has been pleased to give of himself in the bible contains all necessary information on the subject; at present we shall for want of room omit giving our views at large on this point; we will only say that we shall cautiously avoid all such doctrines as do either deny or refuse to acknowledge the eternal power and Godhead of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost.

"This God is the God we adore,
Our faithful, unchangeable friend;
Whose love is as great as his power,
And knows neither measure nor end."

PROSPECTUS FOR VOLUME 36.

As the thirty-fifth year of our publication is now closing upon us, it is time to announce to our readers what are our prospects and designs for another year. With humble gratitude to the Sovereign Ruler of all events, we desire to record his goodness and mercy which have followed us all our days; and especially on this occasion would we render a tribute of praise and thanksgiving for his manifold favors to us in our connection with this periodical. With fear and trembling we commenced our editorial and publishing labors just as we were entering the prime and vigor of man hood, under very many discouraging circumstances, and in the face of most violent opposition, as the first, and for many years the only paper devoted to the Old School, or Primitive Baptist cause. Since we commenced our labors just one-half of the three score years and ten which are allotted to man have passed away, and in their rapid flight they have borne away by far the greater portion of those who were our companions and contemporaries at that time. A long list of the names of those who encouraged us in the beginning are now, alas! inscribed upon their tomb stones, and their mortal remains now slumber with the silent dead; and why we are spared while so many have been called hence is only known to God; but whatever has been his purpose, we know that our unfeigned love and gratitude is due to him. But while we look around us in vain for those who were companions of our earlier days, to the praise of God be it acknowledged we are not left without true and faithful friends, and loving brethren who have never failed to show themselves in our most trying straits. Today we have a greater number of able and devoted brethren and sisters, scattered throughout all the states and territories of our wide spread country, ready to contribute able communications to fill up and enrich our columns, than we have ever before had at any one time. The violent opposition we have encountered from time to time from avowed enemies, and still more annoying from professed friends, has been more than balanced by the true friendship, fellowship and cooperation of thousands, the faces of many of whom we have never seen in the flesh.

The circulation of our paper was seriously restricted, and its continuance imperiled by the late dreadful scenes of carnage in which our country has been involved, but for the last two years the way has been opened for a circulation in the Southern States, and we are now constantly receiving accessions to our subscription list from all quarters.

In view of our increasing circulation, and the increasing demands for enlarged facilities for a general correspondence, extending to all parts of our country and the Canadas, we propose to add four pages to each number of the "Signs" for the next year, beginning with the first day of January next. The paper to be the same form and size as at present, each number to contain twelve instead of eight pages; without any addition to the subscription price, and the postage, being by weight, will be no more than now. Not more than one page will be occupied with standing advertisements.

This new arrangement will add 50 percent to the amount of printed matter, and afford space for many valuable communications which have heretofore been excluded for want of room. And we flatter ourselves that our additional expense will be met by our increased subscription. As it will involve an expense to us of a large amount, may we not hope our brethren and all who are friends to the paper will use their influence to procure new subscribers, and forward their orders and remittances with out delay.

Should our circulation during the year 1868 reach ten thousand, we will, if spared, at the commencement of 1869, issue the "Signs of the Times" weekly.

ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO

One hundred years ago there was not a single white man in Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, or Illinois territories. Then what is now the most flourishing part of America was as little known as the country around the mountains of the Moon. It was not until 1769 that the hunter of Kentucky, the gallant and adventurous Boone, left his home in North Carolina to become the first settler of Kentucky. The first pioneer of Ohio did not settle until twenty years after that time.

An hundred years ago Canada belonged to France, and the whole population of the United States did not exceed a million and a half people.

An hundred years ago the great Frederick of Prussia was performing those great exploits which have made him immortal in military annals, and with his little monarchy was sustaining a single handed contest with Russia, Austria, and France, the three great powers of Europe combined.

An hundred years ago the United States were the most loyal of the British Empire, and on the political horizon no speck indicated the struggles which in a score of years thereafter established the great Republic of the world.

An hundred years ago there were but four newspapers in America — with a combined circulation not exceeding three thousand; steam engines or cylinder presses had not been imagined, and railroads and telegraphs had not entered into the remotest conceptions of man. When we come to look back at it thru the vista of history, we find that to the century which has passed has been allotted more important events in their bearing upon the happiness of the world than almost any other era that has happened since the creation. A hundred years hence — who can foretell our developments.

THE CLOSE OF THE YEAR, 1861

This number of the Signs of the Times completes our twenty ninth volume, and the incessant labor of its present and only publisher, proprietor and editor, for the last twenty-nine years. During our connection with this publication, according to the course of nature, one generation has passed away, and very many of our present patrons were unborn when our labors commenced. Yet there are a few upon our list of subscribers who have sustained us from the beginning; but thousands of those who witnessed our commencement have finished their course, and left these mortal shores to return to earth no more. We who survive have great reason to acknowledge, with humble gratitude, the goodness and mercy of God in sustaining us unto the present time. Because He changes not, we are not consumed. Surely His mercy endureth forever, and it has followed us all our days.

Should we recount all the trials, perplexities, conflicts and discouraging circumstances through which the Lord has brought us, the record would fill a volume; and we must say with David, "They are more than we can number." O, that we could render suitable acknowledgements and thanksgiving to the Lord! The year now closing has been the most prolific in startling events of any which we have witnessed. Although the season has been crowned with abundant crops to reward the labors of the husbandman, and to furnish subsistence in abundance for both man and beast, and in many other respects God has showered temporal blessings upon us with a profuse hand, yet we are overshadowed with an appalling cloud, which throws a gloom over every family and household in our country. The seeds of dissension which have been sowed broadcast over our beloved country for many years have ripened into a civil conflict of fearful dimensions. The ties of fraternity which were cemented with the patriotic blood of our revolutionary fathers, and which have formerly bound the citizens of our widespread country in a consolidated commonwealth, surpassing all other nations in prosperity, peace, and independence, have failed to secure us from strife and internecine war. The causes which have led to this lamentable state of discord and bloodshed, it may not be proper for us to discuss. But as we feel the scourge may we not, in the language of the scriptures, enquire, "Is there evil in the city (or country) and the Lord hath not done it?" We must acknowledge that God holds the destiny of nations, as He holds the destiny of men, in His own hands, and if favored with peace and prosperity, all admit that we are bound to give thanks to God, as the giver of every good and perfect gift. And if it be His sovereign pleasure to withhold those inestimable blessings and to send His awful judgments abroad, it becomes us equally to acknowledge His hand and humbly bow before Him, confessing our sins which have provoked His wrath. "Shall we receive good from His hand, and not evil?" was the inquiry of Job in his deep afflictions. God is certainly just and righteous in all His ways; and it becomes us to "Be still and know that He is God!" And while we feel His rod we shall confess our sins and repent in dust and ashes. The consequence of the present war has thus far fallen very heavily upon the Old School Baptists, and especially soon our publication. As a church the Old School Baptists, who have had no hand in producing the existing animosity which now threatens the perpetuity of our civil institutions, are, for the present, deprived of the social intercourse which has formerly been so pleasant and profitable to us; and the interchange of epistolary correspondence, through our paper, is, to a large extent, cut off by the conflict in which sister States are involved. Under these circumstances the question, Shall the publication of the Signs of the Times be allowed to stop? has assumed a grave importance. To continue its publication on the part of such of its friends as are still able to reach forth a helping hand. At least one half of its former patrons must be, for the present, and during the suspension of the mails and the continuance of the war, dropped from our list and our circulation restricted to those States where the mails are still conveyed. Many of those in our Northam States where mailing facilities are still continued, by prostration of their business and other causes incidental to the war, are compelled to retrench their expenses to bring them within their limited means; and some have already ordered a discontinuance of their subscriptions because of the hardness of the times. But while we all admit that common prudence requires retrenchment of our expenses, would it not be well for us carefully to consider whether we can afford to dispense with the Signs of the Times as a medium for christian correspondence, and thereby of its spiritual consolation? The comparatively trifling expense of one dollar a year would make but little difference, while, perhaps, there are many other places where a retrenchment of the same amount would not deprive us of any religious privilege. Many of our subscribers have assured us they would sooner dispense with one meal a day, or any other strictly worldly comfort, than the privilege of hearing from the scattered flock of the Redeemer, through the periodical visits of the Signs of the Times.

Never since we began the publication has its circulation been needed more than at the present time. While all around us seems tempetuous and stormy; when many other sources of comfort are cut off, do we not need still more the comforting, edifying and cheering communications of those whom we dearly love in the Lord?

Brethren, friends, and patrons of the Signs of the Times, let us hear from you, and those who feel resolved to renew their subscription, please make an effort to procure other names, and send in clubs, if possible. Remember that five dollars sent in advance will pay for six copies for one year.

As we are cut off from all correspondence with the publisher of the Southern Baptist Messenger, remittance for that paper should no longer be sent to us. For the present we receive payments for no other publication but the Signs of the Times.

THE NEW YEAR, AND THE NEW VOLUME

The wheels of nature with untiring motion have brought us to the beginning of a New Year, and we again greet our readers with the customary compliments of the season, and wish them all a Happy New Year. Truly if our happiness consisted only in worldly pleasure and temporal prosperity, our prospects for a happy new year would be dark and gloomy. Our skies are shadowed with a lowering cloud portentous of continued strife and bitter discord among those who have been wont to regard each other as friends and fellow-citizens of one great sisterhood of confederated States. But alas! how changed is the picture from what was presented in former years of our national history. What is to be the result, or when the bloody strife shall cease, the wisest of our statesmen cannot predict with any degree of certainty. He alone who holds the destiny of all things in his own hands can know when, if ever, peace shall again spread her balmy wings over our once happy but now greatly agitated country. But while the booming of cannon, the clashing of swords, resound with battles of the warrior, and much of the best blood of our citizens is flowing, towns and cities are being laid waste, and men are engaged in the fearful conflict; christians may still find peace and happiness in that kingdom which is not of this world. Whatever tumults may distract the earth, the Zion of our God shall forever remain a peaceable abode for all the sons of peace. Upon her towering walls of salvation waves the banner of love and the Prince of Peace presides in power and majesty over all her favored inhabitants. Blessed truly are they whose privilege it is to enter in through her gates, and who have a right to the tree of life. The saints who desire a happy new year are forbidden to look for happiness on earth. In the world they shall have tribulation, but in Jesus they shall have peace. Let them heed the admonition of the apostle and set not their affections on the things of this world, but things which are above where Christ sitteth on the right hand of the majesty on high. And let us all remember that they only are truly happy who love God, and are reconciled to his government. But the way of the transgressor is hard.

As we are entering upon the new year it becomes us to review the way in which the Lord our God has brought us. His mercies endure forever, and therefore we are not consumed. How it becomes us to prostrate ourselves at his feet with thanksgiving and praise for his loving kindness and tender mercy already bestowed on us, and to implore his grace to incline our hearts to love and serve him, and to enable us to walk worthy of our high and holy vocation. Holiness becomes his house forever, and without holiness no man shall see the Lord.

It is reasonable to suppose that our readers will expect to hear from us in regard to our prospects, position, and arrangements for the new Volume. One year ago we began the preceding Volume with a circulation of between six and seven thousand subscribers, extending throughout almost every State and Territory of the United States, and some in the Canadas. This Volume is commenced with less than one half of that number. The principal cause of this reduction, as our readers are aware, is the discontinuance of mailing facilities into the seceded States where the Baptists of our order are far more numerous than they are in the Northern States. But we have not only suffered the loss of our Southern subscribers in consequence of the Civil War, but confusion and derangement of business in the Northern States have circumscribed the ability of very many of our old patrons, so that they have withdrawn their support from us. We are not, however, discouraged. Believing as we do that the Lord has directed our publication for the edification and comfort of his scattered people, and hitherto has afforded us his sustaining power and grace, with humble reliance on him for a continuance of his support, we are resolved to continue our labors as long as we can enjoy the sensible evidence of his divine approval. And we confidently hope and believe he will incline our brethren and friends to render all the encouragement and aid in their power. There probably never was a time when the scattered flock of Jesus needed a medium of correspondence like this more than at the present time. They have much to discourage, dishearten and perplex them, and as cold water is to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country. It becomes them to speak the word of encouragement, of love, and fellowship to each other, and through our columns they may at once address, in the same epistle, thousands of their kindred in Christ Jesus. How long we may be favored with the privilege of this kind of correspondence, we do not know, but while we are so favored, let us not fail to appreciate it.

Our position is too well known to those who have long had the opportunity of reading our paper to require any new pledge from us. But as God shall afford us strength with the best ability we have, so long as we live, we shall publish what we honestly believe to be sustained by the scriptures of divine truth, though men or devils may oppose. We shall carefully avoid meddling with politics; but at the same time give our views unreservedly on every subject contained in the Bible, and only ask all who read our views to compare them faithfully with the word, and to accredit them no farther than they shall find them sustained by what God has said.

As to our arrangements for the present Volume, we shall have our printing this year under our own supervision, and devote our personal attention to every department of the publication. We have already expended over two thousand dollars in making improvements in our office, and we flatter our self that the present Volume — though it may not reimburse our expenses — shall excel all the preceding Volumes. Our correspondence, though greatly curtailed by the loss, for the present at least, of our Southern writers, will be sufficient to make the reading matter interesting and profitable. No pains or reasonable expenses shall be spared to make this volume what it should be.

Our connection with the Southern Baptist Messenger is for the present suspended; as we have no means of corresponding with our son, the publisher of that journal, his residence and address being Covington, Newton County, Georgia.

The publication of the Banner of Liberty also being for the present suspended, we have no clubbing arrangements with any other paper. Our agents will only send orders for the Signs of the Times, at least until further notice.

Our terms will be as formerly, viz: One dollar and fifty cents per year for a single subscriber; but if paid in advance, but one dollar per year. Five dollars sent at one time in advance will secure six copies for one year.

United States Treasury notes will be received in payment, or current notes on any New York Banks, or on banks of and in the States east of New York, or on banks of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Kentucky, Ohio, or Indiana, or Canada — or if gold can be procured, it will suit us still better. For all odd amounts of less than one dollar, U.S. Postage stamps will be received at par.

All monies sent us by mail, if carefully put up and properly mailed to us, will be at our risk. All orders, remittances and other communications for the Signs must be addressed to Elder Gilbert Beebe, Middletown, Orange Co., N.Y.

ROMANS 8:28-30.

And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.

For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren.

Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified.

Our subscribers have a right to expect from us an apology for the long but unavoidable delay of our paper; but we assure them that it has been kept back by circumstances beyond our control. We have had many difficulties to encounter, and much opposition to surmount; but truly we can say, Hitherto hath the Lord helped us; for the very opposition of our foes has been overruled for our good. We are encouraged to venture on with the utmost confidence, firmly believing that the cause for which this paper is designed to contend, is the cause of God and truth. The violent opposition raised against it, and against those who took an interest in its publication, even while it remained in embryo, is but too plain an indication of the importance and necessity of its going on. Our correspondence with distant brethren of the Old School, assures us that it will be sustained, notwithstanding the gratuitous attacks made upon us by the N. Y. Baptist Repository and the Philadelphia Chrisian Index. Our object is to diffuse light and truth, and to oppose whatever exalteth itself above all that is called God. If we succeed, none have reason to fear but the children of darkness and falsehood; they may expect to be exposed to the broad glare of the truth; "but he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God." "Every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved."

PROVERBS 3:1-8.

My son, forget not my law; but let thine heart keep my commandments:

For length of days, and long life, and peace, shall they add to thee.

Let not mercy and truth forsake thee: bind them about thy neck; write them upon the table of thine heart:

So shalt thou find favour and good understanding in the sight of God and man.

Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding.

In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths.

Be not wise in thine own eyes: fear the Lord, and depart from evil.

It shall be health to thy navel, and marrow to thy bones.

HYMN

FROM every stormy wind that blows,
From every swelling tide of woes,
There is a calm, a sure retreat;
'Tis found beneath the mercy-seat.

There is a place where Jesus sheds
The oil of gladness on our heads,—
A place of all on earth most sweet;
It is the gracious mercy-seat.

There is a place where spirits blend,
Where friend holds fellowship with friend;
Though sundered far, by faith they meet round one common mercy-seat.

Ah! whither could I flee for aid
When tempted, desolate, dismayed?
Or how the hosts of hell defeat,
Had suffering saints no mercy-seat?

There, there, on eagle's wings to soar,
And sin and sense molest no more;
And heaven comes down our souls to greet,
And glory crowns the mercy-seat.

Stowell.

"Then he said unto him, A certain man made a great supper, and bade many: and sent his servant at supper time to say to them that were bidden, Come; for all things are now ready." Luke 14:16-17.

Elder Jerry B. Farmer

How blind are our eyes when it comes to seeing into the scriptures, unless sight is given. How hard are our hearts and incapable of being softened, unless they are worked upon by the Spirit and made tender with love toward God and the brethren. How deaf are our ears from hearing the gospel, unless they are unstopped by a miracle of Christ. How lame are our feet to walk in the truth, and how withered are our hands to do anything good apart from the mercy, grace and power of God. It seems to be too much to think that anything should ever be done for such an unworthy creature such as I see myself to be. Nevertheless, I beg for mercy.

Also, since the scriptures may be understood only with a spiritual understanding, it is impossible that they should be pried into or unraveled by our natural mind. Even the things that seem so obvious on the surface, cannot really be understood with any depth of knowledge apart from the gift of God. So we are made to commit ourselves unto Him for keeping us in the faith and for the things required to understand and rightly divide the word of truth. May He open up our understanding of this parable and make us to rejoice in truth and in hope of eternal life.

In this parable, Jesus presented a man who made a great supper and invited his acquaintances to have a part in it with him. He sent his servant out to tell them that the supper was ready and to bid them to come. Each one gave a reason not to attend and begged to have himself excused. One said he had bought a field and needed to go and see it; one said he had bought a yoke of oxen, and that he went to prove them; and another said he had married a wife and could not come. Their own cares had taken the attention of each one, and their desires were not for the supper.

In my young days, among those of another belief, I heard this parable set forth in an endeavor to prove that men, of their own supposed free will had refused the invitation of God to have a part in His kingdom. Back then, that seemed to me to be a logical interpretation. But after much anguish of mind, over a long period of time, I trust that I was taught that the Lord, God of heaven and earth does all of his will in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth. I was shown that man does not have a free will, as they assert, but is subject to the sovereign will of God. Their natural and false interpretation of the scriptures, no longer was of any use to me.

I am now made to believe that the truth of the matter is that God rules and reigns. As those men made excuse because they had no interest in the supper, so also the world has no interest in the things of God. Those in nature have never tasted of that kingdom to know that the Lord is gracious. The healthful food of the doctrine of Christ is an abomination to them. The company of those who enjoy spiritual things is not desired by them, and the love abounding among the guests is not shared by them.

So the servant returned and showed his lord these things. The master was angry and told the servant to go quickly into the streets and lanes of the city and bring in the poor and the maimed and the halt and the blind. And the lord told his servant to go out into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in, that his house may be full. And the lord said to his servant that none of those men which were bidden shall taste of his supper.

In the worldly religions, they use this parable to teach that they, themselves are to go out and aggressively win others to Christ by forceful methods. They teach that if they do not pursue and win others, they will be forever lost and end up in hell. What a futile and frustrating religion it must be which says the things of God may be accomplished by the works of the flesh. But Jesus made it plain about such works of men. He, speaking of those who desire to make disciples to themselves said, "They compass land and sea to make one proselyte, and when they have made him, he is twofold more the child of hell as they are themselves."

The truth, if not deceived, is that the servant in the parable represents the Holy Spirit, which is sent out of God to His children, the poor, the maimed, the halt and the blind. The Holy Spirit finds the poor in spirit, those who have been maimed by the world's religions, those that cannot walk in their own strength, and those that are blind of themselves to see anything of the Spirit. These are compelled to come into the kingdom, which they do in the power and wisdom of God according to His purpose and grace. The Spirit searches out every one and brings him in, and so the Lord's house is full and complete. Not one of God's little ones has ever been overlooked or lost.

Concerning the ones to be called to supper, Jesus said, "When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbors; lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee. But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame and the blind: and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just."

I have wondered about this saying of Jesus for years. I always thought that I was doing just what Jesus said not to do. Any time we made a feast at home, it seemed that we always called our church friends or relatives together. But it seems that I had looked upon this only with natural eyes and a hard heart. I was judging by nature what is actually spiritual. It appears now that the dinner or supper or feast that Jesus spoke of is spiritual — that it is the spiritual church meeting of God's little ones. Who is it we desire to be with in meeting? Are they not the saints, who are the poor and maimed and lame and blind spiritually? Who are they, who cannot repay the kindnesses that are extended to them, except those that are the destitute and crippled in this world; the ones who are misunderstood, mistreated, shunned because of their weaknesses; the ones who are pilgrims and strangers here, that have no certain dwelling place because the world is not their home? Is it not the family of God?

Along the same lines, Jesus spoke of a king which made a wedding feast for his son. Jesus said, "And when the king came in to see the guests, he saw there a man which had not on a wedding garment: And he saith unto him, Friend, how camest thou in hither not having a wedding garment? And he was speechless. Then said the king to the servants, Bind him hand and foot, and take him away and cast him into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. For many are called, but few are chosen."

We understand that those who are called into a wedding feast are those that are brought together to celebrate the upcoming marriage of the bridegroom to the bride. In the days of old, it appears that the guests were clothed with particular garments proving that they were the ones chosen to attend the feast. Anyone found without that certain kind of garment was uninvited, unwelcome, and was expelled.

This may seem cruel to those of the worldly religions, since they invite all without discrimination. The wedding garment is to them of no consequence. But it is essential to the King of Kings, that all who attend the wedding feast He prepared for His Son are clothed with the white robe of imputed righteousness of Christ washed in the blood of the Lamb. Those who come any other way than by the shed blood of Christ and in His righteousness are uninvited impostors. Those who come boasting of what they have done have on their own polluted garments. They shall be dealt with without mercy, because they showed no mercy in their lifetimes.

The ways of God and His thoughts are as high above ours as are the heavens above the earth. His ways are not our ways and His thoughts are not our thoughts. It is no wonder that the things of God are all in a mystery, so that no one is able to intrude into the things of God. God confounds the wise and prudent of this world and brings their best and worst purposes to naught. "Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee: and the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain." May He be praised in all things world without end.

This was written in love, I trust, and in hope of eternal life.

Dear Elder Robertson,

At this time I want to send you two older obituary notices from our little Philadelphia Primitive Baptist Church, Ellenboro NC. (A day or so ago, I sent the obituary notice for Bro. Claude McKinney).

I hope maybe you could find space for these two also: Bro. Robert McDaniel and Sister Doris McKinney Edwards.

Thank you for your consideration of these announcements, as many of our people and distant friends love and read the dear old Signs, as we do also.

Dearest Brother Cleo,

Enclosed is a sermon preached by Elder Spangler on fourth Sunday, June 25, 1972 at Dan River. It was recorded on a CD that my beloved Sister Jean Moran made for me before she was taken from our midst in 2010. That same CD had on it the recording of my baptism which took place on the fourth Sunday in July of 1972. I am sending you the sermon as I felt that the readers of the Signs might find comfort in reading it.

I wish I had words to express to you what this sermon meant to me. It expresses so beautifully the experience of a little child of grace as he is brought from under the condemnation of the law into the glorious liberty of Christ as the only way of salvation. What a blessed moment when one is blessed to feel the comfort and power of those words, "Let there be light, and there was light." And, to feel that after months of darkness and despair finally, there was a morning without clouds bringing to light a glorious view of the finished work of Christ.

Listening to this sermon after all those years brought back so many memories of those early days. I can remember in my teens reading the Bible and feeling that it unquestionably supported the belief in election and predestination of my grandparents and all those lovely old saints of that day. But, I also felt I knew something about the feeling that "this is a hard doctrine, who can hear it?" I felt that surely I had no part in this salvation by grace that I had heard from childhood on. What a wonderful blessing it was that day to hear this sermon and to feel that surely the Lord had blessed me with a morning without clouds! I believe I had always felt a love for those people, but I just felt there was no hope that I might be included with them. Although I was unable to ask for a home with the church that day, thanks be unto a merciful God that He blessed me to be baptized the following fourth Sunday. As I look back and remember the immense unworthiness that I felt that day, I find it is no different today. One of the most humbling aspects of my life has been the love of my brethren. I marvel, even now, that He would be so gracious and so kind to me as worthless and as undone as I seem to be most of my time. As time goes on, meeting with those of like precious faith becomes more and more precious to me and the wretchedness of my nature more keen.

You know, I believe that if indeed and in truth I have an experience of grace, it began with a grave concern about the hereafter and a dreadful fear of hell. But, I trust I was made to see that if hell was to be my home, His righteous law approved it well. Now, the dread of hell is not my greatest fear because I know it's what I deserve. My greatest fear is that when I breathe my last breath, I won't feel the Lord there with me. To be banished from His presence would be the most dreadful of all occurrences. What a wonderful blessing it has been in my life to be gathered together with a portion of the Lord's people and to see Him in their contenances and to feel His sweet presence from time to time and to hear His voice in the many lovely sermons over the years.

May the Lord continue to bless you, Brother Farmer, Brother Tony, and all who work so diligently to publish the Signs. It has been a blessing to me for many years.

In bonds of love and fellowship,
Mary Hawkins

CHURCHES OF OUR FAITH

ZION'S LANDMARK

January - February, 1998

The building is the oldest of Primitive Baptists to have been built in the United States of America. The bricks, made in England, were brought by ship to Pennsylvania (now Delaware), and were brought to this site on mule-back, the mules being led by the sisters (women members) of the church.

WHICH IS THE OLDEST PRIMITIVE BAPTIST CHURCH IN OUR COUNTRY, THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, AND WHERE IS IT LOCATED?

Dear Elder Mewborn,

Do you know which is the oldest Primitive Baptist Church in our country, the United States of America, and where is it located? I would like to know the answer to my question, and any information that you can give me about this church which I shall appreciate very much.

My grandmother, Sara Rebecca Hewett, united with the Simpson Creek Primitive Baptist Church, Horry County, South Carolina, in the year 1887. This church, Simpson Creek, is still standing today, and is a member of the Mill Branch Primitive Baptist Association. It is where my family and forebears worshipped in years past and gone, and has never wavered from the foundation upon which it was originally founded 150 years ago.

May I say that I enjoy reading your paper, Zion's Landmark, very much, and look forward to receiving each issue.

Sincerely, I trust, Lorraine Taylor

REPLY TO THE ABOVE QUESTION

Quoting from Hassell's Church History (HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF GOD FROM THE CREATION TO A.D. 1885), pages 554-555 will be found the answer to our friend's, Ms. Lorraine Taylor's, question. We shall let the pages of this volume, Hassell's Church History, answer her question as follows:

THE WELSH TRACT CHURCH

"THE WELSH TRACT CHURCH, whose meetinghouse is two miles from Newark, in New Castle County, Delaware, is the oldest Old School or Primitive Baptist Church in the United States of America, and the only American Baptist Church that was regularly organized in Europe before emigrating to this country. It was first constituted in the spring of 1701 by sixteen Baptists in the counties of Pembroke and Carmarthen, in South Wales, England, with Thomas Griffith, one of their number, as their pastor.

"A "Church Emigrant," they embarked at Milford Haven in June, 1701, and landed at Philadelphia, Pa., September 8th, 1701. They first settled about Pennypack, near Philadelphia, where they continued about a year and a half, and where their membership increased to thirty-seven. Then they procured land in Northern Delaware from Messers, Evans, Davis and Willis, who had purchased upwards of 30,000 acres from William Penn, a Quaker, called the "Welsh Tract," and in 1703, they removed to that location, and built, near Iron Hill, a small log meeting-house, which stood until 1746, and was then succeeded by the present substantial brick house of worship.

"In the yard around this building rest the bodies of many of the pastors and members who, during almost two centuries, have met and joined here in the service of God.

"The Welsh Tract Church was one of the five original churches that, in 1707, formed the Philadelphia Baptist Association (the oldest Baptist Association in America), and for many years it was the most influential member of that body of churches.

"Until 1732, the Church Book was kept in the Welsh language; and for about seventy years the pastors (all) were of Welsh extraction. The Welsh are the most conservative people in Europe, their language and customs having undergone no radical changes for some twenty centuries. Mr. David Benedict, a 19th century historian, spoke in strong terms of "the order, intelligence, and stability of the Welsh Baptist Churches in America, and their sound, salutary and efficient principles," in that day and timein which he lived from the first pastor, beginning in Wales."

INTERESTING FACTS ARE TOLD, AS FOLLOWS, ABOUT THE LIFE AND HISTORY OF WELSH TRACT PRIMITIVE BAPTIST CHURCH.

OLD WELSH TRACT, THE PATRIARCHATE CHURCH OF MANY PRIMITIVE BAPTIST CHURCHES IN THE U.S.A.

For the past twenty-five years that I have endeavored to publish the Zion's Landmark, questions, occasionally, concerning the history of the Primitive Baptist Church have been asked and we have always tried to answer them to the best of our ability. Since the question of

Ms. Lorraine Taylor concerns one of important history about the Primitive Baptist Church in America in identifying our oldest church, one that we feel, perhaps, will interest many of our subscribers and readers, we will devote some of the space of this issue to comply with her request, because of the rich heritage left to us by the Welsh Baptist brethren.

EARLY FOUNDING OF CHURCH IN WALES IN 1701
WOULD HAVE INFLUENCE IN FOUNDING OF MANY PRIMITIVE BAPTIST CHURCHES IN AMERICA
IN 18TH & 19TH CENTURIES

Hassell's Church History has answered her question, as we have published above, that the Welsh Tract Church, Newark, Delaware, is our oldest one. It is interesting to note, although Ms. Taylor may not be aware, that both the spiritual and natural roots of her grandmother's, Sister Sara Rebecca Hewett's, church, Simpson Creek Primitive Baptist Church, Horry County, South Carolina, are traced to Welsh Tract Primitive Baptist Church that was organized in Wales, (England), in the year 1701, and settled permanently later in the year 1703, in New Castle County, State of Delaware. We hope to bring out some of the historical data of the ties of Welsh Tract Church with some of our churches in this day where we have visited many times in both North Carolina and South Carolina, in our lifetimes.

While I am aware that church history, as a rule, is dull and uninteresting to many people, yet there are some, as Ms. Taylor, who are interested in this vital subject concerning the existance of the militant church of Christ, as it has stood here in the world in the past, and also relates to us today. To those of us who are not interested, we ask that you forebear with us who are interested in this instance.

In reviewing this interesting history of the oldest Primitive Baptist Church in the United States of America, it becomes us to remember and pay a tribute of love and respect to the memory of those firm, uncompromising and unrelenting Welsh Baptists who courageously plied the briney, deep waters of the Atlantic Ocean, 3,466 miles away from our shore, three centuries ago, to blaze the virgin forests on American frontier soil that contained in those days savage Indians, an abundance of poisonous snakes, festy insects and wild animals in the uncleared wilderness swamps, plains and woodlands of the new world via Indian trails and log barges on streams and rivers in their endeavor to find a peaceful home to worship their God.

HARD RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION IN WALES AND ENGLAND FORCES THEM TO LOOK FOR NEW HOMES IN AMERICA

Why did these rugged people come to America over three hundred years ago, and more specifically, what was the real reason? There will be found only one true answer to this question. ANSWER: Their coming here was an attempt to escape religious persecution from the power of ruthless, earthly kings, queens, emperors, rulers, and dictators because they would not fall down, as Shadrack, Meshack and Abednego, the three Hebrew boys, in the days of Daniel of old, to worship an image, as it had been set up by the Babylonian King, Nebuchadnezzar. Many of them suffered great pain and distress, even the loss of their own lives, because they would refuse for conscience' sake, and not succumb to the order to worship that which is false from their European kings, rulers and lawmakers.

The desire in the innermost parts of the hearts of these Welshmen was for the Godgiven privilege, to be able to "worship God, every man safely under his own vine and fig tree," none daring to molest or make afraid, according to the dictates of his own conscience. (Reference is had to 1st Kings 4:25 and Micah 4:4.)

This true, God-given desire of these Welsh Baptists was diametrically opposed to the forced worship of those earthly Kings and Queens of England in the Anglican Church in those days, better known today as the Church of England, also a daughter of Roman Catholicism. Interestingly enough, it is a matter of record today that these same Welsh Baptists were the first people in the State of South Carolina to initiate the disestablishment of that Anglican Church (Church of England) in that locality, as the one officially recognized by the Crown (King) of England in that colony 250 years ago. You worshipped their way, or else, prior to the American Revolution, 1776-1781. If you did not conform, you paid the consequences of the Royal law.

MARKS OF DEVOUT FAITHFULNESS TO THE CAUSE OF GOD AND HIS TRUTH CHARACTERIZE THEIR WALK IN THE EARLY DAYS OF OUR COUNTRY

Such devout faithfulness of those God-fearing Welsh pilgrims (immigrants from a troubled, foreign country) can be found in the history of the Welsh Tract Primitive or Old School Baptist Church, when the present (brick) structure was built in the year 1746 to replace the earlier log building of 1703 on the same location. This devoutness was made manifest when the bricks were made and purchased in England brought across the ocean on ships to Delaware, and were carried by mule-back from Newcastle, Delaware to the present location, these mules being led by sisters (the women members) of the church.

During a raging battle of the American Revolution on September 3, 1777, Welsh members and soldiers during a hot battle were forced back from the British Army and took their last stand for refuge under the shelter of this old meeting-house, when a cannon ball passed through one of the walls of it from the artillery of their persecutors from England.

Where can we find more faithfulness today when men under heavy fire are forced to retreat to the walls of their own home to defend themselves from a devouring enemy, whether the home be natural or spiritual, rather than to surrender and succumb to its dreadful power and consequences? Where can we find more faithfulness today when the wives of husbands are willing to actually labor with their own hands to build the family's dwelling place by literal labour? Such love for the truth reminds me of the saying concerning the women in the scriptures"they were the last at the, cross, and the first at the tomb." Only the true love of God, shed abroad in the heart, accounts for such faithfulness in these two instances when it comes from the the church and the living God.

THEY UPHELD THE TRUE DOCTRINE OF THE SCRIPTURES AND BORE NO TRAITS OF UNSOUND DOCTRINE IN THEIR PRACTICE

These sturdy, staunch Welsh Baptists were strong believers in the doctrine of unlimited predestination, the free, unconditional election of the Church of God in the everlasting covenent by His free grace before the foundation of the world, and they rejected infant baptism. At the time when they came to America in 1701, their worship included the practice of "the laying on of hands" on all church members, as an ordinance when received into the fellowship of the church, along with the other two required church ordinances of baptism (total immersion) and communion or the Lord's Supper. They were unbending and unflexable at first with the deletion of the practice of "laying on of hands" on all church members, when received into the fellowship of the church, with other differing local Baptists already in the area, but gradually ceased from this practice over a period of time when they saw from the scriptures that "laying on of hands" applied only to the ordination of Elders and Deacons in the Church of God.

EARLY MIGRATIONS FROM PENNSYLVANIA AND DELAWARE LED TO ESTABLISHMENT OF CHURCHES IN BOTH NORTH CAROLINA AND SOUTH CAROLINA

There were three different migrations of these Welsh Baptists to the south in the years 1736, 1737 & 1741, from their colony at Welsh Tract in the State of Delaware. Two of them migrated to Welsh Neck (near Society Hill, Darlington County, South Carolina), to form the second oldest Baptist Church on the Great Pee Dee River in that state. Out of these two settlements indirectly came four Primitive Baptist Churches, (Little) Pee Dee Church, located near Conway, Horry County, South Carolina (which disbanded about ten years ago), Simpson Creek Church, near Loris, Horry County, South Carolina, Mount Pleasant Church, Bishopville, Lee County, South Carolina, and Mill Branch Church, near Tabor City, Columbus County, North Carolina, as well as more in those areas.

One of these three Welsh Tract Baptist Church immigrant groups of the years 1736, 1737, & 1741, settled between the Northeast Cape Fear River and the main North Carolina Cape Fear River in what is today Pender County, North Carolina, as the N.C. Highway Historical Marker, situate just off Interstate 40, northwest from Wilmington, near Burgaw, on US Hwy. 117, substantiates by illustration as herein shown. The early Welsh pioneer families of Jones, Edwards, Williams, James, and Davis, were some of the founding family roots in Pender, Duplin, New Hanover and Onslow Counties, North Carolina, whose descendents were the constituting members of such churches as Muddy Creek, Duplin County, N.C., (1790), Limestone Church, Duplin County, N.C., (1780), Southwest Church, Onslow County, N.C., (1801), Wilmington Church, North Carolina, (1795), Riley's Creek, Slocumb's Creek, Cypress Creek, Duplin County NC (1820) and many others.

I often reflect back and think of those ministers and elders in the church in those days as Elder Jacob Williams, Elder Aaron Davis, Elder Job Thigpen, Elder James Cavanaugh, Elder Jabez Weeks, and others, all of Welsh extraction, who led in the organization of these churches from Welsh Tract influence, as verified by the North Carolina (State) Historical marker as pictured herein by illustration in this issue of Zion's Landmark.

Many were the times, when I was just a young boy, later a teenager, and finally a young man, over fifty years ago, of visiting in the homes of Elder Louis Williams and his brother, Brother Jerry Williams, pastor and deacon of Cypress Creek Church, who were descendents of Elder Jacob Williams, an early Welsh minister of almost 200 years ago. Also, Brother Tracey C. Edwards, a deacon of Muddy Creek Church, all of whom were firm in their convictions of the Gospel of everlasting truth.

THE WELSH JAMES FAMILY IN PENDER AND NEW HANOVER COUNTIES, NORTH CAROLINA

It is of particular significance that we note and record the place that the Welsh James Family played in the record and history of the Primitive Baptist Church, as well as the State of North Carolina. Charles Kuralt, the nationally recognized television journalist of CBS, who died May, 1997, was a great nephew of Sister India Morton Gurganus and her husband, Elder Ranson W. Gurganus, who resided at Jacksonville, North Carolina. No two staunch members of the Primitive Baptist Church ever lived who were any more faithful than these two people. Sister Gurganus' family was of the Welsh James family of that area, who settled in that area from Welsh Tract in Pennsylvania and Delaware in the 1730's. (Please see historical illustration (marker) in this issue.)

In Charles Kuralt's book titled North Carolina is my Home, he left on record these words about his roots and anscestors: "The Baptists, Primitive Baptists, Separate Baptists ... preaching the gospel from any rough platform or tree stump, brought religion home to every crossroads." "And the red gullies of the Piedmont echosed the WELSH CHANTS." Interestingly enough, we cannot overlook the fact that Hinton James, a member of this same Welsh family, was the first student of the University of North Carolina Chapel Hill who walked all the way fromm Pender and New Hanover Counties, a one-way distance of approximately 160 miles, to become the first student of that renowned institution on February 12, 1795. The University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N.C., is the oldest state chartered university in the United States of America, and Hinton James was its first student on this date who waited two weeks before other students joined him.

PLAINNESS & SIMPLICITY MARK THEIR MANNERISMS IN THEIR WAY OF LIFE AND WORSHIP OF GOD

One genuine mark, trait or characteristic of these Welsh Baptists can be seen today throughout our land and country in the pattern, makeup and construction of our meeting or church houses. First, the exterior is always very plain with most of them having two front entrance doors, two aisles leading down to the pulpit area with both "Amen" corners always occupied by the male membership on one side and the female (sisters) membership occupying the opposite side. (See pictorial photograph herein of building.) The exact seating of the men and women on each side varies from church to church, but I have been told that the original setting included always in Wales with the men seated on the right side and the women seated on the left side of the pulpit.

Throughout the United States today especially on the eastern seaboard of those meeting houses yet standing, you will find these authentic marks & characteristics of the old Welsh Baptist Church, reaching all the way back to 1746, to 1701, and then for twenty centuries history of the British isles in the history of the Church of the Living God. Their meeting houses were always very plain, possessing only those things that are needed, and not possessing those things that are not needed. You may be sure that you will never find a choir loft behind any pulpit, nor a steeple perched atop any of these buildings, nor anything of worldly attrition.

In the division or separation of the Baptist Church in the year 1832 with the New School (or Missionary Baptists), these Welsh Baptists stood firmly, faithfully, & solidly in the cause of their Maker when they threw out the window the ministerial title of "Reverend", and agreed to retain the simple title of the scriptures

"elder" for the God-called minister or preacher. They retained, as in the construction of meeting houses, the simplicity of their worship services with the singing only of hymns, prayer and preaching (in that manner or order of worship) in their midst. This same mark continues today among true Primitive Baptists, anywhere and everywhere.

The practice of churches holding "Yearly" or "Annual" Communion meetings, which I have observed all of my life, originated and came directly from this group of Welsh Baptists, who were in Europe for at least 2,000 years before the discovery and founding of America, reaching back to the time of Christ and His apostles. This fact is proven in the 200th Anniversary address of Elder B.F. Coulter, (M.D.) that will be published in a subsequent issue of Zion's Landmark. They were very flexable in correcting errors in their midst, when shown by the Holy Ghost, as the practice of the "laying on of hands", as an ordinance for all members of the church which they discontinued as this church record points out.

WELSH TRACT CHURCH STOOD FAITHFULLY IN THE CAUSE OF GOD & TRUTH FOR TWO AND ONE-HALF CENTURIES

The old Welsh Tract Church of the Philadelphia Baptist Association of which it was an organizing member in 1707, to the year 1795, when it became an organizing member of the Delaware Old School Baptist Association, bore pure marks of the Apostolic Church of Jesus Christ. The Delaware Old School Baptist Association ceased to exist in the middle 1950's and for this period of time, 1707 to (abt.) 1955, a period of almost 250 years, Welsh Tract was a bright and shining light to the faithful of God, "a city that was set on a hill that could not be hid." Matthew 5:14.

In the year 1951 or 1952, it was my unworthy privilege to attend one of these last sessions of the Delaware Association that was held with Rock Springs Church, Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, where I met Brother Charles Osborne, Quarryville, Pa., a deacon of this church, Brother T.C. Koch of Salem Church, Philadelphia, Pa., and Brother Charles H. Jarman, deacon of Welsh Tract Church. Never will I forget the able sermon I heard that day from Elder Arnold H. Bellows, West Hurley, New York, on the parable of the Pearl of Great Price, as found in Matthew 13:46. It was truly a sermon on the mount, and was one of the ablest sermons I have ever heard from any pulpit anywhere. My home church, Mewborn's Primitive Baptist Church, Greene County, North Carolina, was in fellowship with Welsh Tract Church and these brethren in those days.

WILLIAM PENN, AN ENGLISH QUAKER, WAS AN INSTRUMENT IN THE HAND OF GOD TO BLESS THE WELSH BAPTISTS IN AMERICA

It was by no accident, but rather in the divine providence of our merciful God, that William Penn (1644 – 1718), an English Quaker, who was severely persecuted for his religious beliefs in England, as the Welsh Baptists, sold them a tract of 30,000 acres of land (then Pennsylvania, now Delaware). King Charles II owed William Penn's father an unpaid debt of $80,000, and paid it off by giving him wilderness land in America, which is today the State of Pennsylvania. With the sale of that 30,000 acres to the Welsh Tract Baptists by William Penn created a movement in the United States of America from which every Old Baptist today has a living part of an everlasting inheritance, and owes a lasting debt of gratitude.

Many have been the times, as I passed the Philadelphia City Hall, downtown Philadelphia, Broad Street, that I did not fail to gaze at his statue on top, recalling him as an instrument in the Hand of God to benefit and bless "His afflicted and poor people." Zephaniah 3:12.

VOICES OF THE PAST

Sermon by Elder David Spangler At Dan River Primitive Baptist Church June 25, 1972

"Of which salvation the prophets have enquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you: Searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow." The tenth and eleventh verses of the 1st chapter of 1st Peter.

By listening to our dear brother speak on one of the favorite scriptures of mine and of the morning without clouds, my thoughts went about like this, how many of us have seen in our life a morning without clouds, spiritually? There is such a thing, that men and women have known in their life, not the literal morning but a heavenly morning, a time when the darkness had passed and a joy that the Psalmist said cometh in the morning with a spiritual and a heavenly view of Christ the Lord. I believe that many, who listen to me this morning, have seen that morning. Some may not have seen the brightness of the Son as others, but to those who know the truth, there has been a morning in their life without clouds. When was that morning? It was the time, my friends, when Christ appeared as your salvation; when you saw that His blood paid your debt for sin; when you saw that His righteousness would answer as your righteousness in heaven. When you saw that there was a justification in the blood of Christ, it was a morning without clouds. No one, who trusts in the doctrine of works, the doctrine of creature righteousness, the doctrine of human zeal, can ever know that morning for they will never know the night that precedes it. For, there must be an evening before there is a morning. There is in God's creation the evening was first and then the morning throughout the days of creation. No one, who believes in their own zeal or righteousness, can know the morning we are talking about — that our Brother has set forth. If we offend in one point of God's law, we are guilty of all of it. There is not a just person on the earth. If he trusted in his own works and had 99 percent of them and lacked one, the result would be the same. So, the only clear morning is in Christ.

Yesterday evening I spoke a short time on the fulfilling of the scriptures how that God from the very beginning had presented the promise of a Saviour to the people, how that these promises were renewed from time to time by an immutable God. Scripture is clear that wherever searching there was in the hearts of the prophets it was searching diligently for the things that would bring Christ into view. It was the spirit of Christ in them; it was the spirit of Christ in the prophets that prophesied of Christ. That's why the Apostle Peter said "searching what or what manner of time the spirit of Christ which was in them." This signified beforehand the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow.

Christ said to the people, while He was here, search the scriptures. I believe the Jewish people were readers of the scriptures and searched them. Yet with the searching and the reading of the law to them, they could not see Christ in it until He is revealed. "In them ye think ye have eternal life." No doubt the people thought eternal life was to be found in the scriptures, in the observing of various ordinances, in the times and the seasons — that there was eternal life, but He said "they are they that testify of me."

If we were blessed to really view the first chapter of the Bible, we could see, as we might say, the picture of salvation as God would unfold it in time. And in the unfolding of it would be the unfolding of the work of Christ in salvation. When God created the world, we are told, it was without form and void. That would be hard for us to comprehend in natural things, wouldn't it — something without form and void? The word "void", we would say, is something that doesn't exist, but in the clearness, the bringing out of that, which was that in creation, there was nothing yet clear — darkness covered the face of the earth — a mass of the darkness. Who knows how many thousands of years there was from the first day of creation until the seventh day. Nobody knows. There may have been thousands and thousands of years from the first day of creation until the second as far as we know. But, there was a time that the earth was without form and void.

I believe that time has been in the lives of people when there was a time that there was nothing clear with them. They desired salvation and felt probably it wasn't for them. They turned to the law and found that if they offend in one point they were guilty of all of them. They seek, as a man drowning, for something or to escape from death. Why — because nothing clear has appeared. Everything, as far as they are concerned is without form. No visible way of salvation do they see. And yet in that dark state of creation, something moved. Something moved and what was it? The first work of the Holy Ghost is brought to view, and the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. I believe, personally, that happens in the lives of people. I believe that somewhere in our life the Holy Spirit dispels that world of darkness, that world of confusion, that world where we had nowhere to turn. It dispels it and God said, "Let there be light". God speaks and there was light. Where was it — where all had been in darkness. How many of you, who listen to me this morning, can witness to a personal experience of the grace of God? If we don't have it, all of our reading, all of our singing, all of our praying, all of our efforts in religion are worthless if we don't have a personal experience of the grace of God in our soul. But, there is such a thing, my hearers, as the power of the Holy Spirit reaching a world that is in darkness, a world that is grasping for light, a place where there is no light, and God said, "Let there be light". If I'm not a deceived mortal, I remember that time in my own life. I remember when the darkness began to dispel. I remember when I began to see the work of Christ and my soul said, It'll save a hell deserving sinner like you are. And something began to take place where darkness existed. What had happened? God had said "Let there be light and there was light."

In all the creation of God I like to think, my hearers, that the God we read about in creation, the God that placed man in a garden, that the Son of God himself must go back and redeem His people in a garden. Why — because, he must go to where they fell. He must go beneath them. He must deliver them from hell. And the Spirit of Christ in all the prophets testified beforehand of the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow. If we were to think of the elements that compose this world, I would think of everything involved, where we turn, as God promising something spiritually. He divided the waters that were above and the waters that were beneath. Why and how? He placed a firmament there — that's how it was done. It speaks of Christ that divides the ungodly from the godly; the peoples in the earth that Christ himself has separated that He said I didn't come to bring peace but a sword and so forth. And then in that creation after a while the dry land appeared. After everything had been covered with water the dry land shows up. What it is — it's a promise of a resurrection of all that are buried in some time and some place. And the tree that was in the midst of the garden — I like that word midst. If you were to take that word midst and follow it in the Bible, you would find Christ. You know when He was crucified, there were two thieves but it said "and Jesus in their midst." When David was anointed king over Israel, his brethren stood around him and he was a type of Christ and it said "and David in their midst". And all the things that we find, the tree of life was in the midst of the garden. The tree of life wasn't on the east side or the west side or the south side or the north side, it was in the midst of the garden. What does that show? It shows that Christ came right between the law and the gospel, brought in everlasting righteousness, and set up that salvation could never come to us by types and shadows. And it was the Spirit of Christ in the prophets that signified the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow.

There is so much of this. The Bible is so full of it from the very first chapter to the last tracing Christ, tracing His work, tracing out His accomplishments. Somebody said well tell us a few of them — tell us a few of them. How did the scriptures foretell things? Who indited in the hearts of the prophets — the Holy Spirit and the Holy Spirit was Christ. It was the spirit of Christ in them and in signifying the sufferings and glory of Christ, what all did it pinpoint? It pinpointed the place of His birth. It said that now in Bethlehem Judah are not the least among the princes in Judah for out of thee shall come a governor that shall rule my people Israel. It pinpointed where he would go when he was born. It pinpointed where Joseph would go in to certain places that the Scriptures might be fulfilled — that out of Egypt have I called my son. It pinpointed the work of Christ. Scripture says, "He shall not fail or be discouraged until my righteous servant shall send forth judgment unto victory." Christ himself knew something about this that nobody else knew. He never revealed it to people and he knew and you know when the hour of the dying of Christ approached, He recognized it as one hour. He said, "Father the hour is come". Nobody else knew that hour but Christ. God knew it and the Father and the Son knew that hour. And when the hour was arriving it wasn't a hour — he said the hour is come, glorify thy son that thy son may also glorify thee. What else did he say? He said "for this hour was I born and for this purpose came I into the world". So there were some things that Christ didn't show his people in connection with his suffering and his death and his resurrection — that they had to wait to see. That in all this it was the spirit of Christ in the prophets pinpointing the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow.

You know there are such certain things that we get into in the Bible that just gets larger and larger and larger and larger that we feel that we are almost lost. And I think of that of the portrayal of Christ in the old Bible — that the things of nature — God took the things of nature to show His Son. "He shall be," He said, "as the tree planted by the waters whose leaf shall not wither" and so forth in the first Psalm "and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper." "He shall be like a vine." Christ shall be like a vine. The Bible said "Joseph is a fruitful bough by a well whose branches ran over the wall". What's he talking about — the prophesying of Christ and the gospel going from the Jews to the Gentles running over the wall. And the archer sorely wounded him — that's a picture of Christ in nature. He is set forth in there also as a rock, a rock "Behold I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone and he that believeth on him shall not be ashamed and shall not make haste." He is set forth as a tree in the Bible that was cast into the waters when the waters were bitter. And if you haven't experienced it, that will only be an account of part of the old Bible to you. But, if there have been bitter trials to you in this world, God has brought you low before Him and Christ has sweetened those trials and those crosses in your life, then the tree has been made sweet and the waters have been made sweet in your life. These are just a few, my friends, they are innumerable.

The Sun speaks of Christ and the prophet Malachi in closing the old Bible, after all that has been said in the old Bible about Christ, then, he brings it home to the people and what it means to them. And he said, "Unto you who fear his name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings."

Wasn't it a great day in the world, when He who came to dispel the darkness of the earth, that He could on the mount say to them, "Blessed are the poor in spirit for theirs is the kingdom of heaven". Are you glad, my friends this morning, that He said these things? Are you glad that your heart has been made acceptable to these things? "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness for they shall be filled. "If your soul has hungered and thirsted for righteousness, just that sure it shall be filled. It's like a rising out of a dark night — Christ coming to a sinner. It's like a man coming out of a wilderness, coming out of a wilderness and the more he gets out of the wilderness, the more he realizes there is nothing behind but a wilderness. And the more he sees of Christ the more he will say to the Lord, show me more of Him. The Spirit of Christ signified the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow. The whole New Testament is embodied with these two thoughts and its in all the Bible.

The moon — somebody says where does the moon come in? The moon is a type of the law and it was placed for a purpose to give light by night. But you know nothing can be seen clearly by moonlight. You know what's happened to me a time or two — I've been fool enough to think the moon was so bright that I could drive the car by moonlight— cut my lights off. That's sounds silly, doesn't it? But, it showed me I couldn't make my way by moonlight, but I cut them off just to see anyway. And, I found out, right quick that it wasn't as bright as I thought it was. What's the thought there? Now, no one under the doctrine of the law can see anything clearly. No one that trusts in their own works and righteousness can see salvation clear. It's like the moonlight. And you know, the woman in Revelations, she was clothed with the sun, and the moon was under her feet showing that Christ has fulfilled the law to a jot and a tittle for His people. To a jot and to a tittle and the moon was under her feet and a crown of twelve stars was upon her head. The twelve stars were the doctrine of the twelve apostles. People tell you there have been more of them, but there haven't been more than twelve. And the stars portray the children of God, too. The Bible says as one star exceeds another star so is the resurrection of the dead. What does it mean? Does it mean John will have a high seat in heaven and Mary a low seat? Oh no! Oh no, it doesn't mean that. I know that is a sweet thought to the flesh that somebody is going to have a higher seat over there and somebody is going to have a lower seat but they'll be there just the same. That's not what the scriptures teach. It shows that as one star differs from another in glory so is the resurrection of the dead. But this mortal body that stands before you, if I'm one of the people of God, that there will be such a difference in that day, it'll be like the exceeding of one star of another in glory. It won't be two stars, but our vile bodies that stand here, and they are vile bodies. Who knows it? I know it and you know it. Dying bodies — they're dying every day — approaching death every hour. Every minute of our life we're approaching death. What will be the outcome? That's a solemn question, my friends, what will be the outcome? "When thou my righteous judge shall come to fetch thy ransomed people home, shall I among them stand? Shall such a worthless worm as I?" How many of God's people have felt they were nothing but a worthless worm before God? "Who sometimes am afraid to die, be found at thy right hand?" No wonder Lady Huntington of England, who was of the royalty of England, said, who composed that hymn, and she said, "Prevent, Prevent it by thy grace. Be thou, dear Lord, my hiding place in that most solemn day. Then loudest of the crowd I'll sing while heaven's resounding mansions ring with shouts of sovereign grace." My friends, we'll be changed — we'll be changed from natural. Paul said that which is first is not spiritual but that which is natural and afterwards that which is spiritual. And, as we have born the image of the earthly we shall so bear the image of the heavenly. My beloved brethren this morning, someday in the fullest extent the people of God shall bear the image of Christ. They'll have spiritual bodies. They'll awake some morning. They'll awake some morning. I've woke many times with terrible pain. I've woke a number of times and thought this is the end. But that will be a day, my friends, when the people of God will awake in the likeness of Christ to change our vile bodies and they'll be fashioned like the glorious body of Christ. I know I haven't followed the text. My mind has been so stirred in these things.

OBITUARIES

DORRIS McKINNEY EDWARDS
(1917 - 2017)
Age 100, 1 month and 1 day

Dorris McKinney Edwards was a dear sister and a faithful friend to all who knew her. She grew up going to Philadelphia Primitive Baptist Church of Ellenboro NC, and after she was married to Heath Edwards continued faithfully all her life. Dorris and Heath did many things for the church and the community that would probably be too numerous to include here.

Born in Ellenboro on June 5, 1917, she lived to become a Centenarian and passed away following an extended illness on July 6, 2017 - a month following her 100th birthday! She was the last survivor of the 10 children born to the late John Alexander and Johnnie Price McKinney. Dorris lived most of her adult life in Charlotte where she worked as a corporative secretary for Belk Stores, Inc. for 40 years. Following retirement, she and her husband returned to Rutherford County, building a house in the Philadelphia Church area, and continued attending the church they loved.

In addition to her siblings, Dorris was preceded in death by her husband of 61 years, Walter Heath Edwards, who died in 2008. Survivors included a niece and several nephews, as well as a number of great-nieces and great-nephews who were very special to her.

She loved the "old paths" of the "faith once delivered unto the saints," and some of her last wishes were that the dear little Philadelphia might continue and once again prosper as a fellowship of like-minded dear pilgrims of Zion in our community.

ROBERT "BOBBY," McDANIEL

The Lord has seen fit, in His infinite wisdom, to call Home from this world of sin and sorrow, a dear friend and lover of the truth of God's sovereign grace and absolute predestination --- Brother Robert Oliver "Bobby" McDaniel.

Bobby was born July 20, 1934 in Ellenboro NC. His parents were William Van and Caroline Wilson McDaniel. They were owners and operators of the Colfax Gin, a very prominent business in Ellenboro. Bobby and his brothers followed in the family business which included growing many hundreds of acres in cotton each year. Our dear friend graduated from old Ellenboro High School, Class of 1952. He joined the Army and became an MP, serving mostly in New Mexico -- but after completion of his tour of duty, Bobby was anxious to return home to the fields and the gin, where he remained the rest of his life.

Although never married, Bobby is survived by his brother Joe McDaniel (and wife Betty), and a sister Mary McDaniel Lewis, both of Ellenboro, and additionally two nieces and two great-nephews, in whose love he delighted. He was pre deceased by his parents, and also by his brother Sammy McDaniel and sister Caroline McDaniel Jones. Bobby passed away after a brief illness on February 5, 2017, and is greatly missed by all of us.

Our dear friend grew up around Old Baptists and no doubt attended Philadelphia Primitive Baptist Church as a youngster with his parents. For years he stayed away from the church, only attending occasionally, but we gladly report that he returned several years ago and, while he never joined, was very faithful in attendance and helping in every possible way to serve the brethren and friends. He loved the Gospel of Christ as preached by Elder Ralph Dale, and told me that this preaching meant more to him than anything he had ever heard. Bro. Dale conducted his funeral service on February 7th at the Padgett & King Funeral Chapel in Forest City NC.

I know not whether Bobby was a regular reader of the Signs of the Times, but he knew and loved the truth and felt himself to be a poor unworthy sinner trusting in free grace alone. He knew the truth and walked in love toward the dear family of God – and our hope is that the Lord has taken him HOME to be in that eternal fellowship of the "church of the firstborn who are written in Heaven." We bow in submission to the holy will of God in this, as in all things.

CLAUDE M. McKINNEY

On September 22nd, it pleased our Lord to call Home a dear Old School Baptist, a rare and sincere lover of the truth as it is in Jesus, Brother Claude M. McKinney of Ellenboro NC. Brother Claude was, for a number of years, a faithful member of Philadelphia Primitive Baptist Church -- we are a very small band of believers in the Grace of God down here where there are very few churches of truth in this entire area.

Claude Max McKinney was born June 19, 1935 and passed away after a few months' illness on September 22, 2017. He was a humble brother who delighted to walk in the "old paths," and was never afraid to stand out for the truth of God. He united with the church some years ago and from the human standpoint did much to help in the furtherance of a place of truth in this community - even when the church was very small and faint and seemed ready to die. I know this to be the truth, because he encouraged me in definite ways, and we loved each other in Christ and in the Old School faith. He was a longtime reader of the Signs of the Times and a few other Primitive papers, and felt he knew many of the brethren and sisters who, though at some distance removed from him, were nevertheless walking in the path of Truth and order as set up by Christ in the New Testament. And, though he felt in himself to be a poor unworthy sinner, we feel that he has left us a noble example that we should walk therein.

Funeral services were conducted on Sunday, September 24th, at the Padgett and King Funeral chapel in Forest City NC. The welcome and Scripture comments were given by Elder Ralph E. Dale, assisted by two local ministers, Chris Hensley and Scott Huffman. Burial was in the Bethel Church cemetery in Ellenboro.

Our beloved brother is survived by his wife of 50 years, Genell Parker McKinney, and two sons, Scott McKinney, and wife Sarah, and Greg McKinney; one brother William McKinney and his wife Mary Elizabeth, a granddaughter Alexandra McKinney, three stepchildren and several nieces and nephews. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

HOWARD E. PARHAM

We, members of Mt. Zion Primitive Baptist Church, of Athens, Georgia, bow in submission to the Lord's calling home of our Brother, Howard E. Parham, on June 22, 2017.

Born May 12, 1920, our brother was a long time member of our church in fellowship one with another. Brother Howard expressed his knowledge of the truth of the scriptures as he was given to know from an early age, always confessing and acknowledging that it was a gift given to him by his Lord and Savior. Brother Howard joined the Lystra Primitive Baptist Church on 26 August 1951. A Faithful Member, and long after there were no longer enough members to sustain the church, Brother Howard maintained the building and grounds for many years.

Born in Comer, Georgia, his lifetime residence, he served his country honorably overseas during World War II... a farmer, mechanic and master of all trades he was known far and wide for his honesty and fair dealings with all. Brother Howard attended as a member of Mount Zion Primitive Baptist Church until his health no longer permitted.

Funeral services were held June 25, 2017, at the Lord and Stephens, Madison Chapel, with his pastor, Elder Kenneth Adams, officiating with interment at the Meadow Cemetery.

HYMN

A few more days on earth to spend,
And all my toils and cares shall end,
And I shall see my God and friend,
And praise his name on high:
No more to sigh or shed a tear,
No more to suffer pain or fear,
But God, and Christ, and heaven appear
Unto the raptured eye.

Then, O my soul, despond no more,
The storm of life will soon be o'er,
And I shall find the peaceful shore
Of everlasting rest.
O happy day! O joyful hour!
When freed from earth my soul shall tower,
Beyond the reach of Satan's power,
To be for ever blessed.

My soul anticipates the day;
I'll joyfully the call obey
Which comes to summon me away
To seats prepared above:
There I shall see my Saviour's face,
And dwell in his beloved embrace,
And taste the fulness of his grace,
And sing redeeming love.

Adieu, ye scenes of noise and show,
And all this region here below,
Where naught but disappointments grow;
A better world's in view.
My Saviour calls, I haste away;
I would not here for ever stay;
Hail! ye bright realms of endless day;
Vain world, once more, adieu.

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." James 1:27

Elder Jerry B. Farmer

There are many things in the world that are called religions. In some so-called pagan religions, the sun and moon and stars have been worshipped. Some have taken up the worship of the natural world in general. Some have looked to so-called "prophets" of the past for wisdom and for paths to right living. Some have made idols of wood or stone or precious metals and precious stones and have fallen down before them and have called upon them for guidance and deliverance. Some have even taken to themselves the name of God the Father or of His Son Jesus the Christ, but go about denying the true faith in words and deeds. Out of the innumerable multitudes of people upon the earth, only a very small remnant composed exclusively of God's elect has been given wisdom to serve the true and living God in that pure, undefiled religion in Spirit and in truth, by the grace and mercy and power of God.

There is a great difference between the false religions of the world and the pure religion of God. All the false religions have several things in common. They all have at their heart the teaching of the "free will of man." They all say that it is up to the individual to make the proper choices and prosper, or to make the improper choices and suffer the consequences. They all teach that their god can only work in a person's life to the extent that a person will allow it. They all teach that if the "good" deeds of an individual outweigh the "bad" ones, that individual will have a good outcome when his life is completed. They also teach the reverse — too many "bad" deeds will result in a bad outcome. They all subscribe to a certain code of behavior, which, if obeyed, they think will result in a kind of salvation. To sum it up, every false religion is a works religion that denies the grace and power of God.

They have no perceived need of the Savior. On the other hand, the pure and undefiled religion is grounded in the grace, love, wisdom and power of the God of heaven and earth.

The pure religion of God is altogether hidden from the person in a carnal mind. He, spiritually, has neither the eyes to see it, nor the ears to hear it, nor the heart for the understanding of it. It is written, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." It also seems plain from the scriptures that "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness to him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." It matters not how diligently the things of the spiritual kingdom are inquired into, they are always hidden from the one in nature. It matters not how carefully a spiritual thing is explained — even in truth the carnal mind cannot comprehend it. The simplest thing, of which a little babe in Christ is given an understanding, is a mystery, world without end, to the wise and prudent of this present evil world.

Since the pure religion of God is altogether hidden to the world, how then may anyone know anything about it? Since the things of God are in a mystery past finding out by the natural man, who may know any of them? And who is it that even has an interest in these things? These seem to me to be key questions. Since we are helpless in ourselves to know the things of the kingdom of God, it seems beyond a doubt in my mind that the things of God may only be known by revelation. God said that He hid these things from the wise and prudent and revealed them to babes. Now, the babes must be the children of God, who are born from above. They are the only ones given a perfect interest in the things of the spiritual kingdom. If we are His children, born into the kingdom of God, we are given to desire to know the things of the kingdom. But we cannot just reach out and take them --- all we are enabled to do is to ask for wisdom and then to wait upon the mercies of God. It is written one place, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." Consessing our lack of wisdom, we beg that God would condescend to show us what is the pure religion and undefiled before God the Father, and what it is to keep oneself unspotted from the world.

The apostle James, by inspiration of the Holy Spirit, describes the pure and undefiled religion. He says that it is "to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." But we know that this pure religion and this keeping cannot be what it seems to be, as understood by the carnal mind, else revelation would not be required to know it. The world of false religion takes this literally and sets out to do a supposed good work by visiting and providing for natural orphans and natural widows. We also see them urging people to keep themselves by the works of the flesh. We see them as they go around the world, finding people in distress and begging for money to help relieve their misery. This might seem to be a worthy natural endeavor, but do we really know where the money goes? Do we really know what sort of people these are that put on a religious face? Do we really know what lifestyles they lead on the money they take in? Do we really know the depths of the false doctrine they teach to those they seem to be helping? Is providing naturally for indiscriminate people of the world really what James was indicating as pure religion and undefiled before God the Father? I am fully persuaded that the answer to each of the questions is, no.

Then what was James writing about? Who are the fatherless and who are the widows? And what does it mean to keep oneself unspotted from the world? I am made to believe that the fatherless and the widows refer to those who are destitute and helpless in this world according to the Spirit. They are those who are of a broken heart and a crushed spirit because of sin --- those who are deeply in debt spiritually with no way to pay what they owe. They are those who are pilgrims in a desert land - a strange land where no man has pity – a wilderness where there is no food or water to sustain their life. They are those who are totally dependent upon the grace of God for survival and deliverance. They are the children of God. And we are taught by experience that it is impossible to keep oneself unspotted from the world. Because, when we would do good, evil is present with us. How to perform that which is good we find not. So, those who keep themselves unspotted from the world, no doubt to me, are those who have committed their keeping to Him that is able to do all things. The apostle said, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed to Him against that day."

May we take a brief look at what God did in Elijah's day? The scriptural account is found in the first book of Kings, chapters 17 and 18. God caused Elijah to pray that it rain not upon the earth. And a great drought came upon the land, which lasted for a period of three and a half years (a time and times and half a time). Near the beginning of the drought, Elijah was sent to a certain widow of Zarephath that was to sustain him during that time. When he came to the gate of the city, there was a widow woman gathering sticks. She and her fatherless son were destitute and were thinking to die shortly because there was not enough food to sustain them. She was gathering sticks in order to dress a little cake for her son and herself, which she thought would be their last meal upon earth. Elijah asked her for a drink of water, which she gave him. Then he asked for a little bread to eat. She told him she only had a handful of meal in a barrel, and a little oil in a cruse. And she said she meant to prepare that for her son and herself that they may eat it and die. Elijah then asked a hard thing. He asked her to make a cake for him first and to bring it to him, and after to make for herself and her son. All the substance of the widow and of her son was required. And she gave it in faith. But she and her son were not left to die. "And the barrel of meal wasted not, neither did the cruse of oil fail, according to the word of the Lord, which he spake by Elijah." Does this make you think of the widow that Jesus saw casting her two mites into the treasury? She had given all she had, even all her living. Jesus commended her and said that she had given more than the others, since the others gave out of their abundance and she gave out of her want. I cannot imagine that she was left to die, but rather I am made to believe that she was sustained all her days by the mercies of God, as have been all of God's little ones in this barren land.

There, to me, is the picture of the fatherless ones and the widows that James wrote about. They are the children of God, who by the gift of faith in God, are made to present their bodies a living sacrifice, which is their reasonable service, which is wholly acceptable unto God. These are the ones who are made to lay down their lives for their brethren. They are the ones who Jesus will set on His right hand when He comes in glory. He said that they had given Him meat and drink when He was hungry and thirsty. And they had clothed Him when He was naked, and had come unto Him when He was sick and in prison. They are the ones who didn't even realize that they had done a good work. These are the children of God. They are made to commit all unto God and shall never be disappointed because He keeps His own. He promised that He would never leave you nor forsake you. And He cannot lie or fail in a promise.

This also makes me think of the woman spoken of in Revelation chapter 12. If not deceived, this woman represents the church of the living God. She was persecuted by the dragon, who is the devil. It is written, "And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished for a time and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent." The wilderness is where the church is found, even where Jacob was found. Of God and Jacob it was written, "He found him in a desert land, and in a waste howling wilderness; he led him about, he instructed him, he kept him as the apple of his eye." The church, or the assembly of God's children, is carried by God into a desert land where it is nourished for a time and times and half a time, even as the widow and her son were preserved long ago. I am made to believe that this period of time is the same as the length of the drought in the days of Elijah, and that it stands for the total time from the beginning of the church until the coming of Christ to receive her to Himself. This, to me, is the same as the thousand years reign of Christ in his people, the church. It is the total time of the drought in the desert land where the church is placed and nourished, or the time when Jesus is not bodily with His people. It is also the span of time when He is with them in the Spirit prior to His coming bodily in great power and glory. It is evident that the drought is in the land, not in the church, because the church is nourished and sustained there.

In conclusion I must say that the pure religion that is undefiled before God the Father is the only true religion. It is altogether of grace and none of works. All other religions are false and counterfeit and worthless before God, like the religion of Cain. Only the little children of God ever have a part in the pure religion that is undefiled before God the Father, as did Abel. They are the only ones that are given to know the identity of the widows and the fatherless. Only they are enabled to understand the extent of the afflictions and persecutions of God's children as they travel in this world of wickedness. Only they are enabled to comfort and strengthen and encourage one another in the gospel of the grace of our Lord Jesus the Christ, as they travel together along the way. To them only is it revealed, from faith to faith, what the children of God must suffer. Only they are taught by experience of the hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and what it is to be poor and miserable and naked and blind spiritually. Only they have been given knowledge of what it is to be sin sick and in prison and under the bondage of Satan. Only those who have been generated of God are enabled to see and to enter into the spiritual kingdom and to embrace one another in it. Only God's little ones have the experience of passing from death to life, and being made to truly love their brethren. Only they are blessed to lay down their lives for one another, and to cast themselves upon the mercy and grace of God for their keeping. They are the only ones that "are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time."

May The God of heaven and earth give us a spiritual understanding of these things. May God be praised in all things, world without end. This was written in love and in hope of eternal life.

ARTICLES

David prayed "Show me a token for good" (Psalm 86:17). The Lord's people, as David, desire and pray that the Lord may show them a token for good that will strengthen and revive their hope in the Lord. They are often cast down in spirit with fears and doubts and made to wonder as the poet:

"Tis a point I long to know;
Oft, it causes anxious thought
Do I love the Lord or no?
Am I his, or am I not"

God's children often feel that they are deceived in their hope of eternal life. They see not in themselves the evidences of grace, no "tokens for good." But one should not think that because he sees not his tokens, he therefore has none. These tokens or evidences are often hidden from God's people for the trying of their faith. When the Lord is pleased to exercise the faith and hope in a child of grace, his heart is stirred to humbly cry unto the Lord his God to show him a token for good. The Lord always answers the prayers that He causes His children to pray, but not always in the manner or way they think. John Newton expressed this in a hymn:

"I asked the Lord that I might grow
In faith, love, and every grace; Might more of his salvation know,

And seek more earnestly his face.
Twas he who taught me thus to pray;
And he, I trust, has answered prayer;
But it has been in such a way
As almost drove me to despair."

Dear child of God, do you feel that if a saint, you are the least of all and the chief of sinners? Have you been made to cry "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Do you feel your vileness and the exceeding sinfulness of your sins? Do you hunger and thirst after righteousness? If so then you are blessed of the Lord. These are tokens for good. Is it your desire to be brought near unto the Lord, to rejoice in Him, and to feel His abiding presence?

God is nearest to His children when He seems far away. "The LORD is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart, and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit." Is not a broken and contrite spirit an infallible token for good? As the angel troubled the water of the pool Bethesda which cured the first that stepped in, so the Lord troubles the souls of His people first and then comes unto them with healing in His wings.

The Lord does give unto His children tokens for good as needed to encourage them as they travel in this wilderness world. We do feel to give thanks unto the Lord for all His tender mercies.

In Hope,
Elder Ralph Dale

CHURCHES OF OUR FAITH

SPRING GREEN PRIMITIVE BAPTIST CHURCH

Spring Green Primitive Baptist Church, located between Robersonville and Hamilton (Martin County North Carolina) recently received historic designation placing the structure on Martin County's Historic Church Trail. This recognition was made possible through the Martin County Tourism Development Association which is paying tribute by placing a historical marker on ten churches throughout the county who have made significant contributions to the religious and cultural history of the area.

Although the Spring Green Primitive Baptist Church (Kehukee Association) discontinued holding meetings in the early 1980's, the church and adjoining cemetery continue to be maintained thanks to the ongoing efforts of a preservation group. The Spring Green Preservation Fund. The church property is owned by descendants of the late Elder W.E. Grimes whose ministerial services spanned 1936-1968. The Grimes family along with numerous other individuals with ties to the church have worked diligently to upkeep and maintain the property.

Spring Green Primitive Baptist Church was constituted in the year of our Lord 1811 with a group of seventeen members. They called Elder William Hyman to be the church's first pastor. According to records the first church building was a log structure which had a dirt floor. The building was enlarged around the year 1851 but later was destroyed by fire. It was after this tragic loss that on Dec 14, 1878 Brother Franklin and Sister Ida Taylor deeded five acres of land to the church for the construction of a new house of worship.

It is thought that the present building was built on the site where the first church burned and ultimately the congregation moved across the road and built the present day structure. Church records indicate the building was completely erected in a three week time span. At one time the church was considered the largest Primitive Baptist Church in the state of North Carolina. In 1885 the membership of the church was 100. The Kehukee Association of which Spring Green was a part once consisted of 41 churches, none of which are in existence today except in the minds and hearts of many old Baptist brethren.

Among numerous Elders fondly recalled who once served Spring Green are Elder George D. Roberson, who is also buried in the nearby cemetery. As an example of what a great impact the church had upon the religious and spiritual life of the community it was not unusual for the Kehukee Association's annual meeting attendance to exceed 5,000 people.

In more recent years the church was served by Elders Ephraim C. Harrison and W.E. Grimes.

POEM FROM AS THE DAYS OF A TREE

By Sister Edrie Clifton

GROWING OLD

They call it "going down the hill"
when we are growing old,
They speak with mournful accents
when our tale is nearly told.
They sigh when talking of the past,
the days that used to be,
As if the future were not bright with immortality.

But it is not going down,
'tis climbing high and higher
Until we almost see the mountains that our souls desire.
For if the natural eye grows dim,
it is but dim to earth,
While the eye of faith grows keener to discern the Saviour's worth.

Who would exchange the shooting blade,
for the waving golden grain?
Or if the corn was fully ripe,
would wish it green again?
And who would wish the hoary head,
found in the way of truth,
To be again encircled with the sunny locks of youth?

AS THE DAYS OF A TREE

For though in truth the outward man must perish and decay
The inward man shall be renewed by grace from day to day.
Those who are planted by the Lord
unshaken in the root,
Shall in their old age flourish and bring forth this choicest fruit.

It is not years that make us old,
the spirit may be young,
Though fully threescore years and ten the wheels of life have run.
God hath Himself recorded in the blessed words of truth
That they who wait upon the Lord
Shall e'er renew their youth.

And earth dimmed eyes shall open clear to see the Heavenly King,
And ears now dull with age shall hear
the song the angels sing;
And when the hoary head shall wear the more than crown of gold,
Then shall we know the holier joys of never growing old.

VOICES OF THE PAST

THE ATONEMENT.

NEW VERNON, N. Y., August 28, 1833.

PERHAPS among all the rich displays of the adorable God head which shine forth with refulgent brightness in the works of creation, providence and grace, none can be found to out shine in splendor, or outweigh in importance, that which develops the purpose and grace of God in causing his sword to awake against the Man that is his Fellow, and which sets forth the atonement made by our Lord Jesus Christ for his people.

No human talent can express, nor human wisdom comprehend, the fulness of this delightful doctrine; in the contemplation of which, the rich association of considerations flowing into the mind of the saints, are such as to absorb the mind in wonder and admiration. In our feeble efforts to declare what we have been taught by the word and Spirit of God on this subject, we know not where to begin, how to pursue, or where to leave off. The atonement has God for its author, Jesus Christ for its victim, or sacrifice, the salvation of the elect of God for its object, eternal truth for its security, and almighty power for its execution. In the atonement all the attributes of Deity are displayed glowing inexpressible beauty and grandeur.

In the eleventh number of this volume, we gave a summary view of the doctrine of the total depravity and just condemnation of fallen man, in which we traced his history from primeval rectitude and innocency, through his unhappy fall, and by an application of divine truth showed that he, in his fallen state, is" dead in trespasses and sins, "justly condemned by the righteous and inflexible law of God, and under its tremendous curse; without an eye to pity, or an arm to administer relief. There we left him, promising that in the present article we would treat upon the only possible way of salvation, brought to light through the atonement of our Lord Jesus Christ, which we promised to prove by the scriptures to be special and particular.

Notwithstanding the frequent occurrence of the word atonement in the Old Testament, we find it used but once in the New Testament, viz: Romans v., where it is brought forward by the apostle as the ground of the justification of the church of God, and of reconciliation to God. "But God commendeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him. For if while we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life. And not only so, but we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement." In the light of this scripture we clearly discover that the atonement of our Lord Jesus Christ was definite. Definite first, in reference to the purpose of God. The specific objects ascribed to God by the apostle are the commendation of his love toward those who are with himself included in the pronoun us, and in connection with this divine exhibition, their justification by his blood, and ultimate salvation through him. Second, the characters for whom the atonement was made are definitely pointed out, viz: they are those who do eventually rejoice in God, through Christ Jesus, and by him receive the atonement.

Third, the vicarious nature of the atonement is definitely expressed in the connection, "Who was delivered for our offences, (agreeing with the prophet Daniel, that Messiah should be cut off, but not for himself,) and raised again for our justification." For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly. For scarcely for a righteous man will one die, yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die. But God commended his love, &c, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.

Here we discover that the people for whom Christ was made an offering were sinners, without strength, &c., and as sinners they were condemned and under sentence of death by the law. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." The irrevocable decree has passed! Heaven and earth should pass away, but not one jot or tittle of the law should fail until it should be completely fulfilled. But while this was our deplorable situation," in due time Christ died for us." But how for us? Most certainly in our room. For if he had not borne the curse for us, we certainly must have borne it, and sunk down forever under its weight. We cannot conceive how this substitution can destroy the relation which Christ as a spiritual Head bears to his church, but rather, in our view of the subject, it opens the way to make a fair display of that unity and oneness which has ever existed between them in a spiritual sense. "And he is the head of the body, the church, &c., and having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him I say, whether they be things in earth or things in heaven." "And you, that were some time alienated, and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled." — Col. i. 18-21.

"When in the contemplation of the atonement and redemption of our Lord Jesus Christ, the" man in Christ" is caught up to the third heaven, and is there made acquainted with, those divine mysteries which cannot be expressed by human tongues; and amidst the glorious scenery of that bright world, his eye is fixed on one who was as "A Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," he is led to inquire, "Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth the winefat?" "Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows; he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed. All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned everyone to his own way, and the Lord hath laid on. him the iniquity of us all." — Isaiah liii.

The design of the atonement was that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." — Titus ii. 14.

The extent of the atonement is to all the elect. "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect" It is God that justifieth — who is he that condemneth! It is Christ that died," &c.— Rom. viii. 33, 34. "I am the good Shepherd. The good shepherd layeth down his life for the sheep." — John x. 11. To all the seed of our Lord. "When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand. He shall see of the travail of his soul and shall be satisfied. By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many, for he shall bear their iniquities. Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong; because he hath poured out his soul unto death, and he was numbered with the transgressors, and he bore the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors." Isaiah liii. 10-12.

"Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself;" &c. — Eph. v. 24-27.

"Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to sins should live unto righteousness." — 1 Peter ii. 24. "This is my blood in the New Testament, which is shed for many, for the remission of sins." — Matt. xxvi. 28. "I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me."— Gal. ii. 20. By the above, together with many other portions of the word of God, it is evident that God had a specific object in view in the pouring out of the soul of his Son unto death, which special object was the redemption and ultimate salvation of his elect.

The efficacy of the atonement. "By one offering he has forever perfected them that are sanctified." Heb. x. 14. —

"Therefore the redeemed of the Lord shall (not may) return, and come with singing unto Zion, and everlasting joy shall be upon their heads; they shall obtain gladness and joy, and sorrow and mourning shall flee away." — Isaiah li. 11; xxxv 10. "And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their head; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." And he voice of the Father is heard in Zion proclaiming, "As for thee, also, by the blood of thy covenant, I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water." — Zech. ix. 11. "For if when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life." — Rom. v. 10. "By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many, for he shall bear their iniquity." — Isa. liii. 11. "By his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us." — Heb. ix. 12. "In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins." — Col. i. 14. "Feed the church of God.

which he hath purchased with his own blood." - Acts xx. 28. "Thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation."— Rev. v. 9.

We have not room here to meet and rebut the arguments generally adduced in favor of a general or universal atone ment; we shall however resume the subject at our earliest leisure. We intend in our next number to present our views on the doctrine embraced in the sixth item of our prospectus, viz: the sovereign, irresistible, and in all cases effectual work of the Holy Ghost, in quickening the elect of God.

HISTORICAL

In the July 1,1972, issue of Zion's Landmark,an account was given on the life of Elder John Tanner by a man named Dawson of Windsor,N.C. Dawson had previously threatened the life of any minister who baptized his wife.This attempt was made in the year 1777 after Elder Tanner had administered the ordinance of baptism to Sister Dawson.Elder Tanner was seriously wounded.Through the mercy of God,he recovered from gunshot wounds after a period of several week's confinement.

In that article, a portion of the Editor's footnote reads as follows, "Psalms 76:10 reads, "Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee: the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain." In the above instance, it was not the will of God to restrain the wrath of man. If the Lord will we hope to publish another instance of similar circumstance where the Lord restrained the wrath of man. This instance, the Lord will, shall appear in another issue of the Landmark" The latter instance occured during the lifetime and ministry of Elder Wilson Thompson. It is taken from pages 189-196 of his autobiography as follows:

A small Bible, Rippin's Hymn-book, and Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress constituted my library, and, up to the time I was thirty years old,I had never read any other books, notes, or comments on the scripture. My reading was always very slow. I had to stop frequently, and read it over and over again, so as to be sure I understood the writers meaning;and then I would carefully persue his arguments and illustrations, always trying to study but one subject at a time. This has always been my way of reading. Whenever asked for my opinion on any text and could not at the time call up the connection where it stood, I have always refused to give an explanation, at least any further than a probable meaning. But when I had the whole connection and thread of the subject on my mind, I would give my explanations with confidence. On the general doctrines, professed and advocated by the Baptists, I have no doubts of their correctness and truth; nor have I doubted for over half a century, If I was as sure that I was savingly embraced in that system of grace, as I am that it is the only system in which any sinner of Adam's fallen race can ever be saved, then I should never doubt at all.

The good work, before spoken of, continued about eighteen months. I can only give some special sketches that occurred while I remained in that territory. During the services I baptized four or five hundred subjects, some old and some young, and some white and some black; but all professed to be sinners, and to trust in Christ as their Saviour. They renounced all hope and confidence in any work of their own, or ability to fulfill any conditions by which they could ever be saved. Their trust was placed in Christ, male and female, black and white, and all were joined together and animated by one spirit,having been called in "one hope of their calling,"and having "one Lord, one faith, and one baptism."

The country was new and but thinly settled, but the congregations were immense, day and night. I will here relate one event: Judge Green, a wealthy man, had a number of negroes as his servants,and who was a very respectable citizen, but was an avowed infidel who kept racehorses and was a great sportsman, had one servant whose name was Dick. Dick's business was to attend to the stock and race horses, and especially to wait upon his young mistresse when they rode out. The judge's daughters had attended my singing school, and appeared to be inclined in my favor, and would frequently attend my meeting. Dick was always with them, and was so attentive and polite they thought very much of him. At one of our church meetings Dick came forward and related an experience that no one could dispute, and he was received for baptism. The church proposed to send a committee to ask the judge's consent for Dick to be baptized. I told them I should not oppose the Church,but it was a course of conferring with flesh and blood that I could not find in my book; and I did not believe it was proper for us to ask an unbeliever, whether a believer might serve and obey his Lord or not. If Judge Green or any other master, father, guardian, or husband came forward and offered an objection, the Church ought then to consider it, and act as duty should dictate under the circumstances; but for a Church to go hunting for objections in the world, it would be rather strange if they did not find them. I, for one did not feel willing to have anything to do in any such course. If objections were made I was then willing to give them all the consideration they merited, and would labor to remove them. However a committee was appointed, and they went to see the Judge. They reported on their return, that he said Dick was his property, and he made them his witnesses to tell me that if I laid my hands on his property to throw it into the water, he would push the law upon me to its utmost extent. When the report was made I observed to the Church: "So much for consulting with the world and hunting for their objections. I should not have feared the laws of this free government, even here in a territory, where ten years ago the liberty of conscience was not allowed. But now, the Judge has full testimony that I was forbid to lay hands on his property, or to put it in the water. Now if I should trespass I will be liable to the law."

The next Sunday, when the others were baptized, poor Dick was not allowed to attend the meeting, nor for two or three months afterward. One Sunday,when I was about to dismiss the meeting, I heard a call behind me. Looking out at the window, back of the pulpit, I saw Dick holding up a bundle of clothes in his hand. Said he:" I want to be baptized." I told him to walk around and come in at the door. He did so, and I met him before the pulpit. Said I: "Dick what do you want?" Said he:" I want to be baptized,sir." "Has your master given you liberty?" "No,sir." "Do you wish to disobey your master? The good book says: "Servants, obey your masters." "I got two masters, sir; one is greater than the other. My great Master says to me, 'be baptized'; but my other master (Green) says; 'you shall not be baptized.' Now sir, I can not obey both; and I wish to obey my greatest Master, and also to obey master Green in all things when his commands do not forbid the commands of my greater Master," "Dick, do you not expect that your Master Green will whip you if you are baptized?" "Yes, sir, but my great Master says, "Fear not him; that can kill the body, but fear him that can destroy both soul and body in hell" "have you concluded, Dick, to lay your back bare to your master's lash, rather that disobey your Master in heaven?" "Yes, sir; Master green will not even kill the body; and I love my Master in heaven, and I want to obey him." "Well Dick, the Church has received you for baptism; so, if you are not afraid of your master Green's whip, I am not afraid of his law, and I will baptize you." All of this was said aloud, so as to be distinctly heard by all that were in the house. Though the house was crowded, all were as still as death. Dicks two mistresses were present, and heard it all. I turned round and said: "Can anyone forbid water, that this man shall not be baptized?" Some of the brethren said, very low to me: "We fear you are running a great risk. I replied:" I am not afraid, for I believe the Lord has ordered this matter,and I have nothing to fear. 'The wrath of man shall praise Him,and the remainder of wrath He will restrain' "I took up my hymn-book and said:" We will now repair to the water for baptism."

The water was near the house; and I took Dick by the hand and started the song: "Am I a soldier of the cross?" All the congregation followed, and many voices joined in the song; and then, with the usual ceremonies, baptized him. As we came up out of the water, I gave him the right hand of fellowship, in behalf of the Church as a full member; and the brethren and sisters crowded in and gave him their hands as a brother.His young mistresses went to the water and saw it all. The scene was so solemn and deeply affecting. The young Misses green waited for Dick to change his clothes, and to get their horses. On their way home they began to conjecture, as I afterward heard, how and what they should do in this matter. Said they: "we respect Mr. Thompson, and do not want father to trouble him; and Dick is so ready at all times to serve us, we do not want him whipped." They, finally, concluded not to say anything about it, and thought, perhaps no one else would, and so their father would not know of it, at least for sometime. All passed off quietly for several weeks, when one evening the Judge came home, apparently in a fine humor. He began speaking in very high terms of Dick, as servant, saying "Dick has always been one of my best servants, but for some weeks past he has been better than usual, The horses shine from his rubbung and attending them, late and early and he keeps things in the very best of order. The girls concluded that this was the time to tell him about Dick. One of them said: "Father, we can tell you what has made Dick so much better of late." "What has done it?" said he. "Why, Father, a few weeks ago we were at Bethel, at meeting,and Mr. Thompson baptized Dick; and they all had such a nice time, and Dick seemed so very happy when they all gave him their hand and called him brother." "Did you see Mr Thompson baptize him?" "Yes sir,we saw it all." "Well," said the Judge, "I wish to God he would baptize all my negroes, if it would make them all as good as Dick." Here ended the lawsuit, the whipping, and all complaints about the dipping. Dick was again allowed to go to meeting whenever he pleased. His master provided him with good clothes, and all that was necessary for his comfort; also a horse to ride,and allowed him to go and come when he chose, and to work when he pleased. When Dick's master was about to die, he put him under the guardianship of his son who was to amply provide for all his needs. Dick remained the same obedient servant, but never failed to attend meeting. I saw him many years afterward, when on a visit to Missouri. He was then getting old,was well dressed, had his horse to ride to meetings and seemed to enjoy himself well, even better than if he had been set free for he had all the liberties of a free man.

Dick lived long a beloved brother in the Church, and an honored servant in his master's house, and respected by all who knew him. Obedience is the path for the Christian, who should leave all consequences with God, for then he will have nothing to fear. "To obey is better than sacrifice: "but to take counsel of any enemy brings a snare." Truly a rich experience!

THANKSGIVING

We desire to be thankful for all the blessings both natural and spiritual we have enjoyed since we first learned by experience that all good and perfect gifts come "down from the Father of Lights in whom there is no variableness nor a shadow of turning." We especially are thankful for a home, country and a God — a country where we are not afraid to lie down and can sleep, where we can meet and worship God according to the dictates of our own conscience, where there is none to molest or make us afraid. The prophets wrote and spoke of that day. Early Christians never saw that day. When Constantine reversed the order of former Emperors of Rome and made Christianity the state religion, the true church took wings and flew away to the wilderness to the Piedmont regions only to be followed by the Emperor Constantine and hunted down and slaughtered, their property destroyed and their land laid waste, for no other reason than because they refused to worship God according to the rules prescribed by this church hierarchy which claimed to be Christ on earth.

Religious freedom was never known until the words of prophecy which said "They shall worship God under their own vine and fig tree,"was written in the constitution of this great country of ours. Until printing was discovered the common people remained in ignorance. Bibles were few and kept by those who purposed to keep the people in ignorance, especially of the holy scriptures.

After the discovery of printing, books became cheaper and more plentiful, but the scriptures were of no use to the common people as they were printed in Greek or Latin and the people could not read them.

John Wycliffe, of England, is styled the "morning star of the Reformation," for he translated the Bible out of the original Greek into the English language so that the people could read and know what they taught and not have to get others to interpret them. The discovery of printing and the translation of the Bible led the people to think for themselves, and they questioned the divine right of kings to rule them as they saw fit,and they refused to allow priests and other high dignitaries to write their articles of faith for them. This was the beginning of the Reformation, which was to deluge the continent of Europe in blood, as the hierarchy was in no mood to allow the common people the great blessing of religious freedom. In due time America had been discovered embracing fifteen million square miles of the earth's surface and was barren of human beings except a few thousand Indians who lived mostly on the natural products of the earth.

We learn that after the floods when the partitioning of the continents took place that Asia was largely given to Shem, Africa largely given to Ham and Europe largely to Japheth; but when Noah had aroused from his drunken stuper and found out what his youngest son had been doing to him, he said, "Cursed be Canaan for he shall be a servant of servants unto his brethren: God shall enlarge Japheth, he shall dwell in the tents of Shem and Canaan shall be his servant."

Japheth received Europe, the smallest of the continents, but God enlarged him and the descendent of Japheth received the two new continents so lately discovered, and he came to dwell in the tents of Shem (the Indians) and Canaan (The negro) became his servants.

The people of God, of whom the world was not worthy, who were so horribly persecuted, killed, and mangled in the most horrible manner for no crime they had done except their struggle for the freedom of conscience, left their homes in the various countries of Europe and, after spending two to three months on the ocean in their tiny ships, landed on the shores of a new world, where they built log chapels to worship God in their own way.

They endured all manner of hardships patiently without ever thinking of going back to the land that had cast them out. They toiled, they built, cut down the forest, fought Indians and reared up a structure that has ever been the wonder and admiration of the world.

They reversed the order of the land from whence they came. They closed their offices for servants to the individuals, states and the nations, while the common people reserved to themselves the right to rule; they jealously guarded their liberties in their constitution, excluded the tyrant, but gave full liberty of speech and a free press;giving all the right to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience and left the conscience of every one free.

By the grace of God this is what they did, and left us a glorious heritage which I sometimes think we are not worthy of. It is a most sacred duty of every person to be strictly loyal to their God and their country.

AN INTERESTING BIT OF HISTORY

Elder Charles W. Vaughn, pastor of Hopewell Old School Baptist Church, recently read to his congregation an interesting bit of history concerning the baptism of George Washington. It was from "The Witness of Spirits, "by James W. Zackery, in part as follows: "George Washington, the father of our country, was reared an Episcopalian, but had learned the way of the Lord more perfectly, and when he saw Elder Gano, his chaplain, who was holding a meeting with soldiers, and taking candidates to the river to baptize them, he exclaimed, I have never been scripturally baptized, and demanded immersion at the hands of his chaplain. Elder John Gano immersed George Washington in the Potomac River in the presence of about forty persons."

Elder John Gano was born in Hopewell, N.J., July 22, 1727. He was of French descent, and received his education at Hopewell Academy. He was ordained to the ministry in Hopewell Church May 26, 1754.

From there he moved to Morristown, and after two years to Yadkin, N.C., where he succeeded in establishing a large church, which was discontinued during the war of 1756. Elder Gano then returned north with his family, owing to the ravage of the Indians. Mrs Mary Gano, ninety-nine years old, the great grandmother of former Secretary of State William J. Bryan, is a granddaughter of Elder Gano.

WELSH TRACT OLD SCHOOL BAPTIST CHURCH.

Following are extracts from a history of the Bicentenial Celebration of the Church October 19, 1903. With characteristic Welsh determination, these saints of God,in time of war and danger, worshiped in this building with stacked arms, seeking God in humility, yet with brave hearts, ready for all that awaited them in the providence of their God. And now, their prosperity is a living witness of the power of their faith. For the past seventy-one years [1903] since the memorable meeting which convened at Black Rock, Md., (Sept. 28, 1832,) this church, with many others, has been designated as "Old School or Primitive Baptists." They have been hated and persecuted because they "continued steadfastly in the Apostles' doctrine,"and went(Not)in the way of Cain"and "ran (Not)greedily after the error of Balaam for reward"... In the spring of 1701, sixteen Baptists, in the counties of Pembroke and Carmarthen, South Wales, resolved to go to America. They formed themselves into a church with Thomas Griffith one of their number, as Pastor. They embarked at Milford Haven in June, 1701, arriving in Philadelphia Sept. 8, the same year... In the cemetery surrounding this building sleep the successive generations which have in their time and turn worshipped in this place. The present meeting-house is of brick, brought from Wales, and conveyed from the boat at New Castle to this place on pack mules.

In the order of their succession, the names of the Pastors are as follows: Thomas Griffith, Elisha Thomas, Enoch Morgan, Owen Thomas, David Davis, John Suttan, John Boggs, Gideon Farrell, Samuel Trott, W. K. Robinson, Thomas Barton, George W. Staton, John C. Sawin, Joseph L. Staton, William Grafton, John G. Eubanks, and now served by Elder H.H. Lefforts, J.B. Miller, Church Clerk.

And now we feel that the highest tribute we can pay to this old Welsh Tract Church, and its sister churches, is that they "continue steadfastly in the apostle's doctrine." And as the generations multiply that go in and out at this place, may God continue to be glorified, and His name be exalted and have all the praise.

Note the time Elder Samuel Trott was Pastor in 1863, (resident in Fairfax, Va.) was arrested in '63 or '64, and during a parole given him at the time, from Washington, he visited our yearly mee ting in October,and was moderator of the Salisbury Assn. which follows our meeting the next week. Oh for such giants as those old writers and preachers in days gone by. While we have a few yet with us, and good ones, but far between.

Welsh Tract Church entertained the Delaware River Assn. May 19th, Baltimore 25th, 26th, and Delaware River 29th and 30th. I attended Black Rock all day meeting which follows Baltimore, Sunday June 2nd. Elders H. H. Lefforts and D. L. Topping, Pastor were the only preachers, but that was sufficient, as they both preached the unsearchable riches of Christ to the edification of many present. Hopewell celebrated their 230th Anniversary April 23rd, 1940, Elder A. H. Bellows, H. H. Lefforts and C. W. Vaughn, Pastor present.

Yours in hope of mercy,

MY GOD.

"I trusted in thee, O Lord: I said, Thou art my God." --- Ps. xxxi. 14

O Lord! And art thou not my God?
Though Satan dares suggest,
That I've no claim,
My hopes are vain,
And I am sore oppress'd?

O Lord! and art thou not my God?
Though sin and hell agreed,
Thy work deny,
My faith defy,
And gloomy doubts succeed?

O Lord! and art thou not my God?
Though guilty fears arise;
And unbelief.
That cursed thief,
The sacred bond denies!

O Lord! and art thou not my God?
Though darkness intervene,
To hide the grace
Of that dear face
Which I have sometimes seen?

O Lord! and art thou not my God?
E'en though I cannot see
My int'rest clear,
And often fear,
Thou hast not loved me?

O Lord! If thou art not my God,
Why should I grieve and sigh
If thou depart,
Or raise my heart
With joy, when thou art nigh?

O Lord! If thou art not my God,
How came this heart to love?
No love but thine
Could kindle mine,
Or raise my soul above.

O Lord! I've said, Thou art my God!
I'll worship at thy throne;
Till thou deny,
My hopes rely
On thee, my God alone.

O Lord! I've said, Thou art my God!
My Father thee I call;
And thee I'll own,
My God alone,
My everlasting All.

THE GOSPEL STANDARD. JANUARY 1838

Messrs. Editors, — I have reason to bless God for placing within my reach your little work, entitled the Gospel Standard; when it first fell into my hands I welcomed it as good news from a far country, for I was then labouring under very great anxiety of soul, and believing my case to be singular (for I had not heard of any one who had been exercised with such horrid feelings as I was the subject of,) as such I did not venture to divulge the state of my mind; but upon reading your little work, I rejoiced to find there were some whose experience somewhat coincided with my own, who were deemed by more advanced Christians to be vessels of mercy. This seemed to be the day-dawn of hope to my soul; peradventure, said I, the Lord may yet deliver me; and these words came powerfully to my mind, "Search the scriptures, for they testify of me." I did so, and I feel constrained to believe that God the Holy Ghost has, by such means, taught me to profit. The doctrine of election, which I had fought so much against, and from which I would fain have dissuaded both myself and others, I was led to embrace.

I recently heard a sermon from the 16th of Ezekiel, and the 6th verse, which induced me to peruse the chapter, and I was led to exclaim with Thomas, "My Lord and my God!"

The following lines were written at this time; should they be deemed by you worthy of publication, perhaps you will give them a place.

THE BRIDEGROOM AND BRIDE.

Ye poor and ye needy, whoever you be,
Who have just light enough your darkness to see,
Have knowledge enough your sad state to deplore;
But cannot at present true wisdom explore!
'Tis not yea and nay, as some preachers have said,
But yea and amen in Christ Jesus your Head:
If tried and condemn'd though not yet set free,
Despair not! for Jesus says, Look unto me.
Talk not of your fitness, he knows all you've done;
The amount of your sins, he sees the large sum;
It is nought you can do, nor aught you can say,
'Tis believe and be sav'd, yea this is the way!
Mount Sinai's loud thunder which does thee alarm,
Mount Zion shall quiet and hush to a calm:
"God blows with his north wind to bring in the south,
By and by you shall have the sweet kiss of his mouth.
When Jesus pass'd by, I was wounded to death;
Hannah, what aileth thee? I am Jesus, he saith,
I am thy near kinsman, believe me 'tis truth!
Then he spread his skirt o'er me, as Boaz did Ruth.
Now for better or worse, whate'er shall betide,
He said, I'll protect thee, and for thee provide;
A most faithful husband I ever will be;

Thou wast in eternity married to me.
Then fear not, heartbroken, disconsolate soul;
Christ's bride must be wounded before she's made whole,
When she's quite insolvent, both great debts and small,
This glorious bridegroom will answer them all!
He's Alpha, Omega, beginning and end;
He's the first and the last, the sinner's best Friend;
He's a refuge, a rock, a foundation stone;
He's all and in all, sufficient alone

OBITUARIES

GERLINE WORLEY WEATHERFORD

Once again we at Dan River Primitive Baptist Church bow in humble submission to the will of a gracious Lord in removing from our midst our dear precious Sister Gerline Weatherford on May 11, 2017 and thank Him for the 43 years we were blessed with her love and fellowship.

She was born in Sycamore, Virginia on August 28, 1928 to the late Claude Worley and Fannie Dalton Worley. On September 17, 1947 she was married to William (Billy) T. Weatherford who was called from this world on December 6, 1998. They were blessed with 51 years of marriage and a daughter, Cynthia Kiger and a son, David Weatherford (Dianne) who survive her. She was also predeceased by three sisters; Vera Brumfield, Freda Metz, and Virginia Talley. In addition to her daughter and son, those left to mourn her include five grandchildren, Kristy Nash (Jeff), Susan Brown (Chris), Adam Weatherford (Amanda), Bean Weatherford (Kitty), Tricia Gammon (Brent); seven great grandchildren; her sister Audrey Slaughter, her brother J.B. Worley; her sister-in-law, Sister Delores Weatherford and many brethren and sisters in her church family.

Sister Gerline asked for a home with Dan River Church on May 25, 1974 and was joyfully received. She was baptized by Elder David Spangler. Although her husband, Billy, was never blessed to ask for a home with the church, Elder C.B. Davis wrote of him that he felt too unworthy. He built the Anniversary Building at Dan River and faithfully attended services with Sister Gerline not only at Dan River but also at many sister churches and associations. They both were blessed to rejoice in a Saviour's love and to walk humbly and softly among our people. In these latter years Sister Gerline was part of what we all affectionately called the Weatherford sisters. It was she, Ms. Frances Weatherford, and Sister Dolores Weatherford of which only Sister Dolores remains. Although they were not related naturally and had married brothers, they were bound together spiritually and continued to travel together to church even after all of their husbands had passed away. We miss so much seeing the three of them come into church.

Funeral services were conducted by Elder Jimmy Gray at Dan River on May 13, 2017. He was blessed to speak beautifully of what she believed and how the Lord blessed her with His mercy and grace. The lovely Spirit within her, we believe, returned unto the Lord who gave it and her body was laid to rest in the church cemetery by her husband to await those long awaited words of the Heavenly Master, "Come ye blessed of my Father and inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Though we miss her immensely, we believe that the kind, gracious Master has taken but his own. May the Lord bless her family and those of us, so wonderfully blessed to walk with her in the love and fellowship of Christ, with the comfort that only He can give. In all things may all honor and glory be ascribed unto His great and holy name.

Humbly submitted by one who loved her dearly,

Mary Hawkins

HYMN

Glorious things of thee are spoken,
Zion, city of our God!
He whose word cannot be broken,
With salvation's walls surrounded,
Form'd thee for his abode:
On the rock of ages founded,
What can shake thy sure repose?
Thy may'st smile at all thy foes.

See! the streams of living waters,
Springing from eternal love,
Well supply thy sons and daughters,
And all fear of want remove.
Who can faint, while such a river
Ever flows their thirst t' assuage?
Grace, which, like the Lord, the giver,
Never fails from age to age.

Round each habitation hovering,
See the cloud and fire appear,
For a glory and a covering,
Showing that the Lord is near.
Thus deriving from their banner,
Light by night, and shade by day,
Safe they feed upon the manna
Which he gives them by the way.

Blessed inhabitants of Zion,
Washed in the Redeemer's blood!

Jesus, whom their souls rely on,
Makes them kings and priests to God:
'Tis his love his people raises
Over self to reign as kings;
And as priests, his solemn praises
Each for a thank-offering brings.

Newton.

Matthews 12:31-32, "Wherefore I say unto you, all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men: but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men. And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him: but, whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come."

Elder Cleo D. Robertson

As with all scripture, the Lord must reveal the meaning to us or we have no understanding of it. There have been many different thoughts expressed on the meaning of this scripture. It is my prayer and hope that the Lord will give us understanding to set forth the truth.

First of all we must understand to whom the Lord is speaking for He said "I say unto you." Who is the "you"? The scripture in Matthews 12:22-25 makes it clear that He was speaking to the Jews and specifically to the Pharisees. It reads as follows: "Then was brought unto him one possessed with a devil, blind, and dumb: and He healed him, insomuch that the blind and dumb both spake and saw. And all the people were amazed, and said, Is not this the son of David?

But when the Pharisees heard it, they said, this fellow doth not cast out devils, but by Beelzebub the prince of the devils." All the people (Jews) who said "Is not this the son of David" did not blaspheme the Holy Ghost, but the Pharisees and Scribes who accused Him of having a devil did blaspheme the Holy Ghost. Mark writes in Chapter 3:30 that Jesus said what He said because they said He had an unclean spirit.

Secondly, since these Pharisees and Scribes were under the commandments and ordinances of the law, we read in Leviticus 24:13-16: "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Bring forth him that hath cursed without the camp; and let all that heard him lay their hands upon his head, and let all the congregation stone him. And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying, whosoever curseth his God shall bear his sin. And he that blasphemeth the name of the Lord, he shall surely be put to death, and all the congregation shall certainly stone him: as well the stranger, as he that is born in the land, when he blasphemeth the name of the Lord, shall be put to death." There was no forgiveness. Jesus tells them "O generation of vipers, how can ye, being evil, speak good things? For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." He also replied to them "How can Satan cast out Satan?"

In the 10th chapter of John verse 24, the Jews were round about Jesus and said unto Him "How long doest thou make us to doubt? If thou be the Christ, tell us plainly." Jesus said He had told them and they believed not. He told them that they believe not because they were not of His sheep. He said He knows His sheep and they know His voice. They follow Him and He gives them eternal life.

Under the covenant of Grace, His elect experiences a condemnation for their sins and a death to the things of the world. By the law is the knowledge of sin. The law of sin and death is applied to the hearts of His people and sin abounds to them. For the first time they see themselves as lost and hell-deserving sinners. This is the Lord's work and man cannot do it. They are made to cry "O wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Then, where sin abounded, grace did much more abound. Now "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus (Grace) hath made me free from the law of sin and death." "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." You who were baptized (spiritually) into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death. Therefore you are buried with him by baptism into death. As Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, so you shall walk in newness of life. You have experienced a death to the things of the world and a resurrection to a newness of life.

As the Apostle wrote "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." These are His sheep.

May the Lord bless you with comfort, strength and peace.

A little one in hope,
Elder Cleo Robertson

CORRESPONDENCE

Dear Brother Tony, Elder Robertson, Elder Farmer. I feel so very helpless to pen anything down. The Lord said that he would never leave or forsake his own. Whether I'm one of his I don't know. One thing I have been given to know that is that I am a sinner, the chief of sinners. I often wonder why I have done some of the things that I have done. It had to be to let me know what I am a sinner by nature, and by practice. We are born in sin, shapen in iniquity. I don't know why the good Lord has been so good to a poor sinner that I am, and why I have been so blessed to have been brought to know so many wonderful people. I'm not worthy to even be among them. I am the last surviving member, at Hillsdale Primitive Baptist Church, which was established in 1784. I would like to extend an invitation to all who have been given a desire to meet with us. Our service is held the second Sunday each month, beginning at 10:30 A.M. The good Lord has a way of drawing his people together. Not anyway; the way. The world cannot see this. He said it was hidden from the wise, and the prudent, but revealed unto babes. A babe is completely helpless to do anything for themselves, either naturally, or spiritually. Please forgive my rambling, and so many mistakes. Thank you for putting up with me. I have been so blessed to have been brought to know you all, and am not worthy to even be among any of you.

I want to renew my subscription for two years. Use what is left for whatever you see fit. I can't name all of the free gifts I have received in each of you, but hope to be thankful for each of you. My God given prayer is that we may be brought even closer together through Christ. Hope to see you real soon.

Remember this poor wretch, when at the throne of Grace, An unworthy brother, if one at all.

In bonds of love,
James Knight

CIRCULAR LETTER

The Church at Oak Grove sends our love and fellowship to all those of like precious faith throughout the country, and we trust this letter will be received as a warm welcome from our little flock to yours. We desire to nurture the friendship and fellowship of those little ones we believe to be true followers of the Lord Jesus Christ as they sojourn here in this world, seeking for a house "not made with hands," and looking for a city "whose builder and maker is God, our Saviour." We believe Jesus Christ is the Son of the Living God, and that He created a world wherein He chose to have a peculiar people (a chaste bride) for Himself, and at His own appointed time would come into this world, suffer, bleed and die to pay the complete price of redemption for them; His blood being the only pure and acceptable sacrifice to Almighty God, His Father, for their sins and iniquities. His words on the cross, "It is finished" and His resurrection is our confirmation that He indeed accomplished the will of His Father and that His sacrifice was accepted. Therefore, there is now no condemnation to those who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit, and that sacrifice causes His elect to bow down on bended knees, wanting to be filled with thanksgiving, desiring to live an upright life, and ever giving Him ALL the praise, honor, and glory.

The Church at Oak Grove is Old School or Primitive in practice, believing in particular redemption of those chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world. We are independent in our services, not willing to lord over any of God's heritage, always wanting to be at each other's feet and we welcome any of like precious faith to fellowship with us. Our regular services are held on the third Sunday in each month at 10:30 A.M. Our communion service is in September.

The Church at Oak Grove has for many years held an annual meeting the last weekend of March, and this year it falls on the fourth weekend, (24th and 25th) Past meetings have had visitors from West Virginia, Virginia, Texas, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Kentucky, Ohio, California, the Carolinas, and other places. We extend a cordial welcome to all who can come and visit us.

The Church at Oak Grove is located on NC Highway 150 near the community of Churchland, NC. Physical address (for GPS) is above. We are approximately three (3) miles north on NC Hwy 150 from exit 84 on Interstate 85. Those coming from the south will cross the Yadkin river and take exit 84 to NC 150. Those coming from the north may continue on NC Hwy 52 south around Lexington bearing into Interstate 85 and then to exit 84 (before the Yadkin river) to NC 150.

Visitors from a distance usually come into the Quality Inn hotel, 101 Plaza Parkway, at Lexington, NC (Phone 336-243-2929) Some rooms have been set aside for the Oak Grove meeting at a discounted rate. You may call for reservations, or ask the clerk on arrival.

Several of the brothers, sisters and friends gather to meet, greet and fellowship at the hotel on Friday evening, and then, Lord willing, our services will begin on Saturday morning with singing at 9:30 AM and preaching at 10:00 AM. Many go back to the hotel on Saturday evening for singing and fellowship, and then on Sunday, singing at 9:30 AM and preaching at 10:00 AM Lunch will be provided on both days and anyone wanting to bring a dish is welcome but not expected.

Your brothers and sisters in hope.

Editors Note: We did not receive this letter until March 7 and therefore could not put it in the March issue. The March issue had already gone to the printers.

VOICES OF THE PAST

TO THE EDITORS OF THE GOSPEL STANDARD

Dear Brethren, — I lately received a letter from a valued brother in the Lord, a tried and faithful Baptist minister in Suffolk; and being unwilling to feast alone on so rich a display of sound doctrine and experience, I have herewith sent you an extract, and, remain, dear brethren, Yours in the Lord.

Liverpool, 4th Nov. 1837.
William Rushton, Jun.

"The furnace of affliction is, no doubt, wisely appointed for us, and we shall remain in it no longer than it will be beneficial to us. I have sometimes struggled to be taken from it, but am happy that I am resigned, and feel it my privilege to rejoice in tribulation, rather than to be discharged from it. I can say with you that I do not realize that fulness of joy which I desire, but I trust in the promise of life by Christ Jesus. For a few weeks past the Lord has been speaking sweetly and graciously to me by his word, and living by faith has been easy and delightful; easy because: the truth and authority of the divine testimony have been demonstrated to me by the Spirit of Jesus, without my labour or effect; delightful because my soul has rested in God and his salvation. This is the sum and essence of my happiness. I have indeed suffered many conflicts within, and groaned in anguish of heart, because of my innate depravity; yet Jesus, I know, is the fountain of sanctity to me, and while I rely on him as my justifying righteousness, I cherish the persuasion that he will eventually perfect me in holiness, and present me, with his glorious church, without spot before the throne of his glory with exceeding joy.

"Two things encourage me to ask in faith for every spiritual blessing I need. First, the well ordered and everlasting covenant, as containing all my salvation and all that I desire. The second is, the fact that Christ has ascended on high, and received gifts for men, even the rebellious, that the Lord God might dwell amongst them. These, my dear sir, are substantial and immutable grounds of hope and joy. May you and I rest upon them daily, and when the tide of enjoyment turns, may we remember the sweet truth that though we believe not, yet our God is faithful, and will not alter the thing that has gone out of his mouth.

"My health has materially improved within the last few weeks; and from the prayers of my dear friends. I have been impressed with the persuasion that my life is to be continued for the church's sake, that the truth of the gospel may remain in this place. I think no more of myself than as one who has obtained mercy, but as I stand alone in this place to bear witness to Jesus, and to make known his unsearchable riches, he may yet see fit to add to the number of my days, and employ me for his glory. For any other purpose I have no desire to live."

LXVII. LONGING TO BE WITH CHRIST.

To Jesus, the Crown of my hope,
My soul is in haste to be gone:
O bear me, ye cherubim, up,
And waft me away to his throne!

My Saviour, whom absent I love,
Whom, not having seen, I adore;
Whose name is exalted above
All glory, dominion, and power;

Dissolve thou these bonds, that detain
My soul from her portion in thee:
Ah! strike off this adamant chain
And make me eternally free.

When that happy era begins,
When array'd in thy glories I shine,
Nor grieve any more, by my sins,
The bosom on which I recline:

Oh, then shall the veil be removed,
And round me thy brightness be pour'd;
I shall meet him whom absent I loved,
I shall see whom unseen I adored.

And then, never more shall the fears,
The trials, temptations, and woes,
Which darken this valley of tears,
Intrude on my blissful repose.

Or, if yet remember'd above,
Remembrance no sadness shall raise;
They will be but new signs of thy love,
New themes for my wonder and praise.

Thus the strokes which from sin and from pain
Shall set me eternally free,
Will but strengthen and rivet the chain
Which binds me, my Saviour, to thee.

LXVIII. LIGHT SHINING OUT OF DARKNESS.

God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm.

Deep in unfathomable mines
Of never-failing skill,
He treasures up his bright designs,
And works his sovereign will.

Ye fearful saints, fresh courage take,
The clouds ye so much dread
Are big with mercy, and shall break
In blessings on your head.

Judge not the Lord by feeble sense,
But trust him for his grace:
Behind a frowning providence
He hides a smiling face.

His purposes will ripen fast,
Unfolding every hour;
The bud may have a bitter taste,
But sweet will be the flower.

Blind unbelief is sure to err,'
And scan his work in vain:
God is his own interpreter,
And he will make it plain.

AS AN EAGLE
JANUARY, 1950

"As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings: So the Lord alone did lead him, and there was no strange god with him."- Deut. 32:11, 12

Elder Williams of Decatur, Mississippi, has requested views on this scripture. May God bless us with light of thought and liberty of expression to comfort God's little children with some thoughts on the wonderful care God exercises upon His own. We enter into the discussion of this Scripture with a deep felt sense of inability. We fully realize our dependence upon God to stir us up at this time to properly meditate upon this Scripture.

Jacob, who is the "lot of his inheritance" is the object of these expressions. As God dealt with Jacob, He deals with each and every one of His children. Read the context and you will find that Jacob was passive in the hands of a merciful God. It was God who found him; it was God who led him about; it was God who instructed him; it was God who kept him; and it was God who made him ride on the high places of the earth. Jacob could not claim any credit for anything, but must bow to God and realize that it was by God's mercies that he was so wonderfully delivered.

In this text God is likened to an eagle in some of His dealings. The kings of Assyria, Egypt and Babylon were likened unto eagles for their power and dominion. The Chaldean armies were likened unto eagles because of their swiftness. The Edomites exalted themselves and made their nests high as the eagles. It is said that the eagle builds its nest in high places in the tops of the rocks — in the highest rocks which no man can reach. Of course the outer part of the nest is constructed with rough, jagged and thorny material. The innermost part is lined with, smooth, soft matter that affords the eaglets a place of sweet repose. This is certainly a comfortable place of refuge until the nest is stirred up. The soft down that interlines the eagle's nest typifies the seeming righteousness of the flesh and the confidence that the unregenerated child of God has in his own cleanness and ability. He is content with himself and with his place of abode. He is at ease and does not care to venture from this sweet place of self-righteousness and carnal affections. "All the ways of a man are clean in his own eyes."

As the eagle stirs up this soft nest and makes it a bed of thorns to the eaglets, so the Lord stirs up the souls of His people, and makes bare the thorn in the flesh so that their place of sweet repose becomes a miserable place of abode. When God begins His work there is a stirring in the soul that nothing can still, silence, quench or quell this begins with you, you become very greatly alarmed and anxious. This anxiety becomes so miserable that you try to rid yourself of this condition by your own activity. You become just as restless as the eaglets with the same results— the thorns prick you more every turn you make. You are pricked in the heart as those spoken of in Acts 2:37. As the God of Israel stirred up the spirits of the kings of Assyria and prompted them to action, He awakens and disturbs you and causes you to become much concerned over your miserable condition.

Have you ever been awakened to the fact that you are a sinner. Have you made resolutions to better that condition? Have you tried to deliver yourself and found that all your trials availed nothing? Have you been shown that all your righteousness is as filthy rags in God's sight? Have you lost confidence in your own self ? Has there been times that your soul fainted in you and you had no hope in this world or that to come? If you can answer the above questions in the affirmative, (I am persuaded) God has stirred up your nest and has fluttered over you. You have been shaken from that nest and you are falling toward the abyss below. What a fear accompanies this fall! You have nothing to rely upon! You fear the consequences of the jagged rocks and the abyss below which surely means sudden destruction to you! I experienced this falling for many miserable months. I could see nothing before me but this blackness of darkness forever. I was afraid to live and afraid to die. I cried in anguish of soul, "Woe is me! for I am undone!" As the eagle watches the young eaglet as it falls toward the abyss below, I trust that God was watching me. As the eagle swoops down beneath the falling eaglet, "Spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings," I feel that God so dealt with me. What a glad surprise when He came to my rescue!

The thought that God watches us and protects us before regeneration brings to mind that He was the God of Jacob. Jacob is the unregenerate name of Israel. Who is this God of Jacob? The God that gave him the blessing of the birthright though he was a junior; the God that delivered him from the murderous hand of his brother in the day of trouble; the God that protected him and manifested Him self to him; his covenant God. God sometimes says, I am the God of Jacob. This means I am your God before regeneration, as well as after when you attempt to supplant me with proud free will and blunt my sovereignty with your rebellion; when you took my covenant name in a covenant character, I am your God still.

Yes, it was a day of rejoicing when God came to your rescue to prevent you from being utterly destroyed by the jagged rocks and the abyss beneath. He rescued you on His wings of love. He whispered to you, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love: therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee." He informed you that He was a merciful and gracious God. He restored your soul. Jesus informed you that He had fulfilled the law to a jot and tittle for you. He told you that He had taken your sins upon His own shoulder and had paid the penalty, satisfied justice by shedding His own blood for the remission of sins and had died in your stead. He spoke sweet peace to your soul that He had wrought out eternal salvation for you. He put a new song in your mouth that praised God and confessed Jesus as your Savior. You are resting in the sweet embrace of His love. Your soul is absorbed in this experience. You are blessed to exclaim," The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want." You can say with one of old, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." You feel that your worries and fears are in the past and that you will ride forever upon His wings. You can see the Father, Son and Holy Ghost enacting, determining and covenanting for, and mutually swearing each to each for the accomplishment of your salvation. Did this sweet experience continue? No, if your experience coincides with my experience, it did not continue. It was of short duration.

After the eagle rescues the young and bears them comfortably upon her wings for awhile, she tilts her wings and permits them to fall again toward the abyss below. Did God deal with you as the eagle deals with her young? While you were riding joyfully, upon His everlasting love and sweet promises, all was well with your soul. You said, "my God reigneth," and "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever." Then, all at once, you realized that you were again falling toward destruction. The sweet embrace of that love was gone. Your former experience taught you that there was One who did rescue you, but, would He rescue again? You looked for Him but you could not find Him. You sincerely asked, "Will the Lord cast off forever? and will He be favorable no more? Is His mercy clean gone forever? Doth His promise fail forevermore? Hath God forgotten to be gracious? Hath He in anger shut up His tender mercies? (Psalms 77:7-9.) You are falling down, down, down! You yet have a faint hope that almost vanishes away. Just before you would die in despair, God rescues you again from destruction. The wings of God's mercy and love comes underneath you and raises you up, and soars high above the cares and troubles of this world, and you again rejoice because of His amazing grace that can descend low enough to prevent you from dashing your head against a stone. It is our lot to be shaken many times from the wings of God's manifest love and mercy, but He yet cares for us and carefully watches over us.

It is necessary that we be taught again and again of our infirmities and weakness in the flesh and our total dependence upon Him. We are made to cry out so often to Him to be merciful to our unrighteousness. We shall have tribulations and suffer trials and afflictions here in this world, and to realize that, "here have we no continuing city." These joyful experiences are not continuous but are mixtures of joy and sorrow.

We trust that the grace of God enables us to "Press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil. 3:14). At the time when He shall take us upon His wings it will be forever. All will be joyful forevermore. No more trials and tribulations. No more heartaches nor fear of falling into utter destruction. When He takes us upon His wings and carries us into the Holiest of Holies where Jesus dwells we shall forever be satisfied.

HISTORICAL ELDER RALPH (FREE MAN) OR FREEMAN

To those who love and are familiar with the history of the Primitive (or Old School)Baptist Church and people of the United State of America, the name Ralph Freeman will live forever in their hearts, as well as the history and many hallmarks of the church. We wish to bring to memory one of them now.

Ralph Freeman was an early lay member in the antebellum period of the history of our country in Rocky River Church, Anson County, North Carolina, a white church, 5O years before the Civil War. The significance of the identity of this man lies in the fact that the true Gospel of the Son of God, the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ is color blind in the power of the Holy Ghost when it comes to the recognition of this divine truth in the heart of an individual or believer. The power of this Spirit and the Love knows no bounds or limitations when revealed from heart to heart and breast to breast to those that know the joyful sound. Like the unlimited power of God, this true Love is also unlimited on an involuntary basis in its quality and nature, since both know no bounds. They have the same qualities in substance.

In the little town of Ansonville, Anson County, State of North Carolina, (about twenty miles east of Charlotte N.C.) in the edge of the Bethlehem Cemetery of the black or colored portion is the grave of "Ralph." A small pink granite marker is engraved with "Ralph" on top. The simple epitaph or legend on the front of the stone is that he "Died about 1838." It continues, "He was a primitive Baptist preacher of much force and usefulness. His freedom was purchased by Bear Creek Association. Erected 1907,"

From the history of the Sandy Creek Association, dated 1859, "Ralph was a colored man," the volume states, "and at first a slave belonging to a man in Anson, since the Old Sandy Creek Church in those early days was the mother church under the ministry of Shubeal Stearns, the first pastor. This fact made his name well known far afield because of this affiliation. However, in the early 183O's, when the division or separation occurred within the ranks of Baptists Churches everywhere in the United States of America over the question of foreign missions, the majority of the churches in the Old Sandy Creek Association endorsed the "new things of the day, while the minority withdrew and organized the "Bear Creek Association" and the "Abbott's Creek Association" held to the primitive faith and order. It is to be noted and pointed out at this juncture, as the History of the Sandy Creek Baptist Association records, "When the anti-mission party was formed, we have been told that Ralph became an ANTI-MISSIONARY." Hence, Elder Ralph was bound to have been an Old Hardshell Primitive Baptist. (See page 329, Sandy Creek Baptist Church History,) In those days of separation and division in the church, "Ralph took his stand with the Primitive or Old School Baptist people of those old brethren in the Bear Creek association. There must have been a great mutual love of great power in which their hearts were united for the truth's sake for them to have purchased his natural freedom, ordain him to the gospel ministry, and erect and pay for his grave marker.

"There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of Life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Romans 8:1, 2. Those ancient brethren in the Bear Creek Association recognized the gift and calling of "Ralph: and that the law of the Spirit of Life in Christ Jesus had made or set him free from the law of sin and death. Christ had given him his Spiritual freedom, and God gave them mind and with to give him his natural freedom. What an unusual combination of blessings, one without precedent to our knowledge.

There was a Spiritual Love so greatly felt among these brethren for this man in a mutual sense that we are made to see the meaning of the Apostle Paul's language in Romans 8:35,"who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril or sword?" "For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." They must have felt this strongly! Hence, there is no separation or division in the Holy Spirit of God of those things which are of a divine nature, nor of the Holy Ghost who reveals them.

This writer noted the fact about three or four years ago, I cannot remember if it was 1993, or 1994, but in any case the Southern Baptist Convention of Missionary Baptists, meeting in either Dallas, Texas or Atlanta, Georgia apologized to the black people of the United States of America for their part in upholding the institution of slavery in those days of the history of our country, the United States of America, prior to the Civil War. It suddenly came to my mind that the Old School or Primitive Baptist people did not have to wait 128 years after the Emancipation Proclamation to do this since they had already performed the operation about 35 or 40 years earlier or beforehand. That was one time for sure, when the Primitives were ahead of the Missionaries, but the depth of the meaning of this operation was much deeper.

The Sandy Creek Baptist Church History volume states that Elder Ralph was "of common size, was perfectly black, with a smiling countenance or face, especially in the pulpit. He was very humble, very polite in appearance, especially during worship services. He was held in great respect by his peers and those that knew him.

Elder Ralph traveled and preached often in Randolph, Montgomery, Moore, Davidson, and Anson Counties. As an elder he frequently attended business sessions (conferences) in the Sandy Creek Association. He was at Unity Meeting House, Randolph County N.C. attending the annual session of the Sandy Creek Association on October 24, 1807, as a messenger from Rocky River Church, Anson County. The record states that the delegates were "William Durgan and Ralph." In 1807, he was apparently still a slave, although he was a member of the church since he had not been given the surname Free man or Freeman, as proven by this record.

Elder Joseph Magee (Mc Gee), a Baptist minister, became his close friend. The history points out, "Such was their attachment for each other, that they agreed that the surviving one should preach the funeral service of the one that died first. Elder Magee (McGee) moved to the west, and died first. Upon his deathbed, he bequeathed to Ralph his horse, coat, Bible, and $50.00 in cash (a large sun in these days), and requested his family to send for Ralph to come and preach his funeral.

"In the company with a white brother of the church, Ralph went to the West and preached the funeral discourse from a text that the deceased white brother had selected," the history records.

There is a great deal more to the personage of "Ralph Freeman" and perhaps, history will someday out, but one particular footnote not to be forgotten is that after the Civil War (1861-1865), when the N.C. State Legislature passed a law prohibiting men of color from preaching to mixed (black and white congregations), Elder Ralph was greatly mortified, and he had the sympathy of many of his Baptist brethren.

"Ralph was, no doubt a truly pious Soldier of the Cross, having the confidence and esteem of thousands, and he died in the triumph of faith and in the hope of full assurance of blessed immortality," his contemporaries have said of him. This was the indomitable spirit of "Ralph Freeman."

"And they sung a new song, saying Thou art worthy to take the book and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood OUT OF EVERY KINDRED, AND TONGUE, AND PEOPLE, AND NATION: and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth." Revelations 5:9, &10. Ralph Freeman must have been one of them.

So the name of Elder Ralph Freeman will never be forgotten among the true Baptists of the history of time. We are publishing below the exact record (or account) of the life of this man, as it appears in the old history of the Sandy Creek Baptist Association pages 328 & 329. What a privilege and blessing it would have been if we could have known Ralph Freeman in this world. The account of him is the last thing that appears in the book, but it is not the least important by any means in all the pages of all history of all time.

"And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free,"

"If the son, therefore, shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." John 8:32 & 36. The Lord Jesus Christ gave "Ralph "a gift of the truth, gave him the understanding of it, and then gave him the gift to preach and proclaim it. In the process He freed him in two ways, naturally and spiritually, but his spiritual freedom came first because he had been "FREE BORN" from and before the foundation of the world (See Acts 22:28). Christ completely fulfilled to him His ancient promise to His blessed people, and "YE SHALL BE FREE INDEED" John 8:36. All of this was one of God's miracles!

ELDER RALPH FREEMAN

Elder Ralph was a colored man, and at first a slave belonging to a man in Anson County, N.C. Soon after making a profession of religion and being baptized.it was discovered that he had impressions to preach; he was licensed by the church of which he was a member. His owner proposed to sell him, and the brethren bought and gave him his freedom. Soon after this, he was ordained to the full work of the ministry. He traveled and preached a great deal in the counties of Anson, Montgomery, Moore, Randolph, and Davidson, North Carolina. He became a good reader, and was well read in the scriptures. He was considered an able preacher, was frequently called upon to preach on funeral occasions, was appointed to preach on the Sabbath at the association, and frequently administered the ordinance of baptism and the Lord's Supper. He was of common size, was perfectly black, with a smiling countenance, especially in the pulpit while speaking. He was very humble in his appearance at all times, and especially when conducting religious services. Great personal respect was always shown by the brethren whom he visited in his preaching excursions. Elder Joseph Magee, a Primitive Baptist minister, became his warm friend, and traveled and preached with him. Such was their attachment for each other, that they agreed that the surviving one should preach the funeral of the one who died first. Upon his deathbed, he bequeathed to Ralph his horse, coat, Bible, and $50.00 in cash, and requested his family to send for Ralph to come and preach his funeral. In company with a white brother, Ralph went to the West and preached the funeral sermon from a text the deceased had selected. The brother that went with Ralph stated to Elder N. Richardson that he never before saw so large a congregation. At the conclusion of the sermon, Elder Magee's brother stated to the congregation what provision his deceased brother had made for Ralph, and added, if any of you would like to give him any amount, it would be thankfully received. The congregation soon made up fifty dollars, which was given to him. While this contribution was being made, a Methodist came up and handed to Ralph one dollar. A Presbyterian, who observed it, said to him, "You ought not to give Ralph anything." Why not, said the Methodist. "Because," said the Presbyterian, "he has torn your system all to pieces." The Methodist replied, "I believe he has preached the truth, and I will give him the dollar."

Ralph was able in illustrating and unfolding the true doctrine of grace. Elder N. Richardson (to whom we are indebted for this biographical sketch) has baptized a number of persons who dated their convictions to the preaching of Ralph.

When the anti-mission party was later formed, we have been told that Ralph became an anti-missionary.

When the legislature passed the law prohibiting black and colored men from preaching, Ralph was greatly mortified, and had the sympathy of many brethren. Ralph was, no doubt, a truly pious and humble Christian, having the confidence and esteem of thousands, and died in the full assurance of a blessed immortality.

(From the history of the Sandy Creek Baptist Association, pages 328 & 329) (Note: From reading the above description of "Ralph Free Man," he must have been a fire ball. The Methodist must have believed the truth, and the Presbyterian knew it. (J. M. M.)

EXPERIENCE OF ELDER WELBORN

I was born 31st July, 1859, in extreme poverty. My father's house was of that rank that is meanest and most despised of all the families around in this part of North Carolina; Wherefore I have nothing to boast of as others have, neither do I desire it; but instead thereof, I glory in my infirmitives and low state according to the flesh, that I may the more abundantly exalt my God. I was born and reared in about eight miles of where I now live, in the most obscure part of Surry County, N.C. I was the oldest child of my father's family. My next brother was nearly two years younger than myself, and was dumb and perfectly helpless, and he lived to be about fourteen years old and died. I have two other brothers, the next in birth, and they are about grown young men, and are very wicked and many times have I bowed in prayer for them; and O, may all who read this unite in prayer with me for them. The fifth child of my father is a girl, now nearly grown, and is my only sister, and is yet out of the Ark of Safety. O that God may bring her tender soul in. The sixth and last child was my infant brother who died in infancy, and is therefore better off than any of us yet living in time. My dear mother died when I was at the tender age of ten years, and left an old log cabin nearly full of little children, none of whom at that time were able to do any labor but myself; for all were too small to do anything, except my oldest brother, and he was helpless, and my father was a weakly man, being diseased from a child. I had been brought up, until this period, without any education, or any knowledge of religion; for my parents had never had any thought for religion, as it seemed, for they never went to any kind of meeting; neither did they seem to have any thought for reading, as they had no Bible or any other kind of a book in their possession.

I was reared in perfect obscurity; for I lived until I was about eighteen years old and had never been at any public gathering, never been to school, nor heard any one speak in public. As I have said, mother died and left me at the age of ten years to take care of a pitiful and helpless family; but my little infant brother in a few weeks followed his mother. My dear reader, I cannot tell the trouble, turmoil I have undergone since the death of my dear mother; and if I were to write for days and days I could not tell half of the many hardships and trials I have had in this world of sin and sorrow. I had to work out of doors in the day time in summer, to try to make something to eat; and also had to prepare our meals three times a day, and had to carry those little children with me to the field. I also had to chew everything my little helpless brother ate, and had to strip him three times a day, and many times oftener. I had to wash and patch for them (my three little brothers, father and one little sister) of nights; for my father was gone from home the most of his time. O, the lonesome hours I saw; for no one came to see us, though there were two dwellings just across the small stream where we lived, both in sight; and after I had become a grown man, I visited those houses and they did not know who I was. Even those people who lived in sight of where I was raised did not know me when I went to their houses, for they had never seen me, only at a distance, since I was a little fellow and nobody ever came to see whether we were dead or alive. Now the general excuse that they (the people in the neighborhood in which I was raised) put up for not visiting us was that my father was such a wicked and sorry man; but my notion is different from that; I think that the excuse was they lacked charity.

Now, dearly beloved in the Lord, I cannot describe what I have suffered during those cold and stormy winters; for I never wore a coat or vest, nor anything else, save a shirt and pantaloons of domestics until after I was eighteen years old. How piercing those sharp winds felt to my thinly dressed body when I had to leave my little brothers and sister and sometimes father, and go to the woods for wood to burn to keep them from freezing! When I would return with my load of wood on my shoulder, I would be so cold that I would be benumbed all over. When I look back on my rugged road, I am made to wonder that I am still alive. But my wonder ceases when I consider that the omnipotent hand of a loving father has led me through this terrible desert and preserved me from its numberless dangers. O, was not the loving hand of Jehovah that kept a poor blind (spiritually blind) boy from having childish ways and from the carelessness common to children. For if I had been of the disposition common to children, I would not have striven to maintain my father and his helpless family, but to the reverse. I have often thought if it had not been for God's kind providence we would all have been burned up together in our little old log cabin years ago. But thanks to his Holy name he watched over us and brought me to manhood without any help of man, and without any of the luxuries of earth. Then does he not work all things after the council of his own will, and out of the sight of poor finite mortals?

After my helpless brother had died my labor was not so severe. Well do I recollect when he died. It was one evening during a thunderstorm. I was sitting by his side, rocking him in his cradle when the thunders were rolling and sharp lightning were flashing, and it was almost as dark as night. I looked my little brother in the face and saw the hand of death there. His eyes were turned into death. How awful I felt! While looking on him the tears rolled down my cheeks, and I called to my father, for I could not endure to gaze upon that dying boy. Time moved on with me and still I knew but little and thought less, of a Supreme Being. I knew God only by these names, "The Good Man", and the "Lord". This was all I could learn of God by my father. When I would ask him what caused the thunder, etc., he would say that it was the "Good Man" that thundered. When I was a little boy I remembered that my mother told me the same, and that He (the good man) would destroy all that stole, told lies, etc., in a pit of fire. So sometimes I would be much afraid of these things, and dreaded frightful dreams. But my disposition was dreadfully wicked. I will mention a few of my many wicked thoughts and intentions while in a state of death. I had heard of the many pleasant (to me then) sinful practices of mankind from my father telling me of them. So I thought that I would work very hard and lay up, and when I became a man I would buy a suit of clothing and fix up and go out into the world and take my pleasure in all the sins common to all young men; for I thought as I had always been a subject of obscurity and sorrowful privations, that when I became a man I would see some pleasure. But all my expectations were cut short by the hand of Omnipotence; for I became greatly burdened, and my troubles were very great, for I felt my self to be the greatest sinner on earth. O, how wretched I felt! I was ashamed of myself. There were some black people who lived near us, and I was ashamed of them, so that when they came about I would hide from them. O, how wicked I did feel! I often went and tried to pray, though I knew little about what men or women did when at prayer; what position they occupied, or what words they used, for I had never heard anyone pray. So when I went out to pray I would sometimes, and most of the time, fall on my face. So finally I concluded that I was going to die and sink down into a lake of fire unquenchable and everlasting, and that because of my sinfulness. I viewed myself as nothing but a great mass of corrupted wickedness, and that the Good Man, as I knew, was going to sink me into irretrievable woe and misery on account of my sin. Then I began to examine myself to see why it was that I must sink down into hell, and why it was that I was the worst being on earth, and could not solve the mystery; for I had never been as wicked as I had heard of some being. I had never acted the thief, neither had I been a liar, nor had I been guilty of any big crime. Then what is the matter? I could not tell why I was so guilty. But when I had viewed sin in all its deformity, then I could solve the mystery; for I then saw that it was that original guilt and my total depravity in nature that condemned me. But all my reasoning about not having been guilty of any great crime did me no good; and finally sleep fled from me; and one evening I watched the sun go down, and as he sank below the horison I bade him farewell, and never expected to see the sun rise again. O, how dreadful I felt! for I thought I would soon be dead, and no sooner dead than damned. When night came on and all my father's family were asleep, I arose softly and went out and going a considerable distance from the house, I fell down upon my face to pray. I thought I must now sink into eternal woe and misery, for what hope have I ?I had never heard anything of such a being as Christ Jesus, or Saviour; neither did I know anything of the New Testament at that time; but just at the moment when I thought I was gone, I saw Jesus as it was a bright star descend from heaven and the next I saw to that superior bright star was a little infant lying in a very shabby looking stable, and I thought, or it was revealed to me, that this shining light left heaven to become a way for my redemption from death and hell, and became an infant to that end. I then had a view of the whole life of Christ, even to his crucifixion. I then saw Jesus suspended between the heavens and the earth, as an outcast of both. He was hanging, I thought, about half way between the heavens and the earth. His feet were crossed a large iron about the size of a forty penny nail pierced through them both, his hands were pierced with smaller irons, and His side was pierced open, and a great stream of bloody water was pouring or gushing out of it; and I saw that his whole blessed body was streaming in blood, every part being bathed, and the blood streamed unto the earth. Then I heard a voice say, Fear no longer, for this will overcooled and overspread you from all harm, from the thunderstorms, etc. This voice was sweetest melody to me; my whole being was filled with sweet and holy melody, and I felt as innocent as a little new-born infant; for all my load of sin and guilt was gone. Now it was right here I saw, or it was revealed to me, just how Jesus came into the world; for I viewed that he lived for me a perfect life of obedience in the flesh, and that he died for me, or died in my stead, and arose for me a victorious conqueror over death, hell and the grave; and then ascended to heaven for me. I also had the same view in regard to the whole Church in her triumphant state. Now this heavenly view and divine revelation was so great to me that in after years when I had gotten in possession of the New Testament and began to read it, it seemed as though I had always been acquainted with its readings.

Now I have never gone to school but about two months in all my life, and that during the winter of 1878, and during this same winter I borrowed some clothing and went to Rock Springs meeting house and heard Elder B. E. Caudle preach, which was the first sermon I ever heard preached in my life. So time passed on with me in many ups and downs, doubts and fears, until the 18th of May, 1878, when I went to the church and told some of the great things which I hoped the Lord had done for me.

In June following I borrowed clothing of Brother C. W. York to be baptized in, and walked to Mitchell's River meeting house, about eighteen miles, and was baptized by Elder B. E. Caudle. Now I had never heard anyone tell an experience, or join the church, nor had seen anyone baptized until after I was baptized myself. I moved on in poverty's vale in many severe trials, and was favored with many rich blessings of God's grace, as I sometimes hope, until the second Sunday in August, 1878, when I contemplated trying to preach. When I commenced trying to preach I did not know a tune of any song in the world; neither could I give out a song correctly, for I could scarcely read. So I passed on in my trials, having to toil yet very hard for my father, and he was all the time opposed to my religious exercises; but I would beg him often to let me go and try to preach, which he would sometimes consent to. So I would go in my rags and walk for many miles to preach to the people. Yes, I would go through the dark as well as the daytime; going through wet and dry, cold and heat preaching to the poorer sort of people.

On the 25th of August, 1880, I was married to miss A. L. Moody, a beautiful girl seventeen years old. She was a very poor girl, for she had nothing but her clothing. We leased a piece of land in the woods and built a little log cabin and moved in it, and we got shingles for a sustenance during the fall and winter, working day and night; for I would some nights dress or draw three hundred shingles after supper. But when summer was come we rented stock and land and made a crop, and have been doing that way ever since. The first meal we ever ate in our little log cabin was in one teacup and saucer. I ate out of the saucer and my wife out of the cup and she had one old knife, made in the shop to eat with, while I used my pocket knife. We had to go in debt the first year we were married for bedding and other household and kitchen necessaries, and we paid out the next fall, but had to go in debt again. I have had a powerful hard struggle to barely keep something to eat and wear, and many times both myself and family have suffered for food and raiment, and are in need even now. I have tried to go and preach Jesus as often as I possibly could, and have always had to walk. For the Primitive Baptists are very few in this country, and are very poor and widely scattered, therefore I have never had a helping hand from any mortal in this part. My family consists at present of my wife and three little children. I was set apart and ordained to the gospel ministry by Elders Joshua Long and Wm. Hall on the 3rd

Saturday in May 1882, and have been trying to fill that calling ever since, but have labored under so many disadvantages that it seems there was never given for me any ease or satisfaction in this world. Yes, it seems that I was born unto trouble, tribulations and disappointments, for my days have been as prone to trouble as the sparks are to fly upwards. And there are but two things that make me want to stay here in Time's many distempers, and that is my poor little poverty-stricken family and the poor little saints who are scattered here in this mountain country. They are but few in number and poor in this world, and yet I am knit to them in love.

Brother Respess, I submit this to your kindness, hoping it may find grace in your sight. I am your poor little unworthy brother in hope of the resurrection of life eternal.

State Road, N.C.

P.S. Dear Brother Respess:

It is at the request of several of your readers that I have written this short sketch of my life and experience for your precious paper, THE GOSPEL MESSENGER. Please give it a corner in your precious paper.

COVER MY DEFENCELESS HEAD WITH THE SHADOW OF THY WING.

A party of northern tourists formed part of a large company gathered on the deck of an excursion steamer that was moving slowly down the historic Potomac one beautiful evening in the summer of 1881.

A gentleman who has since gained a national reputation as an evangelist of song had been delighting the party with the happy rendering of many familiar hymns, the last being the sweet petition so dear to every Christian, beginning, "Jesus lover of my soul." The singer gave the first two verses with much feeling, and a peculiar emphasis upon the concluding lines, that thrilled every heart. A hush had fallen upon the listeners that was not broken for several seconds after the musical notes had died away. Then a gentleman made his way from the outskirts of the crowd to the side of the singer and accosted him with, "Beg your pardon, stranger, but were you actively engaged in the late war?"

"Yes, sir", the man of song answered courteously," I fought under General Grant."

"Well," the first speaker continued, with something like a sigh, "I did my fighting on the other side, and think, indeed am quite sure, I was very near you one bright night, eighteen years ago this very month. It was much such a night as this. If I am not very much mistaken you were on guard duty. We of the south had sharp business on hand, and you were one of the enemy. I crept near your post of duty, my murderous weapon in my hand; the shadows hid me. As you paced back and forth, you were humming the tune of the hymn you have just sung. I raised my gun and aimed at your heart. I had been selected by our commander for the work, because I was a sure shot. Then upon the night rang the words:

"Cover my defenseless head
With the shadow of thy wing."

Your prayer was answered. I could not fire after that. And there was no attack made upon your camp that night. You were the man whose life I was spared from taking."

The singer grasped the hand of the Southerner, and said with much emotion, "I remember the night very well, and distinctly the feeling of depression and loneliness with which I went forth to my duty. I knew my post was one of great danger, and I was more dejected than I remember to have been at any other time during the service. I paced my lonely beat, thinking of home and friends, and all that life holds dear. Then the thought of God's care for all that he has created came to me with peculiar force. If he so cared for the sparrows, how much more for man created in his own image; and I sang the prayer of my heart and ceased to feel alone.

How the prayer was answered I never knew until this evening. My heavenly Father thought best to keep the knowledge from me for eighteen years. How much of his goodness to us we shall be ignorant of until it is revealed by the light of eternity! Jesus, lover of my soul, has been a favorite hymn; now it will be inexpressibly dear."

NATURAL WAYWARDNESS.

The Bible has a great deal to say about sheep, and because of this continued reference, people often get the idea that sheep are lovely, docile and intelligent creatures. The truth is that they are very stupid, dirty, and particularly given to straying away. Hard as it is to comfort, these characteristics make sheep a particularly fitting symbol of the weak and erring children of God.

Shepherds tell us that sheep have to be carefully herded be cause if they once spy a path, they will start down that path and sometimes trot along for miles, just because it is a path. Behind this reality lies the parable of the lost sheep. That particular sheep found itself in a pathway and kept on going.

The Bible declares that "all we like sheep have gone astray." In the case of both sheep and humans, the disposition is to get into a pathway and follow it, simply because it is a pathway.

The neighbors make a pathway, or the fashion designers, or the smart set at the country club, or Hollywood and down that pathway rush millions of people, from bobby-sockers to grandmothers, from toddlers to industrial executives, little lambs to old sheep running along the pathway just because it is a pathway.

"All we, like sheep." The Bible emphasizes the need for a shepherd and the watchful ear of one who regards our waywardness with understanding and love. Selected from Frederick (Md) Post. (Maryland).

GOSPEL STANDARD JANUARY 1837

A contrite heart alone can speak feelingly of contrition, a believer of faith, a pilgrim of a wilderness, a tried soul of temptation, a captive of bondage, or a soldier of wounds. Thus we want for our periodical, not pretty notions, but genuine experience; not merely explanations of hard texts, but the unravelling of the mysteries of vital godliness; not eloquent language, but soul feeling; not cut and dried phrases out of the dictionary, but a simple statement of the Lord's dealings within. We want not scurrility and vulgar, personal abuse, but meekness of wisdom; not great swelling words of vanity, to bolster up an ungodly system, but sound speech, so as to edify the church of God. And, therefore, we would invite those of our correspondents on whose communications a blessing has rested, to favour us with more such papers, and would ask also others of the Lord's family, who have not yet sent us anything, to make the attempt. We want not fine language, nor well-turned periods, nor what is called good writing. We want unction and power, something to move and melt the soul's of God's people. We want some depths of the heart turned up to view, and some of the secrets of the Lord with them that fear him laid open. And let our correspondents bear in mind the real wants of the Lord's family. They need not so much your opinions as your experience; not so much your views of a text, as an account of the Lord's dealings with your soul; not a heap of fine words that amount to nothing, but gracious feelings brought up from the bottom of your heart. Pour no rosewater, then, over your language; soften down no rough expression; polish off no strong phrase, if it convey the genuine feelings of your soul. You are not writing for gentlemen and ladies, but for mechanics and artizans, the poor in this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom. And if there be any better educated feeling readers of your communications, grace will have taught them to look for unction, and not for eloquence.

PSALM 19:1-2.

The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handywork.

Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge.

GOSPEL STANDARD JANUARY 1837

We have been favoured with several numbers of a semi-monthly periodical, published in New York, by Mr. Gilbert Beebe, entitled "The Signs of the Times." We hope and trust that our unknown friend will be enabled to fight manfully the good fight of faith; that he will spare no enemies of the gospel and cross of Christ, let them appear in what shape or garb they may, whether as fiends of darkness or angels of light; whether in open profanity, in rotten creature-merit mongery, in dead, dry formality, or, which we believe is as soul-damning as anything ever yet promulgated by the devil, in slave-mongery. Our prayer, we trust, is, that he may be led instrumentally to pull down, yea, to throw down the strong holds of Satan, and, by insisting upon the power of religion in the soul by the blessed Spirit, and exhibiting Christ and his finished work to poor broken-hearted sinners, that he may remove the stumbling-blocks out of the way, and be the means of setting at liberty many of God's dear elect, who are held in bondage under Hagar's seed. We perceive that several communications from our work have been inserted in "The Signs of the Times," and this affords us fresh encouragement to go on, as we doubt not but that our brethren, not only here, but across the Atlantic, will, in some sweet measure, be led to reap the benefit of our labours.

PSALM 21: 1-3.

The king shall joy in thy strength, O Lord; and in thy salvation how greatly shall he rejoice!

Thou hast given him his heart's desire, and hast not withholden the request of his lips. Selah.

For thou preventest him with the blessings of goodness: thou settest a crown of pure gold on his head.

HYMN

Jesus lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly,
While the raging billows roll,
While the tempest still is nigh!
Hide me, O my Saviour! hide
Till the storm of life is past;
Safe into the haven guide;
Oh, receive my soul at last.

Other refuge have I none;
Hangs my helpless soul on thee;
Leave, ah! leave me not alone;
Still support and comfort me.
All my trust on thee is stayed;
All my help from thee I bring:
Cover my defenseless head
With the shadow of thy wing.

Thou, O Christ, art all I want;
More than all in thee I find;
Raise the fallen, cheer the faint,
Heal the sick, and lead the blind
Just and holy is thy name,
I am all unrighteousness;
Vile and full of sin I am;
Thou art full of truth and grace.

Plenteous grace with thee is found —
Grace to pardon all my sin:
Let the healing streams abound;
Make and keep me pure within:
Thou of Life the fountain art!
Freely let me take of thee;
Spring thou up within my heart;
Rise to all eternity! C. Wesley.

What do you believe? What have you been made to love and to believe? If someone were to ask you, could you tell them? The Apostle Peter writes in 1 Peter 3:15, "be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear." Each of you that possesses that hope in you have been blest of the Lord to experience the work of Christ in your heart and the comforter, which is the Holy Spirit, has revealed the truth to you. Christ said "I am the truth." So you have the truth in you. You are the temple of God and the kingdom of God is within you. You have been made to feel your unworthiness so acutely that you have no desire to engage in an argument or to speak in a disrespectful manner. But you are blest to give a reason for the precious hope that you have with meekness and fear. Not fear of the one who asked you but fear that you may not be one of the Lord's elect.

The Apostle Paul writes in Ephesians 1:4 that the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ "hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world." Before He created the world and the things in it including man, He chose (elected) a people in Christ. He loved a people before there was a people in the world. Every elect of God was in the mind and purpose of God before they were ever born into the world. As Moses told Israel in Deuteronomy 7:7&8, "The Lord did not set His love upon you, nor choose you, because ye were more in number than any people; for ye were the fewest of all people: But because the Lord loved you..." Therefore the doctrine of election was established before the foundation of the world. It was confirmed by the Apostle Paul in Romans 9:11-13, "(For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of Him that calleth;) It was said unto her, the elder shall serve the younger. As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated." Some would deny the scripture and say that would make God unkind and unrighteous. But God forbid. For He said to Moses, "I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion. So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy."

"For whom He will foreknow, He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son, that He might be the firstborn among many brethren." He foreknew His people in love before the foundation of the world. His elect by nature were the children of wrath even as others. They could not change themselves. But, God so loved them that He predestinated (predetermined) them to change. At His appointed time He brought this change about and called them out of the darkness of unbelief into His marvelous light of understanding. "For by grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: Not of works, lest any man should boast."

Some would ask, if God loved and chose a certain people before the foundation of the world, why was it necessary for the Lord Jesus Christ to come into this world to suffer and die. The Apostle Paul answered that when he wrote, "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Adam transgressed the law and therefore, all his posterity come into the world as sinners. Judgement was rendered against all mankind including the Lord's elect. "For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." "As it is written, there is none righteous, No, not one." "They are all gone out of the way, they one together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one." The Apostle writes "for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin." The judgement is that all mankind is guilty.

Therefore, the Lord's elect that He chose in Christ before the foundation of the world must be redeemed from their sins and the curse of the law. To do so required a sacrifice that was just as holy as the law in order to balance the scale of God's justice and fulfill the law to a jot and tittle. So God, in the person of His Son, must come to earth under the same law that His elect were under. As the angel said unto Joseph concerning Mary, who was a virgin, "And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins." Matthew further explains, "Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoke of the Lord by the prophet, saying, Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son and they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us." He had a body of flesh as other men but without sin. The fulness of the Godhead (Father, Son, Holy Spirit) dwelleth in Him bodily. All fulness dwelleth in Him. In the flesh He could experience all things that His elect experience except sin. After Jesus was baptized, He was led by the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. He was tempted in all points as we are, yet without sin. As Luke records, Jesus said to Satan "Get behind me." When Jesus put Satan behind Him, He put Satan behind the church. For the church is the body of Christ. The seed of the woman (Christ) bruised the head of the serpent. The seed of the serpent (Satan) could only bruise the heel of the seed of the woman by tempting. The bounds of Satan were set. He could tempt the Lord's elect but he could not lead them away or destroy them.

So He came to save His people from their sins. To do so He must suffer, die and shed His blood on the cross. As Christ said in John 10:17&18, "Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father." On the cross He blotted out the handwriting of ordinances that were against us and contrary to us and took it out of my way, mailing it to His cross.

On the cross He was made "to be sin for us." On the cross He "bare our sins in his own body." The Apostle writes that the Gentiles at that time "were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world: But now in Christ Jesus, ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ." He is our peace. He broke down the middle wall of partition between His elect of Jews and Gentiles and made both one. He has one fold, one church. Ephesians 4:4-6, "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." He purchased the Church of God with His own blood. Her debt is paid in full. The guilty judgement against her is satisfied.

The 9th hour is the hour of prayer. At the 9th hour on the cross, He cried with a loud voice, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" In the past He had always said "Father." But in order for Him to die, the fulness of the Godhead must leave that body. The Father, Son and Holy Spirit are one and cannot be separated. John relates that Jesus declared "It is finished." The work that the Father gave Him to do was finished. He was on the cross for six hours which sets forth a period of time of work. God created all things in six days which were not days as we know days. The holy law of God had been fulfilled to a jot and tittle. His chosen people redeemed from their sins. A complete and finished work that left nothing for man to do. He was raised again for their justification. Therefore, "who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is god that justifieth." There is nothing that can separate you from the love of Christ. He has freely given every little child of grace three gifts: Faith, Hope and Love.

His elect will not stand before God in the end of time to be judged out of those things written in the books (law), according to their works. The elect shall hear the King say "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

In love,
Elder Cleo Robertson

VOICES OF THE PAST

ELDER HENRY C. JONES

Dear Brother Burnell:

Tonight as I sit here in my home, this 25th day of July, 1988, I am thinking of you and your family, Sister Mary Frances and the girls. I have told you in times past about my desire to write to you concerning some of my experiences. I don't know whether God will bless me to do this or not, but if it would be His will, I shall try.

I would desire to write to you concerning my experience in the Lord Jesus Christ. This experience I am talking about has been given me by the Lord. I believe this from the depths of my heart and soul. Because of the many conversations we have had in days and nights past I believe you can witness with me in what I am saying. Do you remember the night I was so burdened and weighted down with a weight I felt I could not remove? This weight I could not take away, because I had not placed it there. We had been to services at Creeches Meeting House that night, and when the meeting was over, you and myself were standing in front of the building talking. I began to talk to you about my feelings and the way I felt concerning the preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I knew I did not know how and could not do it of myself. I knew you, nor any other man, could not help me do it. For it must come from Jesus Christ or it's not preaching. I have not learned this out of any book or learned it from any man. If I know anything about this, it has been by the revelations of Jesus Christ. Every since I was about eight years old, I have had many down settings, disappointments and heartaches. I remember being in the yard one day doing some work for my Mother. I felt something come over me, but I did not know where it came from. I have never forgotten it. I now feel it was the Lord Jesus Christ dealing with me, but at that time He did not show me where it was coming from or who was giving it. I was not brought up in the church nor told about the Lord by my parents. It was the Lord Jesus Christ who dealt with me in the past. I have had many experiences since the night you and I talked in front of Creeches Meeting House. I dreamed one night I stood before the people and preached the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ as it was given to me.

Not me or any other man, but the Lord Jesus Christ was the one over all of it. He was the one that gave me the words to say to feed the flock. Yes, I believe from the depths of my heart and soul that time after time I would have these experiences even before I offered and was received into the church. Long before I was ordained to preach the gospel, I dreamed I was standing in the pulpit behind the book board. The meeting was over and I came down out of the pulpit. The people came and hugged me and embraced me and told me how much they enjoyed what the Lord had blessed me to say. Well, it cut me down very much, but it also lifted me up in one way, to feel that the Lord had used me as His mouthpiece. Today, as well as times past He uses men (and I hope myself) as His mouthpiece to stand before the flock of God and preach to them. I don't believe one can preach the gospel of Jesus Christ, to an unbeliever. One must believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and the only way they can believe in Jesus Christ is to be born of the spirit of God. They must be born and brought to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Him. They must be given grace and grace alone, because it takes grace to have the love and it takes the love to have the grace.

I believe both of us have experienced that love and that grace and not only us, but all of the children of God wherever they are met at. How much I love you and Sister Mary Frances, as well as, both of the girls, through and by the grace of God. We have seen the girls grow up from little girls to grown women, and I hope I love them for Christ sake. I love God's people wherever they are. It matters not where we meet, but if we can only be blessed to talk about the Lord Jesus Christ and what he has done for us. If we can tell the experiences of grace that He has blessed us with from on high. The many times our souls have been fed with the bread that flows from the throne of grace. Not anything have we ever done to inherit any of it, for it is a free unmerited favor that is given by Christ Jesus, the Saviour of sinners. He came to save the sinners, not the righteous. I know I am a sinner. I have been all of my life and will be the balance of my life that I live here in this world. But thanks to my God, He has given me a promise of a better place than on this earth. I don't know that I will be carried there, I only have a hope that I will wake up in that final home where the whole family will be there all together lovely and be singing the hymns of praise forever. A place that never ceases to be and where there is no darkness, only light. It will be lit up with the glory of Almighty God, so we can see and feel the joy of Thy salvation that we have a hope in now.

I believe both you and I, as well as our companions, all have a hope. I believe the Lord has taught us something that is beyond the teachings of man. People go off to seminaries to learn to preach the gospel, but the one I went to I trust I was carried by the Lord Jesus Christ and did not go on my own. If I know anything He is the one that has taught me. I did not learn it from any man nor did I learn it from any book. If I know anything about it, it is through and by the revelations of Jesus Christ. I have had many down settings in my life, but how wonderful it is to be down in the valley and then lifted up on the mountain top that we can rejoice in a Saviour's love and in the Holy Spirit of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. One that has looked down upon us and has called us with a holy calling. One who has brought us out of nature's darkness into the marvelous light of the Son of God. Oh, what a light this is. It is so bright, yet it will not blind you. The brightness of the natural sun will bring tears to your eyes. The light of Jesus Christ shining in you will make you cry, but it will be tears of joy and not for sorrow. Oh, how many times have I ever cried for the joy of the Lord Jesus Christ has given me. Dealt with me in that way, in that manner, that I could praise Him. The only true and living God that I have to look to tonight for living grace that will never die. That grace that will live now and forevermore and that great and holy love that is given us by Him, the only one that shall stand. This natural love that we have for one another here is going to cease some day, but that love that God has loved us with, and the love that we are bidded to love one another with shall never die. It will live in this world with us and in that yonder world if we are only blessed to be carried there.

This is a true and lively hope that I believe God has given me. A hope that no one can take away. A hope that no man had anything to do with me receiving it. In due time God showed me what I am by nature and what I must be by the grace of God. It didn't come none too early and none too late, because there is a time and season to all things. It comes times that He gives to me these things that I believe, these things that I'm telling you tonight. I believe each one of us has heard preaching from time to time on the mountain tops, on the sea shores, and in the valleys. Oh, how beautiful it is to be lifted up and to be carried to a place that looks and is beautiful. We want more of it, but we can't have any more than what God would give us to have. What we will have in this life and in the world to come is all stored up in His storehouse of mercy. How we would desire to praise our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ for the many blessings that He has bestowed upon us all the days of our lives, even when we knew it not.

My mind is carried back from time to time to my Mother. She had no girls, only boys. When I was about eight years old, I was doing some work for her. I did not know then, but I trust I know now, where the mind came from to help my Mother. The Lord Jesus Christ gave me that mind to do the things that I did for her. I would sweep the yard and do things like that and rejoice in it. The reason I rejoiced in it was because the Lord was in the matter. The Lord was showing me, but yet it did not please Him to show me where it was coming from. It did not please Him to show me where all of the goodness and mercy that was in my soul as a little lad was coming from. Years later it pleased Him to reveal to me where these things come from. He came into my heart and soul and condemned me of this world and the worldly things that I was dwelling in. He turned me from one place to another that was far better than the place I was going into. Oh, yes I'm still in this world, but I'm not of the world. I can truthfully say that I'm not of this world. This world has no charms for me anymore. The only charm I have, the only Joy I get in this world, is when I can feel the presence of my God into my heart and soul. He lifts me up from the vain and perishable things of this world where I can feel the joy of His salvation right into my heart and soul, making me to praise Him from whom all my blessings have come from.

I need the blessings of my God to bless me to keep pressing toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. I don't know of any other way that I desire to go but in the way that leads to life everlasting. Straight is the way and narrow the gate and but a few will enter therein. I hope with all my heart and soul that I'm one of those that has been called in that way, that has been called to go in that straight and narrow way that leads to life everlasting. In other words, that highway of holiness that leads to heaven and immortal glory where there is only one way you can get on that highway. That is straight in and through Jesus Christ. He is the only way one will ever walk on that highway of holiness. It is through and by the leading power of the Almighty God that we believe in. The Almighty God has kept us out of that broad was and that broad gate. He has narrowed the way down so narrow that we are not able to walk by ourselves, but He is able to lead us in it and enable us to walk in that way through and by the power of Him. It is not by the power of our doing not the power of any man. It must come from the love and grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. Oh, what a wonderful grace that is. It is sufficient for every child of God that is on the face of this earth. That grace will sustain them through every trial and every trouble and every affliction they ever meet up with in this world. It will be right there with them and it will bring them through all of these things.

I know He has been with me through all my trials and troubles. Just like the experience I had in a dream. I dreamed I was driven up to the Red Sea, just like the Israelites were. The enemy was behind them. They couldn't turn back, nor turn to the right or left and they didn't see anyway straight ahead because the Red Sea was in front of them. I want you to know in my experiences I've been carried to that same place. Brother Burnell, I want to tell you the waters were rolled back for me and I was carried across on dry ground just like the Israelites were. And that water, I can see it now, how the Lord Jesus Christ rolled it back for me to go across. I didn't go on my own, He is the one that carried me. He is the one that rolled the waters back. He is the one that made the straight and narrow way for me to go. He can do the very same thing now as He did then. He does these things day by day and night by night and no one has ever told me anything to make me believe these things. It is through and by the Lord Jesus Christ that has made me to believe it. It is a true and living God that has watched over me every moment of my life, not just a part of it, but every day I live, every breath I breathe in this world here.

I want to tell you about your association of 1988. How much I really enjoyed that meeting. I had been away for three years. I had been sick and in the hospital part of the time it was going on, but my mind was with you all. What a feast you were having there and what a feast I was having in the hospital also. The same God that was with me was with you at the association. This year, 1988, I was blessed to go after missing three associations in a row. Oh, how much those brethren who are down on the face of this earth. They will be ready to give a reason of their hope.

We are told to be ready to give a reason of our hope, and Brother Burnell, I don't know whether you've ever been asked that question or not, but I have. One day I was asked to give a reason for why I was among the Old Baptists to start with. I told the man if he had a few minutes to listen I would tell him why I am among the Old Baptists. I talked to the man, who was my employer, for about fifteen minutes. He then told me anytime I wanted to go to my meetings to go ahead. He didn't want me to work when I actually wanted to be at my meetings. The Lord blessed me in that way to never be hindered from being able to go to Church when I was well, but I have been sick and couldn't go. I couldn't go this past meeting, the fourth weekend in July. I had to stay in bed both Saturday and Sunday, because I was sick. My heart was beating too slow and I could not go, but thanks to my God, He has blessed me to have a mind to look to him and write these things down on paper. To put them down and send them to you for you to read for yourself. May God bless you, your companion, and the girls. May the Lord be praised for this writing. May God be praised for everything. I would desire to be a little brother in hope, if one at all.

Elder Henry C. Jones (Copied from the SIGNS OF THE TIMES July, 2003).

GENESIS 32:27

"And he said, What is thy name? and he said, Jacob. And he said, Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel; for as a prince thou hast power with God and with men, and hast prevailed."

This Scripture, like all others, shows the mercy of God to poor, unworthy sinners. Jacob had twice sinned against his brother in taking undue advantage of him. Esau was so enraged at the second offence that Jacob fled to his kindred in another land. Esau said, "He is rightly named Jacob for he has supplanted me these two times." His name therefore signifies his true character, to which he confesses in his struggle with the man that wrestled with him.

In his first offence he took advantage of his brother at a time when he was least able to resist him. Esau was ready to faint with hunger, and he said, "If I should die what good would this birthright do me?" and for one mess of pottage he got the birthright. Jacob here shows his evil nature in this undue advantage of his suffering brother, but we hear no complaint from Esau about this. He sold out to him, but by and by, when Esau had gone for venison for his father, Jacob brought him meat, and when questioned by his blind father, he said, "I am thy very son Esau;" and lied not only in word, but also in actions, for he covered his hands and neck with the skin of the kid that his father might take him for Esau. I once heard the idea that Jacob did not lie, because in a law sense he was Esau, since he had obtained the birthright. This might answer to the law, but not his father, for he said, "Art thou my very son Esau?" and he said, "I am." In truth he was no more Esau after he had obtained the birthright than before, and he knew that his father would not recognize him, and his arrangement to appear as Esau, and deceive his father, who could only judge by feeling, for Esau was a hairy man. Jacob obtained the blessing, and Isaac said, "He shall be blessed."

Esau was now enraged, and he comforted himself saying, "When my father is dead then will I kill Jacob." So Jacob fled as stated above; and notwithstanding the fact that he had so grievously sinned the Lord showed him mercy in the land to which he went, and protected him against Laban, who changed his wages ten times, seeking the advantage of him each time. The Lord turned the intended curse into a blessing to Jacob.

Here we see some of the great mercy of God who has said of his people, "I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and will remember their sins no more forever." How true that the ways of our God are past finding out. Why such mercy to a sinner? Here Jacob prospered and increased in goods. His family also; for it is here that God began to fulfill his promise to Abraham that his seed should be as the stars of heaven for multitude. But the Lord's time came for Jacob to return to the land from whence he came, and he told him to return, and it should be well with him. At God's bidding Jacob returns; (for his word must be obeyed). But he was afraid of Esau, although God has said, "It shall be well with thee." This shows that the poor sinner not only needs the promise, but its fulfillment in order that he may feel safe and rest from his labor. Is it any wonder that Jacob should be afraid of Esau? He well knew that he had greatly wronged him, and he felt that it would be no more than he deserved if Esau should meet and destroy him and all he had. This gives us fellowship for Jacob, for we too well know that God would be just should he turn us away forever; and who is it, seeing he can claim nothing on his own merit, that is not afraid to meet him against whom he had sinned? Is it strange that Jacob would conceive the idea of appeasing the wrath of his brother with a present? Do we not try this time and again, vainly hoping by some good work of our own to obtain the favor of God?

Although Jacob has the present made up, and on its way to meet Esau, he is not at rest, for he has heard that Esau is coming, and four hundred men with him. He now realizes that Esau is prepared to destroy him and all that pertains to him, and he can see no reason why he should not feel like doing so. Is not this our experience, dear brethren? This is because of sin — a fearful looking for of judgment, and the suspense is awful and now Jacob sends all before him, and tarries behind, all alone. How like the humble, sin-sick soul; no one like me, no one so great a sinner; but he remembers the promise of God that it should be well, and he calls up the fact as though he would remind the Lord; but he makes no claim upon him; but says, "I am not worthy of thy mercy which thou hast shown thy servant." How like you my brother and sister, asking protection purely upon the principle of mercy, acknowledging that he is afraid of Esau.

O how dark the night, and how full of gloomy forebodings to Jacob, who had so greatly sinned, and now felt his guilt and shame. And there wrestled a man with him, and this man was Jesus, for he says, "Before Abraham was I am," the root and the offspring of David. And he prevailed not until the breaking of day he touched the hollow of Jacob's thigh, and his thigh was out of joint as he wrestled with the man. Now Jacob is helpless, for no man can wrestle with his thigh out of joint; and the man said, "Let me go, for the day breaketh." But Jacob said, "I will not let thee go except thou bless me." This does not argue that Jacob could hold the man, or that the sinner of today can hold Jesus when he desires to go, but shows that the sinner who realizes his own helpless condition will not cease to cry to God, who alone can save him from that of which he is afraid. And the man said, "What is thy name?" and he said "Jacob." (a supplanter — a sinner). These are my people, children that will not lie. It has been a characteristic of the people of God in all ages to confess their sins; so Jacob confessed, I am a sinner, unworthy and without strength, all alone with no one to call upon but he against whom he had struggled all night.

So with us, we have no one to look to for mercy but the blessed Jesus against whom we have sinned all our days. Justice would say, "I know you are an unworthy sinner, and I will put an end to you right here." But mercy says, "Thy name shall no more be called Jacob, but Israel. For as a prince thou hast power with God and with men and hast prevailed." As Jacob he has done nothing but sin; he could not overcome the fear that he felt, for he knew that he deserved death.

It is only then as a prince or son of God, chosen in Christ Jesus before the world began, that he has power to prevail. Because of their being chosen in him, Jesus has given to poor sinners eternal life, and this life is power, and by it Jacob and all the chosen prevail. But notwithstanding he has prevailed, he goes halting the remainder of his life. Any wonder? His thigh is out of joint, his greatest strength is gone, and all of God's children are poor and halting, because their great strength is taken away; for the wisdom of the world is foolishness with God. So they go halting because their own strength is in sufficient for them, and they need the staff of God's promise to lean upon, all this alone holds them up. When Jacob meets Esau he finds that his present does not appease his wrath. It is already appeased, and he says of the present, "I do not need it. I have enough." So the Lord says of sacrifice, "I am full of these things, and have no pleasure in them." His wrath against the poor sinner is already appeased through the precious blood of Jesus. Esau accepted Jacob's sacrifice only as a token of his joy in meeting him in peace, and so the Lord does not need our works to appease his wrath, but accepts them as a thanks offering which we render in the blessed hope that we have met the Lord, and he was pleased with us.

Now Jacob's sufferings was in the fearful looking for of that which he felt was justly due according to his deeds; but he found it better than he feared. And is not this our experience, dear ones? Have we not been blessed above merit and beyond what we could expect? The awful judgments and fiery indignation for which we have often looked have not come, but mercy instead, thanks to his holy name.

I once heard a comment upon the saying of Paul. That if we sin willfully after we receive the knowledge of the truth there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries, in which the party said that the blood of Jesus washed away all our sins up to the time we receive the knowledge of the truth, and that the sins committed afterwards were remitted through our sufferings, the judgments and fiery indignations which the Lord sends upon us because of our sin. This cannot be true, as we are not partners with Jesus in the work of salvation, for he trod the winepress alone. Of the people there was none to help, and the blood of Jesus Christ, his son, cleanseth us from all sin, and salvation is wholly by the grace of God.

Jacob was not accepted by his elder brother because of his good works, or his suffering the night before, and so our elder brother does not accept us because of goodness in us, or because of our suffering the just penalty of our sin; but because of his everlasting love wherewith he hath loved us before the foundation of the world, and the salvation of the sinner from first to last is entirely by the grace of God through Jesus Christ. That which we merit we may justly claim; but Jacob, with all of God's humble poor, confesses that he is not worthy of all the blessings which thou hast shown thy servant. Thou hast not dealt with us according to our iniquities.

May I now say something about Jacob and Israel, for the man who wrestled with him said that his name should no more be called Jacob but Israel. Why? Because as a prince he has power with God, etc., and God afterwards said to him, "Thy name shall be no more Jacob, but Israel shall thy name be." But later on we find that when he was on his way to Egypt to meet Joseph, God appeared to him (Israel), and he said, "Jacob, Jacob," and he answered to his old name, saying, "Here am I."

Now, what shall I say, for I find that he is spoken of and spoken to as Jacob, after it is said that his name shall be no more Jacob, but Israel. The thought comes to me this way. The man said his name is Israel because as a prince he has power with God and with men and has prevailed. I notice that when spoken to or spoken of in times of trouble or distress he is called Jacob, but when he has power to overcome he is called Israel. See for instance when his sons return from Egypt, and tell him that Joseph, his beloved son, is yet alive, and governor over all the land of Egypt, Jacob's heart fainted, for he believed them not. But when he saw the wagons which Joseph had sent to take him home to himself, the evidence was assuring, and the spirit of Jacob revived and now he is a strong prince, and Israel said, "It is enough; Joseph, my son, is yet alive. I will go and see him before I die."

I want to say just here that he is not another man since the change of his name, neither is he two men, but one and the selfsame, having another name only because of his power as a prince, or son of God. Neither are the Lord's people today another, or two, but the same as one in nature, and different only they have the power of a prince, or the presence of the spirit of God, by which alone they can overcome the evil of their nature.

I remember that the apostle Paul speaks of the old man and the new man, but he means only the two natures or spirits that are now in the one man; and the old man is the fleshly nature, and this is weak and sinful, and therefore always Jacob, and can never overcome. The new man is the spirit or life of Jesus, and therefore is a prince having power, and when revived says, It is enough, it is alright, the evidence is sufficient, and I will go in response to the call of Joseph, or the loving Jesus, who hath said, Come to me and I will feed and give you rest. Jacob seemed to forget his age and weakness in the joy of seeing Joseph. The destitution in his own land, the plenty in the land of Egypt, coupled with his greatest of all desires to see Joseph, sweetly forced him, not in any sense against his will, but with joy and gladness of heart; and not in his own strength or means, for Joseph sent all the means necessary to his coming to him. And when he met Joseph his desires were fully satisfied, and he said, "Let me die since I have seen thy face, because thou art yet alive," showing that the poor sinner finds his whole desire satisfied in Jesus who so richly provides for him of whom Joseph is a figure.

But I remember that this Israel is called the spirit of Jacob. The spirit of Jacob revived and Israel said, "It is enough." How will this hold with the idea that the name Jacob represents the fleshly nature? It is the sons and daughters of Adam that are saved. It is the sinner to whom Jesus gives eternal life. This gift of God is the life or spirit of the sinner (Jacob) because God gave it to him, and when exercised by the power of this life he forgets his weakness and fear of going down to the grave in sorrow, and is now a strong prince believing the things of God in his heart, and confessing them with his mouth before men. And prevails, having power with God and with men; and through this spirit of Jesus which is also the spirit of the man (Jacob) or sinner (for Jesus prayed that they may be one in us, as thou Father and I are one) they are able to endure hardness, suffering, and persecution that is a marvel to the world, many sealing their faith with their blood, and today being counted as the offscouring of all things, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasure of sin for a season, showing that the man of God can do that which is impossible to the world; but all by the power of the spiritual life which Jesus has given. Paul said, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me," and his abundant labor in the vineyard of the Lord was by the grace of God which was with him, and this I feel sure is the faith of all well established children of God, but I wish to impress the fact that it was Jacob who sinned, it was he who fled from the wrath due to his sin, it was he who received mercy instead of justice, it is he who mourned for his absent son, it is he who is hungry because of the famine, it is he who faints for lack of faith in the words of those who like himself are sinners, and does not believe until he sees the evidence sent by him against whom they sinned, it was revived by this undeniable evidence, it was he who met and rejoiced in the presence of Joseph, it was he for whom Joseph cared so long as he lived, it was he upon whose eyes Joseph laid his hand when dead, and it was he whom Joseph carried and buried in his own land. He now sleeps with his fathers notwithstanding his acknowledged unworthiness, and this proves to you afflicted and poor ones that all that Jesus did is for you.

The same man who is a sinner by nature, is a saint by the grace of God, that he who mourns in afflictions shall rejoice in health, that he who is weak in himself is strong in the Lord, that he who is poor in spirit is rich in the gifts of God, that he who faints because of unbelief shall be revived by the sweet evidence of salvation from hunger and thirst. He cares for you while you live. By Jesus the governor of all the land he will close your eyes to all that is mortal and vain, bury you with your faithful fathers, and wake you up in that beautiful city that needs neither the stars, moon nor sun to light it, but in which the Lord God is the everlasting light; and the days of your mourning shall be ended, and so the saints shall be ever with the Lord; and to his gracious name be all the praise both now and forever.

Your brother in this precious hope,

FOR THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Anson, Somerset Co., Maine Oct. 17, 1842.

Dear Brother Beebe: — I for the first time take my pen in hand to inform you that I have been for six years a reader of the Signs of the Times, and as I have been much delighted with its contents, and also hearing how the Old School Baptists scattered over the United States get along, I have thought of giving you a little sketch of my traveling this world of trouble, and also the state of Zion in this vicinity. And now to commence with my travel, I was conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity, and to do good I had no knowledge, and to do evil I was bent, and that continually; and was with all mankind in a state of nature dead in trespasses and in sins. I took light for darkness, and darkness for light; for I thought if ever I got to heaven it must be by my good works: but when I arrived at the age of seventeen, I was one evening at a meeting, and after the meeting was closed as I stood on the floor, suddenly I, for the first time, saw that I was a condemned sinner in the sight of God. I returned home, but knew not what to do; I spent a restless night but got no relief; and I spent one year in this way. The preaching I heard all this time, was that in order to became a christian we must be willing to let the whole world know it, and make resolutions that we will take up the cross (that is) kneel down on an anxious seat, and be determined that we will have religion. But all this time I would not have had any one to know what was on my mind for all this world: I dared not so much as to take the Bible in my hand before any persons for fear that they would mistrust what was on my mind. I thought it told truth, but I was a poor helpless sinner justly condemned, and dared not look to heaven but cried God be merciful to me a sinner. And one day when I was almost in despair, after I had done my work I retired to the woods but could not pray for myself, and returned to the house and went to rest, and as I lay thinking on my sad condition, all at once my load of guilt removed, and I thought I could see Jesus with the eyes of my understanding on the cross, with his arms extended my soul to receive. I had a happy season all alone. The next morning I found myself calm and so remained for a few days, but told no one how my mind was; but when I went to meeting again and heard the do and live system, I threw myself away and thought I was deceived, and so I got along under this arminian yoke of bondage three years longer; and then I broke my mind and told how I had got along, and by searching the Bible, and having a severe combat with my old system, I was obliged to give up; and was established in the doctrine of the Bible, and was baptized and joined the Baptists. And I have spent eight years more viewing myself the greatest-sinner on earth, but still have a hope in the mercy of God. Now to commence with the state of Zion in this vicinity. I must tell you rather a lamentable story, and yet a good one too, for while the multitude are talking the same in substance as the old Pharisees, that is, that they were born holy, and when they came to years of understanding they had two spirits good and bad, one equal to the other; and it is just as easy to follow, one as the other; and therefore never were in bondage to any man. Yet there are a few that appear have been converted and become as little children, that is, they were by nature children of wrath even as others, dead in trespasses and in sins, and their own strength is perfect weakness, for when they would do good evil is present with them, and they are made to cry out, oh! wretched man that I am and therefore have to trust wholly in the righteousness of Jesus Christ. There is a small church of such here in this place that three years ago took a stand aloof from the doctrine and societies of men, and covenanted to take the Bible for our rule of faith and practice. Our whole number then was twelve, we have added five from the New School and two by baptism. We are very much scattered, but when we can meet together we find that we are united in the doctrine of the Bible.

But I come to a close by giving you a little sketch of the Eastern Old School Baptist Yearly meeting that met with us on the 16th and 17th or September, 1842: chose Elder Daniel Whitehouse ruling elder, brother William Quint, Jr., clerk. We had a very interesting meeting. The brethren appeared to be all of one heart and of one mind. And as one of our number, John. A. Badger, was a licentiate, by, our request he related his experience and call into the ministry, and the brethren unanimously agreed to proceed to ordination. The Sunday following met accordingly. We had a very crowded assembly. Elder P. Hastwell, of North Berwick, preached the ordination sermon from John xxi. 16: "Feed my sheep." Prayer by Eld. J. Bailey. Charge by Eld. J. Macumber.

Right hand of fellowship by Elder D. Whitehouse. Closing prayer by brother J. L. Purrington, licentiate. We then repaired to the water side, where one sister followed her Lord in the ordinance of baptism. We had a solemn and yet a delightful season.

Let Israel now say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

EXPERIENCE AND CALL TO THE MINISTRY

Elder D.A. O'Bryant

For some two or three years I have had a mind to try to write a portion of what I feel the Lord has done for me. I realize that if the Lord does not bless me with a fruitful mind I will be unable to pen down the many sad thoughts and feelings I have had, together with a few moments of rejoicing I have been blessed to enjoy. But I trust if it is the Lord's will to direct my mind that I may sketch the path through which I feel I have been driven and led along for the last twenty-two or three years. Going back to childhood, I feel the Lord commenced a great work with me, teaching me I was a sinner and that I had a soul and it was lost, and I must die for my sins. When those thoughts began to come into my mind the matter became very serious with me at all times. At those times I wanted to steal away and try to pray to the Lord and tell him that I would do better, but instead of doing better I seemed to do worse. But the thought of dying would come and I would find myself again begging God to take care of me. I felt that he was able to if he would. I went along with a continuation of like experience for a number of years, with a great fear of judgement; that is, the last day, when God shall pour out his wrath upon them that dwell upon the face of the earth. Seemingly I felt deep down in my very being that I would have to suffer the great torment of those irresistible flames, and those thoughts and feelings were almost more than I could bear. They were so great with me that I could hardly keep from screaming. When I would see the smoke rising from the nearby farms, when the neighbors were burning brush, in my thoughts and imagination I could see the great agonizing flames coming in streaks, consuming everything, and I could not see any way for hell deserving me to escape from those torments. Oh! those miserable feelings are yet untold. I was carried along in that way for several years, but part of the time it did not bother me. I kept all of this from my people, and when I reached the age of sixteen to twenty I was not bothered very much about the matter, so I set out to enjoy as much of this life as I could. At the age of nineteen I left my father, with the thought that I would see what was in this old world. I got as far as Florida and my journey was ended, there something got hold of me again that changed my mind to some extent. I met my wife on my journey to Florida, and after staying there four months my mind was to go back home, so I did, and three or four months later my wife and I were married. I settled down then to try and make a living for us. Soon after I came back from Florida, I went to Hillsdale to preaching and there I met a great many of my schoolmates and friends. We were sitting in the rear of the congregation together and Elder Purdyle preaches into my feelings that day and I shed tears while listening to him. After preaching had closed one of my boy friends said to me that I had left home and gone off and got good. That came near ruining me, for I could not stand his talking to me that way. I thought the best way to convince him was to curse and deny it, which I did. I cursed bitterly and denied it, and that gave me much trouble, but I got some consolation from the thought that even the apostle Peter cursed and denied the blessed Savior, and said he never knew the man. I felt to be the most wretched and undone sinner that ever lived. I could not feel that there was any mercy for me, so I went on in this condition for six or eight months, begging God for mercy. Easter Sunday night, in the year 1931, if not deceived, the blessed Savior came to me and blessed me to see him as he arose from the dead. I will try to write the dream, or vision. It seemed to me that I was away from home, and was traveling with two of my brothers, and I was cursing and swearing and acting very badly, when I heard a voice call me, that voice sounded like no other voice I had ever heard. I was condemned in my feelings and a fear came over me such as I had never before experienced. It seemed to me I had to go to some very sacred place, and it made me tremble, but I went on, as I was seemingly led, until I reached the place. When I arrived there and stepped inside the door I saw a room in which were a number of folks standing, all were clothed in white robes, and there was a corpse in the room, and it was on a table. The lid of the coffin was off and the body was in it. The coffin was filled with the whitest biscuits I ever saw, and those people went to the coffin and took the bread and ate it, and then the coffin disappeared and the body was on the floor in front of me. It began to move, and I told those people, This man is not dead, but is alive. So I would like to say right here that this Man is not dead, but is alive, and is seated at the right hand of God, making intercession for his children. He arose and came to me, and as he started to his feet his face began to shine, and the nearer he came the brighter it shined. When he got within hands-reach of me I thanked the Lord and began to sing, "Amazing grace, how sweet the sound, that saved a wretch like me." I then awoke with a confused mind, and with no understanding of what I had seen. I then undertook trying to reason it out in my own way. The more I reasoned the further away I got and the more trouble I got in. So in my trouble I found out that God's way is past reasoning and his thoughts past the understanding of man. So I went in great trouble, until I reached the place where I could neither eat nor sleep as much as I needed in order to be able to do my work. I continued to go on in this way until it seemed I could live no longer. One day I sat down at the table, but could not sit but a little and soon left and went and laid down on my bed, with my face down to keep my wife from seeing me in tears. At that time this thought came into my mind, go and see Elder Trent and tell him the dream and he will interpret it to the extent that you can rest. I went the next day to see him and told him the dream, and this man of God began to tell me some of the things I hope the Lord has done for me, and advised me to go to the church and be baptized. I did not feel that part was right, but was relieved to the extent that I could eat and sleep normally again, and seemed to be reconciled to my condition, yet was expecting some great calamity, but was reconciled to it. One night, about a month later, I came in from my work and ate my supper, then sat down to rest a few minutes before lying down, and the thought came to my mind that something was going to take place with me that night. It seemed to me it might be I was going to die, and I thought that if I did it would be all right, for there was nothing I could do about it. I had been brought to the place to know my weakness, and to know God was all-powerful and did his will in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none can stay his hand, nor say, Jehovah, why or what doest thou?

Sometime during the night I got in some kind of a condition that I will never be able to explain. It seemed that I was vanishing from the presence of everything, and I could not move any member of my body, neither could I speak. When I got to where I could speak I said, Lord have mercy on me, and it seemed to me that I could see and feel an arm like unto a strong man's arm reach down under me and raise me, and I was delivered from that condition. Then my tongue was loosened, to the praise of my God. I had a mind to join the church then, and began to wonder if they would have me. I felt that if they refused me it would be all right, for I was not fit to be numbered with them, yet I had a longing desire to have a home with these folks. I did not feel that I would add anything to them, but felt they would mean very much to me. Several times I went to the church to join with them, but had to wait for God's time. He adds to the church such as he would have to be saved. The day I joined I could not talk to the brethren. They received me on very few words. I went home and began to worry about not telling the brethren much of anything and got in trouble about that, and thought that I would yet tell them. It went on for some time and I began to have some kind of an impression to preach, with the feeling that I would have to tell the brethren what God had done for me, and what he had done for his people. Now this impression seemed to me to be out of all reason. It seemed to me it was an impossibility for me to undertake to preach to people I looked upon as being much wiser than I was. I thought that would never do. But with all my thoughts and with all the experiences I trust God has been pleased to bring me through there is but one reason that I have been going to and fro for the last ten or twelve years endeavoring to preach Christ to his humble people as the way, the truth and the life, and that it was his divine will and purpose, and was from all eternity. If I am not a deceived mortal, time after time God has shown me my depravity and my utter dependance upon him for everything I have or do. For it is in him we live and move and have our continual being. So it is in the great providence of God that things are as they are. The great and eternal wisdom of the great eternal God embraced and comprehended everything that has ever existed or will exist in time or eternity, both visible and invisible, and in that eternal thought and with his unlimited power he declared the end from the beginning, and from ancient time saying, My counsel shall stand and I will do all my pleasure. I believe that he is unalterable, and I trust that he has given me a sweet hope in his Son and I together with the whole household of faith, will ultimately inhabit the glory world, and sing the glorious doctrine that I have endeavored to preach here to poor sinners who have been taught of God and have been made to realize that there is salvation in no other save Christ, and that is the doctrine of God's sovereign and electing grace, which is so sweet to me. We, as the children of God, have meat to eat that the world knows not of. God in his grace was pleased in eternity to preserve this food in his son for his children, and the storehouse was so secure that eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man the things that God hat prepared for them that love him. The reason that we love him is that he first loved us and gave himself for us. I am not uneasy that there is anything coming up at any time that will hinder the children from eating every meal God has stored away in that great storehouse, and that Christ will prepare for them, or has prepared. They are fed as they get hungry and weak enough. God keeps them just strong enough to walk in his ways, and to know his judgements and to do them. God has made the difference. He forms the light and creates darkness. He makes good and he creates evil. Esau was blessed too, but in no sense as Jacob. God made the difference. He hated Esau, yet he had just as much purpose in Esau as he had in Jacob. Although he hated Esau, yet he must be blessed. God's purpose must be fulfilled in the wicked as much as in the righteous. He must be glorified. His work must praise him, and he shall be glorified in the damnation of these reprobates. In his eternal thought he embraced them, and he had a purpose in them. He will continue the rain on them as well as on the elect. They must go along together. It takes both of them for him to carry out and fulfill his eternal purpose in perfection and it must be perfected, because he is the God of perfection, having even that he desireth. He is God and there is none else. He is God and there is none like him, inhabiting eternity, standing upon the circle of the earth, speaking to the mighty wind and it ceases to manifest its strength, causing the troubled waters to become calm. Who can be likened unto him? I am that I am, I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save.

In contending for these principles I meet much opposition, but by the grace of God, I hope I have contended for them, and I trust that by his grace I will continue to preach nothing among the children of God but the doctrine of his electing grace. I do not think there is anything else that will satisfy the longing soul of a poor wayworn traveler who is seeking rest from a worn-out life of sin. The thought of the immutability of God fills my very soul, sometimes to the very brim. It is wonderful to have a hope in God that is unchangeable. When we have the evidence that he loves us and gave himself for us we hear him saying that he died that we might live. Behold what manner of love is this, that we should be called the sons of God, Brethren, it does not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when we shall see him we shall be like him and be satisfied, and that will be enough.

I have just sketched a portion of what I trust this wonderful God has done for me, and a few thoughts concerning these great principles I feel he has shown me and which are more to me than life. My hope is that God will keep me by his grace to the end, that I will never depart from these principles, and that I may hold out faithful unto the end.

An unworthy brother, saved by the grace of God, if saved at all.

Elder D. A. O'BRYANT
July 1938

Manassa, Va. Nov. 19, 1867.

Dear Brother Beebe: — I have been a reader of the "Signs of the Times" for thirty years, and I do not remember that I ever read anything in them that inspired the same degree of pleasure as the communication of Elder J. F. Johnson in the 22nd number of the 35th volume. Not that he presented any new truth, or because he presented the old in any new dress; but it seemed to be presented with such force and beauty as to carry conviction at once to the mind of the reader that it was the truth and nothing but the truth. I have not the vanity to suppose myself capable of adding anything to either its force or beauty, nor is this communication designed for any such purpose. But as the doctrine as expressed by Brother Johnson has encountered considerable opposition, I thought perhaps it would afford him some considerable gratification if even I should endorse the doctrine, as I fully and emphatically do.

Old School Baptists have ever been distinguished for the pertincity with which they have insisted upon the necessity of the new birth. But alas for many, when their views of what constitutes the new birth are investigated, they are found to be certain vague and ill-defined ideas about the operations of the Spirit of God upon the human soul, changing it from natural to spiritual, or a birth without pre-existence or regeneration.

If there is a spiritual birth without pre-existent spiritual existence, why should not that birth as often develop a devil as a saint? It is only because every seed produces its like; that "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." If that which is born did pre-exist, it was either self-existent or it was begotten. If the latter, it follows as necessarily that there must be a progenitor as a progeny, or in other words, that this spiritual seed must have a spiritual life and head on necessarily as that the natural seed must have one. Some plants and vines may be propagated by cuttings, but however much they may be multiplied by this process, all may be traced to an original seed, and the fruit will ever show the original kind. Hence we have the two Adams. "The first was made a living soul; the second a quickening spirit." It is no more marvelous that the whole spiritual family existed in Christ than it is that the whole natural family, including his wife existed in Adam before any of them born, or than that two nations should be in the womb of Rebekah.

Those (so-called) Old School Baptists who believe in making a spiritual man out of a natural one, only differ from their christian friends of other denominations as to what is necessary to be done in order to effect this change. Both virtually repudiate the new birth, and both contradict the apostle, who declares, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned. If the natural man can receive the things of the Spirit of God, with what consistency can any man oppose any or all of the systems that are employed for educating, scaring, or otherwise imparting such conception? or whence arises any necessity for his being born again? If it be necessary that a man should be born again in order to his seeing the kingdom of God, it must be because nature, or the fleshly birth, furnishes no faculties, no matter how highly they may be improved; or how diligently applied, that can comprehend or receive the things of the Spirit of God. The new birth must therefore be a development and bringing forth of other faculties, and these of a higher order, else nothing is gained by being born again.

Brother Johnson has shown so clearly that everything that is born must first exist, that it would look like plagiarism for me to attempt to argue the subject farther. He has also shown with equal clearness that the term "regenerate" refers to their first begetting, and not to being born or bringing forth. I have often felt a curiosity to know how those persons who believe regeneration and the new birth are synonymous expressions and that when it is effected the natural man is changed into a spiritual man or at least that the soul, which is the life and ruling principle, is so changed, get along when they find any remains of carnality, or any propensity to evil. It seems to me they ought at once to abandon either their hope or their doctrine. I cannot see how they can still maintain both. The bible view of the doctrine, however, teaches how one may be a sinner and yet a saint — how he may exhibit the fruits of the flesh and the fruits of the spirit, and how he may die and yet live. All truth is calculated to strengthen and encourage the hopes of the believer, and the only effect of error is to confuse and to confound. The same spirit that indicted the effusions of prophets and apostles writes that same truth in the hearts of God's children. Hence whenever the truth is proclaimed it finds a ready response in the experience of the christian; and whenever doubts and fears arise, it is always from a misapprehension of what the truth is. Thus "I see so much evil and indwelling corruption in my nature I fear that I have not been born again," is a conclusion that could only be reached by supposing that the new birth eradicates all this corruption, and makes the person holy. But if the truth teaches that in the new birth there is imparted and brought forth a new principle, that is at variance with all the workings of nature, without destroying or changing a single one of all the affections, passions, or lusts that belong to nature, and the christian, like the apostle Paul, finds a new law in his members warring against the law of the mind, or "the flesh lusting against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh?" This fact, while it may make him often cry, "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from this body of death?" yet is a sure guarantee that he is the subject of this spiritual birth, for so the gospel teaches.

But I will not pursue this subject farther at this time.

Yours, very truly,
Elder R. C. Leachman

HEBREWS X. 26.

We understand that this admonition, like that in Hebrews vi. 4-6, was addressed to the saints, which were recognized by the inspired writer of the epistle, as "Holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling." As he had told them in chapter sixth, that if they should fall away, it would be impossible to renew them again to repentance, according to the manner of the Levitical priesthood, seeing that such a renewal would require Christ to be again sacrificed, so he tells them again in this text, "There remaineth no more sacrifice for sins." When the priest under the law made atonement for the children of Israel, and the Israelites again sinned, there remained farther sacrifices for their sins; the sacrifice was to be repeated continually; but Christ has made one offering for sin, and but one, and there remains no more. But to the professed disciple of Christ, who has sinned willfully, after that he has received a knowledge of the truth, there remains a certain looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour — what, the saints? No, the saints can never be devoured, for Christ has by one offering perfected them forever, and he has given his word for it, "They shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of my hand." What then shall be devoured by the "judgment and fiery indignation," which the willful offender is fearfully looking for? "The adversaries." The adversaries of the cause of God and truth shall truly be devoured; but says the apostle, "We are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak." And again, in the close of this chapter, he says, "But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition, but of them that believe to the saving of the soul." If a professed disciple of Christ, willfully transgresses the laws of the kingdom, is it strange that he should fear that he is only an adversary? And even if he is not, he feels afraid that he is, and looks for that judgment which awaits the adversaries.

This whole subject is an admonition to the saints. Moses' law could not be transgressed by an Israelite with impunity. The offender died without mercy, for the law of Moses knew no mercy for its transgressors. But as Moses was but a servant, and Christ is a Son over his own house, the offender who hath dishonored Christ, trodden underfoot the son of God, by despising his law, counted the blood of the covenant wherewith he was sanctified an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the spirit of grace, he hath comitted far greater offense, and is worthy of a sorer punishment, and if judged by the law of Moses, would be subjected to a sorer punishment, and if judged by the law of Moses, would be subjected to a sorer punishment. But he is, if a christian, under law to Christ, and a copy of that law is written in his heart, and it read thus, notwithstanding the offender's deserts, "I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their inquities I will remember no more." It is a certain, however, that he will visit their transgression with a rod, and their iniquities with stripes, and they shall know that it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

May we listen to the admonition of our subject, and may God grant us grace whereby we may serve him acceptably with reverence and godly fear; for our God is a consuming fire.

PSALM 70.

Make haste, O God, to deliver me; make haste to help me, O Lord.

Let then be ashamed and confounded that seek after my soul: let them be turned backward, and put to confusion, that desire my hurt.

Let them be turned back for a reward of their shame that say, Aha, Aha.

Let all those that seek thee rejoice and be glad in thee: and let such as love thy salvation say continually, Let God be magnified.

But I am poor and needy: make haste unto me, O God: thou art my help and my deliverer; O Lord, make no tarrying.

HYMN

Give to our God immortal praise;
Mercy and truth are all his ways;
Wonders of grace to God belong;
Repeat his mercies in your song.

Give to the Lord of lords renown,
The King of kings with glory crown;
His mercies ever shall endure,
When lords and kings are known no more.

He built the earth, he spread the sky,
And fixed the starry lights on high;
Wonders of grace to God belong;
Repeat his mercies in your song.

He fills the sun with morning light;
He bids the moon direct the night;
His mercies ever shall endure,
When suns and moons shall shine no more.

The Jews he freed from Pharoah's hand,
And brought them to the promised land;
Wonders of grace to God belong;
Repeat his mercies in your song.

He saw his people dead in sin,
But still he loved and pitied them;

His mercies ever shall endure,
When death and sin shall reign no more.

He sent his Son with power to save
From guilt, and darkness, and the grave;
Wonders of grace to God belong;
Repeat his mercies in your song.

Through this vain world he guides our feet,
And leads us to his heavenly seat;
His mercies ever shall endure,
When this vain world shall be no more.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life." John 5:24.

Elder J. B. Farmer

The Lord of glory, the Creator of heaven and earth, the One in whom the fullness of the Godhead dwells, cannot lie or fail in a promise. He spoke as no other man ever spoke. He speaks and it is done. He commands and it stands fast. He spoke the heavens and the earth into existence, with all the things that fill them. Through His word and by His Spirit, He has made known plainly the things of His kingdom that had been hidden from the beginning of the world. He caused His doctrine to be recorded in His scriptures for the learning and comfort of the family He loved with an everlasting love. But He hid His kingdom from the wise and prudent of this world that loved the present world and trusted in themselves for righteousness.

No one would ever have known the mind of God if He had not condescended to reveal it to His little ones. No one would have ever realized that he himself was a sinner, condemned to death by the righteous and holy law of God, and that he was in need of a Savior, had not God enlightened his heart. No one could have imagined, in the carnal mind, the remedy for sin, which God manifested in His great salvation, which He ordained before He made the world. The natural mind could not attain to the heavenly way of mercy and grace, which God alone had made. It is impossible that one should think in his nature that God, Himself would come down to earth and take upon Himself the form of a man; and as a man, even God in the flesh, should fulfill the righteous law of God on behalf of His people; and that He should take upon Himself the sin of His people; and that He Who knew no sin should be made to be sin for us, that we should be made the righteousness of God in Him. No one could have understood, of themselves, that Jesus should impute his righteousness unto those He loved. No one could have thought, in the loftiest of human reasoning, that Christ could die and be raised from the dead as the firstborn of many brethren, justifying and giving hope of eternal life to the little ones who were blessed to believe in Him and to hope in His finished salvation. No one could have ever calculated in the natural mind that God would send His Holy Spirit into the hearts of His little ones to keep them from the evil of this world and bring them safely to the end of their journey. Neither could one have imagined that Jesus Christ should appear in all His glory at the end of the world in flaming fire bringing vengeance upon all that know not God and obey not His gospel. No one would ever have known that God would destroy the world, raise the dead, and carry the changed, resurrected saints home to be with Him forever, if God had not shown these things unto His own. The scriptures were given unto God's children and were revealed to them by the Holy Spirit that they might understand, know, and be comforted by these things.

None of these things could ever have been understood if Jesus, the living Word of God, had not written them in the hearts and minds of His people. The things we are blessed to believe are sometimes referred to as the faith of the Son of God, or the doctrine of Christ. How then is one brought to believe this faith or doctrine? The apostle was blessed of the Spirit to say that "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." So we are made to understand that to believe a thing, one must first hear it. Now, we know that in order to hear, one must have an ear with which to hear. Jesus said, "He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear what the Spirit sayeth unto the churches." Some, indeed have been given this ear of hearing spiritual things. But truly, everyone has not an ear to hear. We notice how the Lord, in His great wisdom made the serpent. The serpent, unlike most other creatures which God created, has no ears. It cannot hear anything at all. All its communication with its surroundings must come by sight, smell, feeling vibrations, heat etc. It is no wonder that the devil, Satan, is referred to as the unpersuaded one. He, nor his seed, the wicked have ever heard with understanding one word concerning the spiritual kingdom of God. The devil and his followers have never understood the doctrine of Christ, for they have no means of knowing it. They have not an ear to hear and Jesus said that His word has no place in them. Jesus said unto those who hated Him, "Ye are from beneath; I am from above: ye are of this world; I not of this world. I said therefore unto you, that ye shall die in your sins: for if ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins."

But God's little ones — weak as they are in nature, like sheep are weak— have all been given a hearing spiritual ear. The hearing of spiritual things comes only by the living Word of God. All men have not faith, but faith is the gift of God unto those He loved. So, by the Holy Spirit indwelling God's children, they are all given the gift of faith, by which they hear the word of God. Jesus said, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me: and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand. My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand. I and my Father are one."

It seems that I am always desiring more evidence that I am in the way of Christ and not deceived. When I look within my nature, all I see is selfishness, corruption and pride. I see no evidence there that I have part in God's kingdom. The apostle was blessed to say, "I know that within me, that is in my flesh, there dwelleth no good thing." And we know that sin abides in the flesh. So, our assurance comes not from the flesh, but rather from the Word of God. The apostle was blessed to say, "He has sent His Spirit into our hearts crying Abba Father." And Jesus said, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life." The question then is this. Do we hear His word, and do we believe on Him (God the Father) that sent Him (Christ the Son)? Do you love to hear the words of Jesus, even when they seem to be contrary to everything in the world? Jesus said, "Except you eat my flesh and drink my blood, you have no life in you." When he said this, many, taking the words literally, were repulsed and turned away and walked no more with Him, saying, "This is a hard saying, who can hear it?" But when Jesus said, "Will you also go away?" Peter said, "Where shall we go? You have the words of eternal life." If we believe that Jesus is the Christ and that He gave His flesh an offering for sin, and that He poured out His life's blood unto death for the atonement of our sins, we are eating His flesh and drinking His blood spiritually. To believe these things is to receive them. And the doctrine of Christ is our meat and drink.

Do you believe that the sovereign God, of one lump of clay (all mankind) made vessels of honor and vessels of dishonor? Do you believe the vessels of honor were made up for glory, and that the vessels of dishonor were made for destruction? This teaching is according to the scripture and according to the doctrine of Christ. The world rejects it and cannot believe it, saying that it would be unjust for God to do such a thing.

They say today, as they said in the apostle's day, If these things are true, how can God find fault? The apostle was rightly given to say, "Who art thou,0 man that repliest against God?" One cannot bring the God of heaven and earth to account for His works. The carnal mind, which is enmity against God, always resists the truth. But God's little ones, by the Spirit, hear His word and believe it and rejoice in it, regardless of how contrary it seems to the natural mind.

And if one desires more evidence that he has a part in the kingdom of God, God has given it. He said through His apostle, "Hereby ye may know that you have passed from death unto life, because you love the brethren." Now, here is a big question. Do we indeed and in truth love the brethren? Have we heard His commandment that above all things, we have fervent charity one to another? Anyone saying that he loves the brethren, but does not continually seek their good is deceiving himself. One walking after the flesh and in a carnal mind stirs up strife by bearing tales. He seeks to cause divisions and separate chief friends by introducing doubts about one to another. He makes one the object of a joke or of some foolishness and tries to excuse himself by saying he was only kidding. He boasts in the flesh and exalts himself above others. He tries to humiliate them and rule over them. He holds grudges and will not be reconciled to another, who he thinks may have offended him. He respects men's persons and hold them in high esteem because of wealth, natural learning, position, family, or some other natural thing. He despises others because they seem to lack these worldly things. He meddles in the affairs of others and does not faithfully see to his own things. If one hates his brother he abides in death.

We know that we are all subject to do such fleshly things and surely have done them and would continue in that way of death unless we were brought out of it and kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation. The blessed apostle said, "Love not in word, but in deed and in truth." True love seeks to walk after the Spirit and not after the flesh. It seeks the good of his neighbor; it holds its tongue about rumors, accusations and opinions until every word is established. Love puts away foolishness and pride and arrogance; it humbles one and causes him to be sober and compassionate. Love is kind and forgiving and desires peace with honor. Love seeks no ill to its neighbor and to be faithful in all things. Love respects no man's person. It makes him condescend to men of low estate. We are called to examine ourselves, whether we are in the faith. The children of God are tried every moment and go about begging for mercy. They go seeking wisdom and mercy and grace. They find themselves saying, "Lord save or I perish."

The Lord has assured us that those who hear His word, and who believe in God the Father, who sent His Son into the world to save His people, already have everlasting life. And He promised that they shall not come into condemnation - that they should not perish. He also made it plain that His little believing, loving, trusting ones have passed from death unto life. This means that there is no going back into that death. If one has passed from death into everlasting spiritual life, he will never die. Jesus said, "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." Jesus also said, "Verily, verily I say unto you, the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall bear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live. For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given the Son to have life in himself." The Lord speaks to each of His little ones. He gives life to them that they may live and hear. And He gives them the gift of faith to believe not only upon the Father, but also upon the Son. Then He gives grace and love to them in order that they should take up their cross daily and follow Him down to the end of their journey here on earth.

The Lord has also assured us that there is coming a day at the end of the world when He shall come to receive His own to Himself, that they should see Him as He is in glory, and should be like Him in a glorious spiritual body. For this to take place there must be a change made for those that are living at His appearing, and a resurrection from the dead for all who have died previous to His coming. Jesus explained it like this. He said, "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." And the Lord spoke through the apostle saying, "The dead in Christ shall be raised first, and those that are alive and remain at his coming shall be changed in a moment in a twinkling of an eye." Those that had been blessed of God to walk after the spirit, both those that were alive at His coming and those dead in Christ, shall be changed and raised in His likeness, and shall be received into glory. Those who have walked after the flesh and hated God, His Son, His people, His commandments and all that is good, both those living at his coming and those dead, shall be made to stand before Him and enter into damnation. The ones that are taken to glory are those vessels of honor, made up to glory. The ones that enter into damnation are those vessels made to dishonor and destruction. God is both merciful and just. He said He would have mercy upon whom He would have mercy, and that He would harden whom He willed. This is a hard saying to most, but it is the gospel of the salvation of the sovereign God that does all His will in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth.

If His word is precious to our hearing; if our heart overflows with love toward God the Father, His Son and His poor and despised remnant of people; we may have great assurance that we have everlasting life; that we shall not come into condemnation; that we shall never perish; because we are in His hand and have passed from death unto life; and that we shall dwell in the house of the Lord forever with all saints. May His glorious name be praised, world without end.

Love is the golden chain that binds
The happy souls above;
And he's an heir of heaven that finds
His bosom glow with love.

This was written in love and in hope of eternal life.

Dearly beloved ones in Christ:

"Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned: for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins." Isaiah, 40:1.

What beautiful words that are written in this scripture to a poor tempest tossed child of God. It is food for the soul. It warms the heart, and calms the troubled breast in one who has been tried in the furnace of affliction time and time again. And have learned, and have been taught by our dear Lord and Savior, that there is no other way save by the cross of Christ, that we are nothing and can do nothing without our maker leader, and savior, our Lord. We have to be taught over, and over again where our strength comes from. That all things were accomplished even from before this time world was put into existence, that there is nothing lacking when it comes to the salvation of the Lord's people. The warfare, spoken of in the above scripture, is between the spirit and the flesh, the old man of sin and the new man, which is spiritual, the one against the other, it seems never to go away. O when shall it cease and be all over, and I can go home and be at rest, if that be my lot in the end. Only the Lord knows how it shall be with me. I believe that the warfare mentioned above will be with us as long as we live on this earth, the flesh against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh. The apostle Paul, put it in this manner, in this fleshly body which is of the earth, earthly body, there dwelleth no good thing, and when I would do good, evil is present. So it is day by day, that we have to go through these troubling things. Troubles, and sorrows, I daily do pass through. It causes us to mourn. But if I be one of his, we shall be comforted, in the end.

May the Lord bless those who mourn in Zion, his love and mercy endures forever. There is a New Jerusalem City; the city of our God, the one that John was blessed to see coming down from God out of Heaven, that is found in the 21st Ch. Rev. 1-2. "And I saw a new heaven, and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." What the Lord hath prepared for those of his people, that love his appearing, shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation. It shall be an everlasting kingdom, that shall stand forever; and ever, world without end. A kingdom not made with hands, eternal and in the heavens. What a great God He is.

I would like to mention here that if I know anything about the truth I believe that we surely heard it there at the South

Ouachita Associational meeting. It was good news from a far country. What love and sweet fellowship we had there with the dear Brethren, and Sisters, from far and near, that was blessed to be there. I believe that the table was set there from of old, that it was set with holy drippings from the master's table. Manna from heaven, for every one that was given ears to hear what the spirit saith to the churches. Not in praise of men, but all praise and honor be unto almighty God; the Father; for such wonderful gifts that he gave to his beloved ministers that were blessed to be there. How beautiful are the feet of those that preach the gospel of glad tidings and great joy to the meek, and the humble of the Lord's little children. May it be the Lord's will that we will be blessed to attend those wonderful meetings for however long it be his will. Humbly in hope.

ELDER JOHN TANNER

Dear Elder Mewborn:

Following is a short article on Elder John Tanner, a minister of the Gospel that I tried to trace through his ministry. For some reason many years ago, my curiosity was aroused about him while reading the Autobiography of Elder Wilson Thompson. He was one of the ministers who composed the presbytery that ordained Elder Thompson. He was also one of the ministers who constituted Rocky Swamp Church, located in Halifax County, North Carolina on July 11, 1774 according to Elder Hassell, and a member of the Kehukee Association. I am not able to tell whether at this time he was a resident of Virginia or North Carolina. However, he managed to run afoul of the legal authorities in Virginia. I know that you are well aware that before the Revolutionary War, Virginia was a crown colony and the Anglican or Established Church was established by the law and was the only church allowed to exit. On May 15, 1773 he and Elder John Weatherford were apprehended by a warrant in Chesterfield County, Virginia issued by a Col. Archibald Cary. It's interesting to note that Elder John Weatherford is the man whom Weatherford Church in the Staunton River Association is named for. On June 4, 1773, Elders Tanner and Weatherford were tried by seven "Gentlemen Justices." The Court order book says, "Where upon ordered that they give Surety for their Good Behavior and keeping the peace for one year each in the penalty of 50 pounds with two sureties of 25 pounds each and be committed to Goal (jail) till they do so."

The warrant says that they, "not being qualified by law do so." This means preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ. I am quite sure that you know that Baptist preachers were handled quite roughly in Virginia by Colonial authorities.

The next record I find of him is that in June of 1777 he was shot by a man named Dawson at Norfleets Ferry on the Roanoke River. Elder Tanner had an appointment at Sandy Run meeting house and was on his way there. He was accompanied by Elder Dargan. Dawson shot him with a large horse pistol loaded with what seems to have been buckshot. Dawson was a violent man who was angry at Elder Tanner for baptizing his wife some months earlier. Elder Tanner's life was despaired of and was in critical condition for some time but did recover. Elder Tanner did not prosecute Dawson "but submitted to it patiently as persecution for Christ's sake."

Sometime around 1784 he removed to Kentucky and settled on the Kentucky side of the Ohio opposite the mouth of the Big Miami River. It was here that he had a son also named John who was about nine years old at the time. This boy was kidnapped by the Shawnee Indians and spent practically his entire life among the Shawnees. He was eventually united with his family.

He labored in Kentucky for several years and was thought to be one of the ministers who constituted the Tates Creek Church in Kentucky.

He later removed to Missouri and settled near New Madrid. It was here that in 1811 and early 1812 the severe earthquake occurred known as the "New Madrid" earthquake. This is thought to be the most severe earthquake to occur in the United States.

From this point Elder Thompson, in his autobiography, gives us an interesting account of Elder Tanner and his part in Elder Thompson's ordination. Elder Tanner died in 1812.

I found Elder Tanner to have evidently been a faithful minister of the gospel who did not faint at the trials and tribulations he passed through.

VOICES OF THE PAST

EXPERIENCE OF ELDER JOE SAWYER

I hope the Lord willing, I can tell some of the things that brought me to the Old Baptist Church and what I say may be to the praise and honor of God, who has paid the price for His people. I was born in Pitt County, North Carolina, the oldest of four children. I had three sisters. We were raised on a tobacco farm. We didn't have a lot of the natural things of this world, but we lived well in that day. I didn't go to church when I was young. I remember going once with my grandfather, Elder Tillman Sawyer. My parents and oldest sister were members of the Primitive Baptist Church. One sister loved our doctrine and the other two loved the doctrine of salvation by works. Two of my sisters and my parents are now deceased. While living on the farm, the Lord blessed us to have the things we needed.

My experience of being brought to the Primitive Baptist Church would take a long time to tell. Many things have taken place in my life. I stayed home and played when I was a little boy and didn't go to church. After Doris and I got married, I became concerned about what was going to happen to me. Things just caved in more or less, and I went and joined an Armenian Church. I didn't go there long because I felt it wasn't right. I continued to fight against the Old Baptist and read the scriptures to condemn what they believed. I just couldn't believe that God loved one and hated the other. God made me know along the way that I didn't choose to go among the Old Baptist and I certainly didn't choose to become a preacher. I hope God is the One who brought me to the Old Baptist Church. I tried a long time to prove to my daddy that salvation is by works, not grace. I left the church I first joined and went to Greenville.

Experience has been a great part of my life. I couldn't talk before a crowd. I was shy and wouldn't say anything. I wanted to farm with my mama and daddy more than anything else, but things didn't work out. I had to leave the farm and go to the city and get a job as a salesman. I had a wife and three children to support, so I learned to talk to make a living. I didn't know this was working for my good. I thought it was the worst thing to happen in my life, but I had it to do. I learned how to talk and to meet people. It was a great experience.

I was still down on the Old Baptist. I didn't think they were right, but my daddy did. He always believed it, but I thought they were wrong. On the fifth Sunday in March 1958, my parents and my wife's parents invited us to go to Hancocks Church to a union. I had been in a world of trouble and didn't know what was wrong. I had been taught I was a sinner. I knew I had to stand before God's people. I begged Him not to choose me for I was not qualified. I was nothing. I couldn't speak to the Lord's people who I felt were the wisest people in the world. I felt to be a poor sinner and could not speak to His children. I had taught Sunday school that morning, but I told my wife I would go. I continued to criticize that they had the ugliest singing and they thought they were the only people in the world who were saved and everyone else is wrong. When we got to the church, preaching was over and they were singing hymn 322 in the Lloyd's Hymn Book, "Glorious things of thee are spoken". As I sat on the back seat a voice spoke to me and said, "This is My church, this is My people". I want to tell you something brethren, when that voice spoke it brought tears to my eyes. I thought they were the prettiest people I had ever seen in my life and I wanted to be a part of them. I had thought they were wrong, I had fought so hard not to be a part of it. God opened my eyes and He showed me this was His people. He didn't tell me I was a part of His people, but He told me that this is "My church and My people". When God shows you something, you will never forget it. It is just as plain to me today as it was that day. I assure you the things God brings about in your life you won't need encouragement from man, He will make you willing. God will bring His people in His way and time, not ours. God brought me in this way to show me just what I was by nature and what I must be by the Grace of God. I was blind and couldn't see until He opened my eyes. I fought as hard as I could not to be a part of the Primitive Baptist, but when He showed me that they were a beautiful people; I wanted to be a part of them, if they would have me. I thought, above everything else, that these people must be right.

They believed salvation is by the grace of God, it is free and something man can't give you. This comes only from God. You can't get any help for it. None of my children, nor my wife, belongs to the Primitive Baptist Church. I've never encouraged any of them, although some of them believe it. I never told my wife she should join, although I feel she believes this truth. God must persuade them, not me.

In my experiences over the years, if I have had any, the lord has showed me just how helpless I am. I don't know if I'm a preacher or not, but I sure fought not to become one. I'm not sure if I have ever said anything to praise God, but when it's my time to stand before the church, I always try to beg Him to put something in my mouth to praise Him and if not, to just sit me down. We didn't have a car when we first got married and we didn't have a whole lot when I joined the church, but there was a great change in my life from that day forward. I went back to the church I had been a member of and told them to take my name off for I had joined another church. They wanted to know where I had joined and I told them I had joined a Primitive Baptist Church. They said that was the nearest nothing they had ever heard of. I told them I would tell them some of my experience why I went to the Old Baptist, but I didn't feel they would understand. I asked my name be removed and I never went back. I believe the Lord's people are a separate people and I don't believe they uphold the things that are not right. If we do, we are going to have to pay for it down the road.

All things work together for good to them who are the called according to His purpose. We think sometimes It is working against us, but it is working for our good. I was a route salesman for Frito-Lay for about 15 years. On one occasion I was asked to be a district manager. This position would allow me to have better benefits and my retirement would be better also. I didn't know what to do. I went to Greensboro to talk with the regional manager and the sales manager. I walked into the office that day and told them I hoped to be a Primitive Baptist minister and would that have any effect on me having the job. I asked if either one knew anything about the Primitive Baptist and Tommy Thompson the regional manager from around Goldsboro said, "That I do Joe. All my family belong to the Primitive Baptist Church, except me, and I belong to the Presbyterian Church." The sales manager said he didn't think much of "jack leg" preachers, they won't work. Tommy told him, "Yes they will work. Old Baptist do what they say they are going to do." So the Lord took care of me there. He has taken care of me all the days of my life. He has watched over me and kept me. I have had some beautiful dreams and experiences and I believe God will continue to give His people more experiences as they live here in this life. Without those bethel spots in my life, I wouldn't even have a hope. Sometimes I get down low, real low, and I'm like David when he said, "is his mercy clear gone forever?"

Having to leave the farm and getting a public job was all working for my good and I didn't even know it. I dreaded the change. I would read the bible to prove to Daddy that he was wrong. I felt the letter would prove him wrong. I would read the bible until two or three o'clock in the morning and learned to quote the scriptures. I thought I could prove the Primitive Baptist to be wrong, but instead I was showed they are the right people. That's why I'm in the Old Baptist Church today, because. I trust He brought me. I told God to get anybody to preach but me, I wasn't qualified. God can make you willing to do anything. This is something between you and your God. As far as preaching in the church of the living God, that's the most sacred thing in the world. To walk among God's people, a people that He has loved and separated and made different is most sacred. We are different by His grace and by His goodness.

My daddy and I were baptized together. I joined at Farmville Church and he joined at the water. It was a rejoicing day. Elder A. P. Mewborn baptized both of us. Elder Mewborn never said anything to me about becoming a preacher. I'm a lot like that. I don't think you should encourage people to be anything in the church. If they are not believers, you will just have a world of trouble. Daddy was a deacon at Hancocks Church and my grandfather was an elder. This is not the reason I became a minister. It has been said that some people only join the Primitive Baptist because their parents were, but t don't believe that. We believe the doctrine because God has given us the faith to believe it and that's why we love it. One of the first experiences I ever had before joining the church was in a vision or dream. I thought the Lord or someone had placed me on the straightest highway I had ever seen in my life. I was in a cart like you used to hitch a mule to and I couldn't get out. I had no control of where I was going. On the dirt walked a black man; he didn't walk on the highway. All of a sudden I was carried into this deep pit of water. I fought with all the energy I had to keep from dying. I finally gave up and said that I'm going to die and there is no way I can get out of this place. There were high walls and I couldn't get out. I was trying to cling to little pieces of driftwood to hold me up, but that wasn't helping. That was my works and works won't hold you up. An arm and hand reached down and lifted me out of the water and dried me off. I believe it was the arm of Jesus that lifted me out. I was doomed to die and there was nothing I could do about it. I was helpless and we do become helpless when we become God's children and He reveals the truth to us. We have always been His children; we just didn't know it. I asked someone what the dream meant and they couldn't tell me. Over the years I believe the Lord has showed me what it meant. I was depending upon my own works and I was going to die. God lifted me out and gave me the faith to believe that His works would stand and mine would never stand in that world to come.

All the things that have taken place in my life has been a great mystery to me. God has blessed me beyond measure in so many ways. He has left many little purposes along the way for me.

There has been some of joy, some of happiness and some of heartache. There have been a lot of trials and tribulations. I think about what the apostle said, "Woe to them that are at ease in Zion." Pharaoh will always try to destroy the Lord's people if he can. He is still trying to destroy them today, but God will protect His children. I often think about the scripture, "If God be for you, who can be against you?" I didn't volunteer to become a minister. I used to fall down on my knees in the cornfield and beg the Lord not to choose me. I wasn't qualified to be anything, but I didn't have a choice. The apostle said, "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel." I want to tell you, He brings you down and makes you willing to be anything in His church.

I asked a home with the church at Hancocks, the second Sunday in May 1958. In August of 1959, I began to speak on the floor at my home church for about a year. I was liberated and spoke among the associations for about 3 years. In August of 1963, I was ordained as a minister. Back then we had a lot of ministers. I never thought I would see it as it is today. We don't know what the future holds. God is able to fill up all the Old Baptist Churches again. It has to come from Him, for anything we bring into the church wouldn't be anything in the first place. I believe all the persuasion we ever need, will come from God. In my experience and calling as an elder, if I am one, it is by the grace of God. He has spoken to me on many occasions. I can't tell you all that has taken place with me since He first spoke to me at Hancock's Church that day. I know that voice. It will make you afraid and to fear Him. The one I seek to please is God, not man. That is vanity and altogether nothing. If He has called me to be an elder, I'm just a servant to Him and to the churches in which I've been chosen as pastor. I didn't choose to be a pastor, He did the choosing. He gives the church a mind to elect whom He has chosen to be there. I believe the pastor will be given something to say and it will be to praise and glorify God.

This is a little bit of the experiences I have had. I've had a lot more, but it would take too long to tell everything that has taken place with me over the years. I want to say I hope I love the Lord, I love His people and I love the things He has put into the hearts of His people. He has written His laws into their hearts and printed them in their minds and they don't need anybody to tell them what to do, but God. He is the leader and teacher. He is everything and He does His own choosing. If I had a choice, I wouldn't have united with the Primitive Baptist Church; I would have gone somewhere else. I certainly wouldn't have chosen to become a minister. Flesh likes to be someone, to be looked up to, and the Lord's people are just plain and simple. I hope by the grace of God, I have been made to love the church and to love the things it stands for. I believe these things will stand in that world to come. So may God bless you and I hope He will take me one day to a better place. I don't deserve it by anything I've done. I've done all the sinning and He has done all the saving, but I just hope He loves me.

For the Signs of the Times.

AN EDUCATED MINISTRY.

The question, whether a classical education is necessary to a gospel minister, has elicited much disputation in what is called the christian world. The assumption that neither a classical education nor the want of it is a disqualification, is abundantly evident from facts. The right of calling and qualifying for the ministry belongs exclusively to the Head of the Church, who in calling the first preachers of the gospel, chose whom he would; and the prerogative then asserted by him has never been surrendered to another. When it pleases him so to do, he calls men of learning; but then it is not to make a display of their learning, but to preach the simple gospel of truth. Indeed some of the plainest preachers and writers in the world have been among the most profound scholars; and if there is any real advantage in learning, it is to enable a preacher to simplify his language so as to reach the understanding of his most simple hearers. When we find a man in the pulpit aiming to make a display of his learning, we may safely conclude that he is a pedant, or a poor scholar; and when I hear men crowding their sermons with big words, I am always reminded of the following stanza:

"Such labour nothing in so strange a style, Amuse the unlearned and make the learned smile."

But tho' God has been pleased at times to call the learned to the ministry, yet it is evident that a large majority of the first set of gospel preachers were not such; and it is equally evident that in all subsequent ages he has persued the same plan. Whoever he may see fit to call to the important work, he will qualify for it, so that when we find a man aiming to display his learning or on the other hand, one unable to communicate his ideas so as to convey instruction or edification to the minds of his hearers, have a right to question the call of either to the work; for to suppose that God would call to the ministry without qualifying for it, would be to reflect on his wisdom and goodness. Few men we presume, are prepared to dispute that the primitive ministers were unlearned men, i. e. in the wisdom of this world, and those that are, may be convinced by consulting Acts iv. 13; and if this and a host of corroborating passages will not convince them, we shall have to give them up as impenetrable.

But the advocates for an exclusively learned ministry, (who are forced to admit the above fact) have drawn an argument from the comparative ignorance of the world at that time to what it is now. They tell us that the great mental improvement that has taken place in the world, calls for a different ministry; and yet, strange to say, that not withstanding this boasted improvement, these very men hold up Virgil, Cicero, and other ancient authors as models of literary perfection, and insist that an acquaintance with these authors is indispensable to a classical education.

Now is it not passing strange that the learned of this age of intellectual improvement, would look back to that crude and ignorant age of the world when the Kingdom of Christ was established; and his first preachers chosen for models of literary perfection? for it will be recollected that it is not for historical information that they are consulted, but for elegancy of style, and fine, and beauty of diction. And when the learned of this day shall have their Virgil, Cicero, and other ancient authors out of their literary institutions and substituted modern authors in their place, we shall begin to think them serious when they boast of the mental superiority of the present over the apostolic age. But perhaps these learned gentlemen of the pulpit are not aware that they are playing into the hands of infidels, with whom it is quite common to speak of the ignorance of the apostolic age in support of their objections against the religion of Christ. With them it is an important object to destroy the truth of miracle; and to effect this, they tell us that the extreme ignorance of the world at the age of miracles, afforded Christ and his apostles a favorable opportunity to impose upon it by ficticious miracles.

And as those learned gentlemen insist it that a classical education is necessary to enable us to I meet and rebut infidel objections, I wonder how they would go about to refute the above. They could not do as did an able defender of the truth once in England; who is refuting it in the presence of a club of infidels, observed, that every school-boy, with Virgil in his hand, could rise up and prove the scoundrel, wretch and liar, but Infidels have as much right to resort to a lie to answer their purposes as professed gospel preachers have. I can see no difference between a pious and impious fraud.

It is a well known fact, that both Virgil and Cibero flourished but a short time before Christ. The birth of Christ occurred during the reign of Augustus Ceasar, who in forming the second triumvirate in Rome with Antony and Lepedus, to conciliate the feelings of Antony, sacrificied Cicero to his resentment. Virgil being a favorite of Augustus, and the circumstance of having received some peculiar favours from the Emperor, gave rise to some of his most elegant productions. I merely mention these facts to shew that the learned would acknowledge themselves indebted to men who were nearly contemporary with Christ and his Apostles, for the most perfect models of human production; indeed among the learned these men stand unrivalled. When will men be consistent?

But the above argument is altogether gratuitous, and without foundation in truth or fact. The reason why God chose an iliterate ministry is given by the Holy Ghost; and "let God be true and every man a liar." The reason will the found in 1 Cor. 1:27-29: "But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are, that no flesh should glory in his presence. By connecting the latter clause of the 28th verse of this chap. with the 1st verse of the 2nd chap., it will appear evident that Paul had a primary allusion to the ministry. "And I brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech, or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God." We are not to conclude from this that Paul's language was rude or that it wanted true wisdom; but that it was not with worldly wisdom. He did not aim to make, a display of human literature, but conveyed his ideas in a plain simple style, so that the weak and unlearned might understand him, while the learned were not left ignorant of what he said. The Apostle here mentions his own method of preaching as an exemplification of what he had said before in reference to the general character of the ministry, in point of human learning; and to shew that it was not on account of his learning that God had called him, but in fact God had unlearncd him, i. e.- stripped him of his human learning and made a simple gospel minister of him; and the fact that God did strip Paul of his human learning, and reduce him to a level with his unlearned brethren in point of style, was as strong an evidence that he did not need learned men to preach his gospel, as that of calling unlearned men to the work. So that the fact that Paul was a learned man, so far from proving that God needed learned men, as such to preach his gospel, furnishes a strong evidence to the contrary; for if he wanted him as a learned man why strip him of his learning, or send him forth in as simple a dress as those who had not been learned as he was at the feet of Gamaliel?

There is no fact more clearly established than that a majority of primitive ministers of Christ were destitute of the common blandishment of human learning; and it is equally clear that the reason why God called such, was not because of the ignorance the world at the time but to stem the pride of men; to confound the wise and prudent of this world; and thereby maintain his sovereign independence by telling the great and learned of the world known, that he needs not their services to carry into effect his eternal purpose in the salvation of the Elect. Let those then, who dare attempt to wrest the prerogative of making preachers from the hand of God, answer their arrogant presumption to him if they can; for both these who dare to introduce into the world a different ministry to that which God has appointed, and those who are thus imposed upon, the world will have to answer the appalling interrogatory, Who hath required this at your hands, that ye should tread my courts?

The design of God to confound the wise and mighty of this world by choosing an illiterate ministry, was admirably exemplified in the Apostolic age. The boldness with which they faced opposition — the clearness and force with which they exhibited the sublime truths of the gospel — connected with that unparalleled success the which their ministry was attended; filled their enemies with dismay, and the learned with overwhelming astonishment. And not only was this the case in this age, but in all subsequent ages of the church; and no doubt but it will be the case in an unprecedented degree, when God shall turn again the captivity of his spiritual union when the knowledge of God shall cover the earth the waters cover the sea. It being evident that one prominent motive in God for choosing an iliterate ministry, was to confound the wise of this world; then admitting that all that vast improvement has taken place which the !earned of the clay declare to be the fact, there is nothing in it to weaken that motive or to furnish any just cause for a change but would furnish an additional reason why the same course should be persued. The stronger the enemy conquered, the greater the honour due the conqueror; and as one great object God had in view in choosing an unlearned ministry was to confound the wisdom of this world, the more of that sort of wisdom there is, the greater will be the honour due to him in confounding it.

The fact is that men have ever been labouring to undo what God has been doing, to pull down what he has been building up; and what renders their wickedness the more aggravated is, that all this they are doing in his own name. And thus we are told that God has put it into their hearts to erect theological schools, and that he has authorized them to send out agents to collect funds for this purpose, and these agents have the affrontery to tell the churches that the demand thus made is a call from heaven, and that they are bound under the most solemn obligations to obey it. And yet when asked for their authority they are as much confounded as was Ahimaaze when asked by David after the fate of Absolom; but if when asked for their authority by a poor worm of the dust, they are thus confounded what must be their dreadful dismay and confusion when asked the same question by Him whose awful name they have counterfeited to answer their unhallowed purposes.

EXHORT WITH ALL LONG SUFFERING

I charge thee, therefore, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom: Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine. 2nd Tim. 4th chap. verses one and two.

We notice the word "therefore" in the first sentence of this quotation which refers to an especial reason for the solemn charge which Paul is giving Timothy. And this reason is found in the 3rd chapter. Men shall be lovers of their own selves without natural affection. Traitors, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God. Creep into houses and lead captive silly women, etc. Now, when such men are in the church and are going around not only in public but in private houses propagating their theories and leading the Lord's dear ones from the simplicity of the gospel of God as it is taught in His holy word, is it not time for earnest Godly exhortation? Are not such men the cause of the present divided and subdivided condition of the Lord's people? Let us think of the august presence before whom Paul takes Timothy to deliver to him this solemn charge: God and the Lord Jesus Christ, the Judge of the quick and the dead, the living as well as the dead.

God who has given His orders as to how He will have things done; for see, saith He to Moses, that thou make all things according to the pattern shown thee on the mount. So God, through Jesus and His apostles has set forth in the New Testament the doctrine His ministers should preach, and the ordinances that all believers should walk in, and no one has the right to depart from either in the slightest degree. Christ and His apostles used words that were chosen by the Holy Ghost and they cannot be improved upon, and no one has the right to coin words and phrases be improved upon, and no one has the right to coin words and phrases and set them up as teaching the doctrine or manner of practice of the Lord's people. The scriptures are plain. Let us quote them as they read, expound them as the Lord may give an understanding without adding to or taking from them. Notice the charge is to preach the word, also to reprove, rebuke and exhort. We cannot divide it up. The charge is just as binding to reprove, rebuke and exhort as to preach the word, and the servant who fails in any of these things fails to glorify God as Moses and Aaron did in striking the rock instead of speaking to it as the Lord told them. Preach the word. Jesus is the living word and is set forth in all the scriptures. Paul tells us in the closing verses of the third chapter that all scripture is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. If we say that reproof and rebuke does no good we differ with Paul. He said it is profitable for the man of God. Then if there are men and women whom reproof, rebuke and exhortation does no good, they are not for God, for our apostle by divine authority tells us that these things are good for the man of God. We profess in our articles of faith to acknowledge the scripture as our rule of faith and practice. We should, therefore, be sticklers for the word of God, which we believe the scripture to be. It is the sure word of prophecy to which the followers of Christ should bow in humble reverence. It does not matter what I think or how I feel. What does the Bible teach should be our diligent search and constant guide.

GOSPEL STANDARD
January, 1837

A contrite heart alone can speak feelingly of contrition, a believer of faith, a pilgrim of a wilderness, a tried soul of temptation, a captive of bondage, or a soldier of wounds. Thus we want for our periodical, not pretty notions, but genuine experience; not merely explanations of hard texts, but the unravelling of the mysteries of vital godliness; not eloquent language, but soul feeling; not cut and dried phrases out of the dictionary, but a simple statement of the Lord's dealings within. We want not scurrility and vulgar, personal abuse, but meekness of wisdom; not great swelling words of vanity, to bolster up an ungodly system, but sound speech so as to edify the church of God. And, therefore, we would invite those of our correspondents on whose communications a blessing has rested, to favour us with more such papers and would ask also others of the Lord's family, who have not yet sent us anything, to make the attempt. We want not fine language, nor well-turned periods, nor what is called good writing. We want unction and power, something to move and melt the souls of God's people. We want some depths of the heart turned up to view, and some of the secrets of the Lord with them that fear him laid open. And let our correspondents bear in mind the real wants of the Lord's family. They need not so much your opinions as your experience; not so much your views of a text, as an account of the Lord's dealings with your soul; not a heap of fine words that amount to nothing, but gracious feelings brought up from the bottom of your heart. Pour no rosewater, then, over your language; soften down no rough expression; polish off no strong phrase, if it convey the genuine feelings of your soul. You are not writing for gentlemen and ladies, but for mechanics and artizans, the poor in this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom. And if there be any better educated feeling readers of your communications, grace will have taught them to look for unction, and not for eloquence.

PSALM 67:1-7.

God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us; Selah.

That thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations.

Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

O let the nations be glad and sing for joy: for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth. Selah.

Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our own god, shall bless us.

God shall bless us; and all the ends of the earth shall fear him.

OBITUARIES

THOMAS CLIFTON PEGRAM, SR.
1940-2017

Thomas Clifton Pegram, Sr. departed this world October 24, 2017. He is married to Brenda Byrd Pegram, still of their residence in Horsepasture, Virginia. His two children, my sister, Patricia Brockway, and myself still remain to mourn his passing. He also has 6 grandchildren and three great grandchildren. His one sibling, Ronnie Pegram, departed two weeks before him.

He was a good man, "as far as good goes" (these words spoken by his daddy, Elder Frank Pegram, just prior to his departure in June 1993). Like Cornelius, he would help individuals and his community when his steps were so led. He served as a deacon at Thomas Grove Primitive Baptist Church from 2002 until his departure. By the revelation of God, he felt called and content with his station there. While he was, what we would in conversation say, "a good man", he was still with faults and shortcomings. About 20 years ago, he would tell me of an awakening moment he experienced while on his solo trip to a meeting at Indian Creek Church in Indian Valley. He suddenly realized that it was he who was "the chief of sinners" and his sins in part sent Jesus to the cross and he desperately needed a savior. This makes me think of what Jesus said when he told Nicodemus "Ye must be born again". From that day on, I believe God chipped away his pride until there was only the occasional glimpse. The temper that bothered him during his early years was replaced with love and understanding by the Comforter, The Holy Spirit, I know this is not a standard obituary, but this is not a standard situation. This is me, his boy, trying to write a few words about my brother in Christ, my friend, and my faithful daddy. What is making this extremely difficult for me is that I feel so beneath him, and that me doing this really does not make sense. Please bear with me a little longer.

Based on our many conversations, his most powerful experience with the Holy Spirit went on for a couple of weeks before and after his baptism. I would be afraid to attempt to talk of the details of this time for fear I would leave something out, but suffice to say from what I saw, he was experiencing that sweet communion with the Holy Spirit. The day of his baptism and the day after he felt completely satisfied that "all was well". As everyone who has ever been blessed to know that all is well, knows it brings with it the peace of Christ that is indeed beyond all things natural. I could tell he desired to share that feeling with me, but as we know, the Holy Spirit is like a wind. It cannot be controlled by man or bought with filthy lucre. Although I could not join him at that time in his sweet communion, I was thankful that he was able to rest a while.

Sometimes we get so tired and to be blessed to rest a while is worth more than all the gold in the world. His experience caused him to identify with the Ethiopian eunuch until his departure on October 24, 2017, when he "went on his way rejoicing". Whenever an elder during his preaching would quote that phrase, he would, he would respond with tears or an "Amen".

Brother Pegram is not dead, but he is resting with all the other saints of God who have fulfilled their time here. I hope I will join them all one sweet day.

It is, therefore, resolved that a copy of this resolution be sent to his family, one to the Signs of the Times for publication, and one be recorded in our church records.

ADAM BYRD WITT 1928-2016

Adam Byrd Witt, 88, of Bassett, was called home by our LORD on Wednesday, December 21st, 2016. The funeral service was held at Collins-McKee Funeral Home. He was born, September 3rd , 1928 in Henry County, Virginia to Henry Witt and Minnie Via Witt, both deceased. In addition to his parents, he is preceded in death by two sisters; Christine Walker, and Carlene Gilley, and his brother Burton Witt. He is survived by the love of his life for 67 years, Irene Agnew Witt; sister-in-law, Clemon Agnew Rorrer, and many nieces and nephews. Byrd was an avid gardener and shared much of his crop with his friends, neighbors, and family. He had a deep love for the church and church friends at Thomas Grove Primitive Baptist Church. He was always faithful with the care of the local churches and was highly loved and respected by all who knew him. Brother Byrd had a wonderful sense of humor and was blessed to bring laughter to his brothers and sisters in Christ.

Over the years, Brother Byrd Witt and his wife visited many different meeting houses nestled throughout southern Virginia. They would also travel out of state to meet with God's Children. After many years, Brother Byrd was blessed to cast his lot with the little flock at Thomas Grove Primitive Baptist Church in Floyd, Virginia. He was highly favored to come before the people with his wife and then together they followed the Lord in baptism, The Lord's Supper, and foot washing services. He is missed by many, but brother Byrd is yet alive and is forever separated by all things evil.

I remember just before his baptism he had to tell me that he wanted me to know he was not perfect, and that he sometimes had thoughts he wished he had not. I told him that being perfect is not required to follow the Lord in His ordinances, but that you believe in your heart that Jesus is both LORD and Master. He said he did believe but that he wished he could do better. So, brother Byrd was blessed in all these thoughts and clearly a better person that I will ever be.

It is, therefore, resolved that a copy of this resolution be sent to his family, one to the Signs of the Times for publication, and one be recorded in our church record.

O' FOR A FAITH.

O' for a faith that will not shrink,
Though pressed by every foe;
That will not tremble on the brink
Of any earthly woe;

That will not murmur or complain,
Beneath the chastening rod,
But in the hour of grief or pain
Will lean upon it's God;

A faith that shines more bright and clear
When tempests rage without.
That when in danger, knows no fear,
In darkness knows no doubt.

That bears unmoved, the worlds dread frown;
Nor heeds it's scornful smile,
That seas of trouble cannot drown,
Nor Satan's art's beguile;

A faith that keeps the narrow way,
Till life's last hour is fled,
And with a pure and heavenly ray,
Ilumes a dying bed;

Lord give us such a faith as this,
And then what e're may come,
We'll taste e'en here, the hallowed bliss,
Of an eternal home.....

I found this written by hand and in pieces as well...? It was in an old hymn book which I believe was Goble, though it may have been an old Lloyds....the initials C.M. were at the top by the title, which I take it to mean Common Meter.... I felt it well worth sharing ....love, Caroline.

"Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned: (For until the law sin was in the world: but sin is not imputed when there is no law. Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, who is the figure of him that was to come." Romans 5: 12-14.

Elder J. B. Farmer

This scripture is being considered with much fear, knowing that so many different things have been said and written about it - and knowing that all men are subject to error, including myself. Nevertheless, this fear has been overwhelmed by the felt need, I trust from love, to set down in order certain thoughts that continue to stir up my mind. Please compare anything that may be written here with your experience and understanding of the scriptures, and reject anything if it does not agree with the true gospel of grace. The right view of this scripture seems to be necessary to the proper understanding of who Adam was; of our relation to Adam before God, in experience; and of the manner in which all things shall be brought to conclusion at the end of the age. What others have said or what we may think must be no substitute for the truth of revelation, which only God is able to supply. We are commanded to rightly divide the word of truth, but we know that is impossible for men in nature. May we be led into the truth and held back from the error of fleshly thinking.

God, in His word, testified that He formed Adam, the last of His creation, of the dust of the ground, and created him in His image and after His likeness. And God said that all His creation, including Adam, was very good. And God said that He breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul. The first question that arises is this. What kind of being was Adam? This, to me, is not just a passing interest or a curiosity, but is essential to know. If we misjudge at this point, and are left to our own reasoning, we would be led into many false assumptions that will necessarily result in confusion and false doctrine about Adam, ourselves, and the consummation of all things.

I doubt that many would deny that to be formed of the dust of the ground is to be made to partake of an earthly existence in a body of flesh. This means that Adam was of the earth earthy, and if taken from the earth, to the earth he must return. For we are taught that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God. But it is obvious that a man is more than just earth, or even just flesh and blood. A man also has life and has a mind. This indicates that Adam and all men, because they are his offspring, must have consisted of body, soul, and spirit.

But in what sense was Adam made in the image and likeness of God. We know that some take this to extreme and say Adam was a god, or an angel, or a perfect being in the beginning. And some say when Adam sinned, he was reduced from his perfect first estate to something different. I heard one, who was speaking the belief of many, say that in the beginning Adam consisted of three parts: body, soul, and spirit; and after he fell he consisted of only two parts: a body and a soul. This says that the spirit was taken from him. Those who hold this view also maintain that men now might be perfect again by willfully receiving the Spirit of God. According to this view, they would once again be body, soul and spirit. This teaching is false, to me, because it indicates that a man may lose his salvation and then gain it again - all according to his own supposed free will. This truly is impossible because what God has done is forever and eternal.

If Adam was not a god, or an angel, or a perfect being in the beginning, what was he? I am made to believe that he was just like you and me, except he had not yet been made to know that his actions were sinful before God. He was living a life of ignorant bliss, not realizing he was doing things that were displeasing to God. How can anyone say such a thing? The apostle said by revelation, "For until the law sin was in the world: but sin is not imputed when there is no law." Sin is not imputed or charged, when there is no commandment to disobey. Sin was in the world but it was not imputed, since the commandment was not yet given. A child cannot be justly rebuked for wandering from the yard, if it has never been commanded to stay in the yard. But once the commandment is given, the child is chargeable. Adam, as long as he was under no commandment, was free from condemnation for sin. His actions were not chargeable to him. But when the commandment came, and Adam disobeyed, he came under judgment. It is no wonder the apostle said by the Spirit concerning his own experience and the experience of all saints, "I was alive without the law once, but when the commandment came, sin revived and I died." Here is the principle revealed in great simplicity.

If then Adam was just like you and me, what does it mean to be made in the image and likeness of God? I am made to believe to be made in His image and likeness is to be made to have similar characteristics to God himself. It is to be made with much more knowledge and with many more capabilities than any of the other creation. Man has been given a sense of right and wrong. He has been given an ability to think about things past and to speculate about the future. He has been given the ability to contemplate heaven and hell. He has been given the ability to think that all things have a purpose and have a Creator. Man even is taught to know that he is mortal and to reflect upon eternity. Even though man is much superior to the other creation, he still is greatly inferior to the One that made him.

What does it mean to say that God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and that man became a living soul? Did God's breath of life impart natural or spiritual life? Some have taken this to mean spiritual life. But then all men would be spiritual if this were true. But we know that all men have not the spirit of God. But Adam was the father of all living, and of this one lump was made up vessels of glory and honor, and also vessels made to dishonor and for the purpose of destruction. So the life of Adam that is common to all that should come after him is natural life. And no other can duplicate this natural life that God imparted. God also spoke of this breath of life being in the animals. God said, "And, behold, I, even I, do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven; and every thing that is in the earth shall die." In the creation of earthy Adam, I am made to believe that the breath of life was natural. To those created in Christ Jesus, I believe that the breath of life given to Adam is also a figure of spiritual life given to the saints.

What then does it mean to become a living soul? In the case of Adam, I am made to believe that it simply indicates that Adam became a living person. Many times in the scriptures, the word soul simply means person. Before the breath of life was give, he was a lifeless and mindless earthly formation. After the breath of life was breathed into Adam, he became a living person that consisted of a natural body, a natural life or soul, and a natural spirit or mind. And all his posterity, being Adam multiplied, were made the same way. To the saints, Adam becoming a living soul is figurative of the children of God being given eternal life. These things are in a great mystery, and many things cannot be explained by us, but we trust that we will be given to hold the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience.

The blessed apostle said, "...death reigned from Adam to Moses..." What is significant about the period of time between Adam and Moses? Is this not speaking of the time between the sin of Adam, which brought death into the world, and the giving of the law unto Moses, written on tables of stone? Is this not referring to the fact that men died during that period even though the law of commandments was not given on stone? If death came by sin, and if sin is not imputed without the commandment being given, how could they have died? I believe that the truth is that the law was given to Adam in the tender heart of flesh, and that law was continually passed down to all his seed. Actually, the law must have been in force before the commandments were written on stone, or men could not have died.

Some say that at the end of the world or the age, the world shall be purged of wickedness and shall once again be as it was in the days of Adam before sin and death entered the world. They apparently think that this is where the saints shall reign with Christ on the Earth. It seems that this view is held, in part, because of the erroneous understanding of Adam and the Garden of Eden, before sin and death entered. Of course I may be wrong in my understanding. I may be deceived, and would not know it if I were. So, this makes me very hesitant and careful to say others are wrong. However, I believe the truth must be maintained for glory of God and for the edification of the household of faith. I am made to believe the antichrist shall come at the end of this age, claiming to be God, and will gather many after himself saying he is about to set up an eternal kingdom on the earth. Many will believe a lie and be damned with him. But Christ shall come in the clouds and every eye shall behold Him. "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words."

VOICES OF THE PAST

GOD'S CARE FOR HIS PEOPLE

"For thus saith the LORD God of Israel. The barrel of meal shall not waste, neither shall the cruse of oil fail, until the day that the LORD sendeth rain upon the earth." -1 Kings 17:14.

At the beginning of the chapter Elijah told Ahab that "as the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word." The reason for this judgment of the Lord upon Israel is seen at the close of the preceeding chapter: "And Ahab made a grove; and Ahab did more to provoke the Lord God of Israel to anger than all the kings of Israel that were before him." As soon as the punishment of the disobedient Israelites was commanded, the Lord turned to his faithful servant Elijah to provide for him. He was commanded to go eastward and to hide by the brook Cherith that is before Jordan. And it shall be, that thou shalt drink of the brook; and I have commanded the ravens to feed thee there."

According to all the laws of nature, and to the natural reason and understanding of man, the prospect was anything but cheerful. The brook would dry up. So far as receiving sustenance from the filthy ravens was concerned, it would seem that anything eatable coming in their way would be instantly devoured by them. If Elijah had the least doubt as to his safety (which I doubt) there is no record of it. His faith told him that there was nothing too hard for the Lord. Like Abraham, his faith told him what the Lord promised he was able to perform. (Romans 4:21). And then he abode by the brook Cherith, fed bread and flesh morning and evening by the ravens, and drinking of the water of the brook. The record does not tell how long Elijah lived by the brook, but says that after a while the brook dried up. Now the water of the brook did not day up all at once, but little by little, day by day there was less water, until a day came when there was no water. Here was another trial of the faith of Elijah, but that God-given faith did not desert him. "And the word of the Lord came unto him, saying, Arise, get thee to Zarephath, which belongeth to Zidon, and dwell there: behold I have commanded a widow woman there to sustain thee. So he arose, and went to Zarephath. And when he came to the gate of the city, behold, the widow woman was there gathering of sticks." There she was, the one who was to feed him, the first person he saw by the gate, and he called to her to bring him water and also a morsel of bread in her hand. The answer he got was, "As the Lord thy God liveth, I have not a cake, but an handful of meal in a barrel, and a little oil in a cruse: and, behold, I am gathering two sticks, that I may go in and dress it for me and my son that we may eat it, and die." There is her desperate plight: one scant meal and then starvation. But Elijah's faith was unshaken. He told her to "go and do as thou has said: but make me thereof a little cake first, and bring it unto me, and after make for thee and thy son." Then came the promise at the head of this article: "For thus saith the Lord God of Israel, The barrel of meal shall not waste, neither shall the cruse of oil fail, until the day that the Lord sendeth rain upon the earth." The widow believed in Elijah's God, for, mark you, she said to him, As the Lord thy God liveth. She believed in a living God, and faith was given her to take this stranger in and feed him and believe that it would be as Elijah told her: "The barrel of meal shall not waste, neither shall the cruse of oil fail."

There always has been, there is today, and there will be so long as time lasts a "remnant according to the election of grace" who know that God's tender mercy and loving care for his people will never fail. The barrel of meal represents the material necessities of this life, and the cruse of oil the unfailing grace of the eternal God. All those who believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him, have that faith, without which it is impossible to please God.

But to return to Elijah. There was still another sore trial for that poor widow woman. Her child sickened and died in her arms. "And she said unto Elijah, What have I to do with thee, O thou man of God? art thou come unto me to call my sin to remembrance, and to slay my son?" She was perplexed. She could not understand why this great bereavement had come upon her. It is quite probable that in taking Elijah in she felt that she was doing a great service unto the Lord, and that she was looking for an ultimate reward, and when this blow fell her eyes were turned within, and, like all true believers, she saw her nothingness in God's sight. The narrative goes on to relate how Elijah took the child to his room and ultimately returned him to his mother's arms. Then the widow's doubts and unbelief were all swept away, and she was made to declare, "I know that thou art a man of God, and that the word of the Lord in thy mouth is truth." We do not in these "last days" see miracles performed as in the above narrative, or as in the days of Christ on earth, yet the same Spirit of truth works in the hearts of God's people today as was manifested then. The God of all grace is the same yesterday, today and forever.

"Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." Therefore God's loving-kindness changes not. "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, The just shall live by faith." — Romans 1:16-17. That faith tells them that as their days so shall their strength be. "The barrel of meal shall not waste, neither shall the cruse of oil fail." Oh no, the all-seeing eye is ever upon his people.

"The steps that I take,
And the station I fill,

My Father determined,
And wrote in His will."

David wrote, "For thou, Lord, art good, and ready to forgive; and plenteous in mercy unto all them that call upon Thee."- Psalm 86:5. There is none like unto the God of Jeshurun, who rideth upon the heaven in thy help, and in his excellency on the sky. The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms: and he shall thrust out the enemy from before thee; and shall say, Destroy them."— Deut. 33:26-27.

GRACE

The poet says:

"If I must sing I'll sing of grace,
Which raised me from the fall,
And led me to a hiding place,
Jesus, my Lord, my all."

There is much said in the Bible about grace and perhaps there is no word in it that is not shamefully abused. I have never heard anyone say that they did not believe that salvation was by grace. But according to their belief, certain things must be done by the sinner in order to be saved by grace. This destroys the meaning of the word as grace is free favor, therefore anything given or done for it is a price and hence it is not free. The idea of salvation partly of grace and partly of works is very clearly disputed by our apostle Paul in Romans 11:5-6. He says, "Even so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace. And if by grace, then is it no more of works: otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then is it no more grace: otherwise work is no more work." This forever settles the question and proves that the salvation of the sinner does not depend even in part on his own works but as Paul says in the 2nd Chapter of Ephesians, "For by grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God, not of works, lest any man should boast." Notice he says, by grace are ye saved. The gospel of Christ is always in the present, and hence applies to the child of God in his every day experience. He is a sinner by nature and so finds himself in darkness because of sin. He realizes fleshly weakness and feels the temptations of Satan who as a roaring lion is walking about seeking whom he may devour. Then like Samson he needs the Spirit of the Lord mightily and he cries unto the Lord and He delivers him from his mighty foe. This also is salvation for which the delivered one praises the Lord. Jesus said to His disciples that "Without me ye can do nothing." John 15:5. This has been and ever will be true in the experience of the Lord's humble poor. Christ was evidently talking to His disciples about their works in His vineyard, the church. That nothing can be done here acceptable to God except by Jesus Christ whose strength is made perfect in weakness. In the flesh they sin, and this is not by Jesus Christ who hates and punished sin. Had Peter had Christ in him at the time of his trial before Pilot as he had Him on the day of Pentecost he would not have denied him. What a wonderful manifestation of life and display of the grace of God. When he who awhile ago denied Christ when accused by a little maid of being one of His disciples can now stand up before people of all nations and boldly say to His killers that with wicked hands ye did it. Could anything but grace have saved Peter from his error and given him comfort and pleasure in proclaiming His name? Peter loved Jesus all that time. So His children now love Him. We have the mind of Christ, says the apostle, and yet we sometimes yield to the flesh and do things we ought not and suffer shame and regret and need to feel again the pardoning love and gracious mercy of our ever indulgent Saviour, and do not claim the honor of any deliverance, but praise God from whom all blessings flow. Paul was an apostle of Jesus Christ; he also felt to be the chief of sinners, and less than the least of all saints, and said, "By the grace of God, I am what I am." .Jesus made him His apostle and it was by His grace that Paul knew how small he was, and that it was Christ who gave him the strength so necessary to the service of Christ and His dear people.

Jesus is always with those who are born again and hence they are not dead for He is their life and He said "I will never leave nor forsake thee", but He does not always allow them to see Him. Note those disciples with whom He walked and talked and their eyes were holden that they should not know Him. O how tedious and tasteless the hours when Jesus no longer I see. But there is life and hence prayer for the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. And an acknowledgment of our sin and the justice of His judgments upon us for walking in a way we should not, and now we know that regeneration and the pardon of sin from first to last is the free and unmerited favour of God, given us through Jesus Christ, His eternal and everlasting Son, and therefore we sing not unto us but to Thy name give glory now and forever. Amen.

Your brother in the hope of the blessings of Jesus.

EXPERIENCE OF ELDER SAMUEL L. DARK

I have many times been requested to write a sketch of my life, together with my christian experience, but a sense of my deep sinfulness and of a life far from what it should be, has made me doubt if any good could come of it. But my life is now about done, and having spent many years of my life testifying to the goodness and mercy of God in the salvation of sinners, I now wish to leave to my brethren who shall live after me a statement of part of the incidents that have led me to trust in a Saviour's power to save poor wretched sinners.

I was born in Chatham Co., N.C., within ten miles of the county seat in the year 1808. My father and mother united with the Baptist in 1802. In about the year 1809 they moved to Wilson Co.,Tenn., my father taking a letter in full fellowship, but mother being favorable to open communion, would not have a letter. When they reached Tennesee, father would not put his letter in because he could not believe with the Baptists on the subject of eternal and and personal election; mother united with the Methodists, but not agreeing with them on matters pertaining to church government, left them and finally came back to the communion of the Primitive Baptists and died in that faith. I had many evidences of a supreme power overruling all things, but grew up wild, thoughtless and wicked. In December 1829 I left the scenes of my childhood and emigrated to Schuyler Co., Ill. stopping awhile in Kentucky, reaching my destination, in company with my parents and others, in April 1830. Here I took charge of a school near Rushville, in the then backwoods settlement, and after teaching six months, commenced another term; but I discontinued it at the call for volunteers for the Black Hawk war.

My parents were much opposed to my going on account of my being crippled, near sighted and being the youngest son. I had but two days to get ready, and having to buy a horse and a gun, I resorted to swearing to keep them from interfering with my preparations. I argued with them that I had agreed to go, and that I would not desert, nor dishonor my word. During my preparations, I laid down some notes on a table and took my father's gun telling him that I intended taking it if he did not kill me to prevent it. Until this day, a wicked act touches my heart. I turned and saw tears in my old father's eyes, but he offered no further opposition to my taking the gun. This act I will regret as long as life lasts.

The company being organized, and the time having arrived for leaving, as we marched past my father's house the company fired a salute. My dear old mother came to the gate and beckoned for me to come to her, which I did. On my approaching her, she said, "My son, from what I learn from the papers, there is a strong probability that you will have to fight every band of Indians between here and Canada, and some think this is the beginning of another British war. You are exposed to death in ten thousand ways; you may be killed by accident, slain in battle, thrown from your horse or drowned; so I may never see you again. And if I never see you again, what evidence shall I have that you are not in hell?" Knowing that this proceeded from a kind mother's heart, I could but answer her respectfully, and this I did by saying, in order to evade a long and serious conversation. "What can I do?" her answer was; "Pray." Wishing to cut the conversation short, my reply was

"You pray for me."At this she turned her back to me, and raised her right hand heavenward, and seemingly with entense earnestness, screamed out this prayer; "Go my son, and the Lord be with you." This parting from a dear mother under such solemn circumstances, had its influence, and I did not curse and swear for several days. But my propensity for wickedness and levity proved that my goodness was like Ephraim's of old, which like the morning cloud and the early dew, soon passed away, and I plunged into my former course of levity and profanity with a degree seemingly unparaleled I became so noted that I gained the title of "Schuyler fool killer" and to this day I tremble to think that the honor of my God and the glorious gospel of peace, was so trivial in my estimation that I trampled on them and everything sacred to make mirth for my fellow soldiers. It was not many days until I was so distingushed for these things that I was well known, personally as the commander in chief. While going on in this career, it is said that I preached the funeral of an old horse that had died.

Near the time when we were to be mustered out, I thought I ought to get on good terms with my messmate, whom I had so abused with my ungodly career that we had come near fighting. I had no real enmity towards him, however, but had been simply gratifying my disposition for my own amusement. I found him in conversation with an old man who had outdone him in ruffiamism and blasphemy. I thought here was an opportunity to get into the good graces of my messmate by bringing this old man to shame. I feigned to be a young minister, and to be greatly shocked by his profane language. I turned upon him the accusations that I thought best calculated to bring him to confess his error and, possibly, to bring out a promise of reformation. I was successful. I said to him, "My old father, if I may call you by that endearing name, I must confess that when I see a man of such natural talent, by his pernicious influence and example, dragging down to hell so many youths of the land who have enlisted to defend the rights of their country, and at the same time drawing down the vengeance on his own gray head,! am made to shudder."

I continued on in this strain, but my eyes were turned within to see the character of my own poor soul, and I saw that all I said was the truth in regard to myself, and every evil thought and act of my life was as though it had been written page after page. I seemed drawing right into the very mouth of perdition, yet I could not stop talking until I had uttered these words; It is with such men as Dr. Young said, with the talent of an angel, a man may be a fool, On uttering this, it was as though a bolt of light had pierced through my soul, which came near throwing me to the ground. I staggered, but recovered myself, and turned expecting to see the ground open and swallow me up, and felt that I should sink down to hell.

Notwithstanding all this, I kept to my purpose of degrading the old man, and made my true character known to him by a foul remark, and was introduced to him as the "Scuyler fool killer." He cursed me bitterly and threatened to kill me. I soon retired to my tent, spent nearly the whole night in horror and sleeplessness, getting a little sleep just before day. On awakening next morning, a great change seemed to have overspread creation. I had read in the word of God that the earth was cursed for man's sake. The earth assumed an aspect that I had never seen before. The earth and the heavens seemed drawn together and a curse seemed to rest on all that I saw. The army of 4,000 men was camped in a hollow square and everything that I could see looked grimly unnatural. And, strange as it may seem to some, I could not bear with any degree of patience to hear their shocking oaths and blasphemies. They seemed to pierce my heart as with a spear; so I left the camp some two or three hundred yards. My seclusion seemed to avail me nothing, for the sins of my life that had heretofore been forgotten seemed to loom up before me as so many fiery balls; and sufficient they seemed, to set heaven and earth ablaze. My soul trembles to think of the horror that I felt. I seemed to stand on the crust of a volcano over the mouth of a burning crater. I fancied that the weight of my sins would break it through and that the hottest hell would soon be mine.

In this condition, I asked myself if anyone had told me that I was in this doleful and distressed condition. My mind turned then to the ministers of the M.E. church, who had always been my favorite preachers, in connection with Cumberland Presbyterians and others who held Arminian tenets. I had formerly looked on these as being heralds of truth. Many of their representations as to men having a good and an evil spirit in him came to my mind. But, alas, my poor soul was morally a barren heath with nothing good, I was wholly sinful. After thinking of many, my mind wandered to an old Baptist preacher named Presley Lester. I had listened to him for many hours while he seemed to be deploring the utter depravity of the whole human race. I had formerly listened, disbelieving all that he said in regard to man's inability to deliver himself from sin and misery. Many parts of his sermons seemed to roll through my mind, though I had not heard him for two years and was six hundred miles away from him. Now, I saw that the mistake was on my part, touching myself and my condition. He had only partly described my utter pollution and hopeless condition; and I now realized that morally speaking, the whole head was sick and the heart faint, and that I was full of putrefying sores from the soles of the feet to the head. There was no soundness there. Four or five of the same order came into mind, and they all seemed to have borne testimony to the same awful truth, and notwithstanding I had formerly considered them as simpletons or bigots, who loved to differ with good preachers. I now discovered that they had come near the truth in my case. To my mind they seemed to go side by side neither turning to the right nor to the left, but to go straight forward declaring the everlasting gospel; and I felt that most of the Old Baptist was right (afterwards I embraced it all.)

In May, 1831, we were discharged and returned home, but the tumult in my bosom for four and a half months. During this time I did everything that I could to drive these feelings away. I cursed, danced, went in rough company, but it all did no good. All that I could do was only heaping up wrath against myself. On the third Sunday in September I attended an association. From what occurred there the Baptists were somewhat mixed up with a preacher that spoke from his learning and other men's works; as one preacher who was appointed to preach on Sunday used a part of one of Blair's lectures, a British devine. Returning from the meeting that evening with a young lady and two other couples, I jocosely referred to the sermon of Brother Allen (as I called him); and I repeated fully half of it, as I had learned it when a boy. The young lady that I was with afterwards became my wife. I had long contemplated paying my attention to her, and was very glad of this opportunity, and only regretted that this dull and heavy feeling rendered me less entertaining than I desired to be. I had never been at her father's house before, though it was near my father's. In order to rid myself of these serious impressions, I left the company of the other young people, and went to the west end of the house where there were some hewed logs lying close together, and on them I tried dancing once more. But the Kings dart stuck so deep in the center of my soul, that instead of relieving me it only made me feel worse. The very sky above me seemed like brass and the earth like iron. I felt to be a poor abandoned creature, and felt that my death sickness was on me, and that I should die soon. I walked into the room, and notwithstanding I was almost an entire stranger to them. I threw myself on a bed in despair, exclaiming, "I am sick." The girls playfully feigned to administer to my case with medicinal skill, but all their efforts were like tearing my heart-strings, and I said to them, "For God's sake, girls, leave me; you don't know what is the matter with me." Their reply was, "O yes sir, we can cure you, we can cure you."

We soon started to meeting, and O, what melancholy feelings I had in regard to my poor soul! and I longed for a call from God, believing that the invitations of Arminians were such calls. I took my seat in a porch, while the minister stood in the house; and I listened to him as best I could. The preacher was a plain old farmer, a man of honest integrity, whose body lies three miles west of Canton, and by whose grave I have passed many times to preach to his relatives. His text was "Of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself or some other man?" In his illustration of the text, by way of showing the condition of mind that the Eunuch was then in. I really thought he aimed his remarks for me, personally, as I saw Elder John Logan and others present who had been fellow soldiers with me in the army, and who knew my character. He seemed to lay my darkest sins bare and bring out the very secret thoughts of my heart, and tell all about my notions of a saving religion, and hold them in utter derision before the people to that extent that I thought that my character was ruined forever. I could but acknowledge that I was guilty of every crime that he charged me with, and he held them out to public gaze so vividly that I expected every moment that he would call me out by name, thinking that he obtained the facts from those who were acquainted with me. I could not conceive how a christian could delight in exposing a poor lost being to the extent that he did, knowing that I was doomed to utter destruction. However, after giving a description of my character and just condemnation, he made the inquiry publicly, Is there any poor soul here in this condition? My thoughts were, If I should say yes, his reply could be nothing else than something like this-"Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels, but instead of persuing that course, he remarked, "If there is, I have glorious intelligence for you; God has intention of mercy towards you."

I discredited that statement, somewhat, but he had told the truth so clearly that I came to this conclusion "Am I yet out of hell, after so much dreadful apprehension? And is there yet mercy with God for such a lifetime enemy to God as I have been and am? If there is mercy I will seek it. And then for six weeks I made constant supplication night and day, when awake, for forgiveness of my sins. Before this I had never thought of praying to God, for I thought that to insult him by praying to him, would end in plunging me to hell. I had a book in my possession entitled "Imitation of Christ." In it were a great many forms of prayer that I thought very beautiful and applicable to my case. I would occasionally read one a few times and then retire to offer it in secret on my behalf. But poor headway was made in this way, however for after a few weeks my case became so desperate that I would forget my prayer before I could get out of the schoolhouse.

Finally I came to the conclusion that, according to the word of God there was such a thing as a conditional salvation, and that the part I had to do was to offer a perfect prayer to God. I thought at the time that I was able to do it, and that if I did not perform it, and God should send me to hell, I should try to acquesce in my condemnation; and that in the event I did offer it and God did not save me in answer to my prayer, and sent me to hell, I would point from its dark caverns and tell him that he had said, "Every one that seeketh, findeth, and knock and it shall be opened to you." After calling on everything, animate and inanimate, to witness the sincerity of my heart, and the fulfillment of the condition on my part, I retired to a dense clump of underbrush and dropped on my knees in order to offer this perfect prayer. I stayed on my knees several minutes, and if it had been to have saved a thousand worlds I could not have uttered a word. So I stood there on my knees con demned.The sky looked dark and lowering, and I expected God's vengen-ance to break forth upon me; and as fast as I could I made my way to the house. While going to the house,this thought came to me; "You have never yet believed in a scriptural sense." That thought was followed by a declaration from Paul that without faith it was impossible to please God, and whatsoever is not of faith is sin. Now I saw that all my prayers were only the cries of an unbelieving heart and I had been building all my hopes on a false foundation, my prayers being Sinful and vile in the sight of God. I here died to legal hope, for I saw that my prayers had been employed by me as a means to put myself where God could reach me. The wickedness of my best prayers seemed to contain enough sin to damn ten thousand worlds if they had been imputed to them.

I went into the schoolhouse, thinking that I would never ask God to have mercy anymore. Seeing a New Testament lying on a bench, the thought occurred to me, "I will read condemnation in you once more, "as though I was addressing it personally. I opened it to the last part of the gospel of Matthew and there read the trial, maltreatment and crucifixion of my blessed Lord. My sympathy was excited, exceedingly, for the innocent sufferer. I looked on him as a fellow sufferer, with this difference, I should suffer eternally for my sins, while he had done nothing worthy of punishment or maltreatment. My sympathy was so excited in his behalf that I thought I would have risked my life or have delivered him from his enemies. Poor blind heart! Little did I think - "Twas you, my sins, my cruel sins, His chief tormentors were, each of my crimes became a nail, and unbelief the spear."

By some unaccountable means, every word became very interesting and I thought to read the words over again. Never before had I seen such beauty in God's word. But instead of rereading, some thing urged me to read on. When I came near the close of the 27th chapter, I felt to regret that I was so nearly done this wonderful recital. I read on to the 6th verse of the 28th chapter with my back to the school, standing with my face to the window, which was simply a log cut out to let in the light, and read, "He is not here; for he is risen as he said. Come see the place where the Lord lay." I felt a touch in my shoulder, and supposing it to be one of my pupils, raised my head to turn around. But what was my surprise, to see before me, as I looked through the window, a man, seemingly composed of richest blood. I did not see it with my natural vision, for a young man, named Henry Wright, was just at my left hand and in position to see all that I could see. But nevertheless, I saw him suspended in air, lying prone with his head upon his arms, and ten thousand times ten thousand bolts of lightning striking the quivering form in every direction.

I was moved to pity the object of such wrath. The passage of scripture that I had just read connected itself with the object of my wonder, and I exclaimed in my mind, "There he is; he is indeed risen. "But there seemed no connection between all this and myself, more than sympathy for the suffering form which was the meekest object that mortal mind ever contemplated. But a few drops of blood leave the quivering form, and flying straight, strike my breast. A happy sense of relief flowed like a deluge over my soul. The blood was for me, and it's efficacy had been felt. I threw the book from me, thinking that I should need it no more.

The blood flew everywhere, and was over everything, and by it's efficacy all was made to glorify God. I turned to look at my school but what a transformation had taken place! Their faces all seemed glorified, and the homeliest was beautiful. I thought that I would go out to the place where I was accustomed to pray and see if it too had changed. I left the schoolroom and found all nature glistening the reflected rays of the sun, as though everything was covered with gold and silver. I reached the place, was convinced, and exclaimed, "It is enough." There was nothing between me and heaven. Not a single thing could stand as an obstacle, since Christ had done everything that was to be done. He had put away my sins and so purified my heart that I should never sin any more. There was but one thing to cause me any trouble, and that was there had been no way provided for me to show my gratitude. Christ had done everything, and left me absolutely nothing to do that fitly express my love. If I had been called on to die at the stake, I would gladly have untied the martrys hands, have taken his place and offered up my life to show my love. There were no songs that were grand enough in thought and words, to express my love and estimation of the God who had so wonderfully wrought a great deliverance for my soul.

It could not be expressed, and I was left to contemplate it in silence because it could not be spoken. While these thoughts were prevailing in my mind, the words of Paul came to me -"O wretched man that I am. Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" I could not believe that Paul was a representative Christian. He certainly had never felt what I had felt. Miserable man that he was, he had never realized such a wonderful deliverance as I had witnessed in my case. Likewise the words of David caused me to feel pity for him. For had he not said, "The pains of hell had well nigh got hold on me." I thought if he had felt the glory of the celestial world as I had done, he could never have such feelings as that. O, the glory of that salvation! I could have easily made a world as I could describe its heavenly beauties.

At night, after this, while in this state of mind, I looked up toward the heavens and saw a truth, that_

E'endown to old age, all my people shall prove My soverign, eternal unchangeable love;

And when hoary hairs shall their temples adorn Like lambs they shall still in my bosom be bourne.

My locks have whitened for the tomb, but the God of heaven has not forsaken me. I spent that night in joyful exaltation of soul. The extacy of sins forgiven softened my bed so that I seemed to rest on air. A few nights after this I attended a prayer meeting and went there expecting to hear them rejoicing in a Saviour's love. But what was my disappointment when they began confessing themselves sinners in the sight of God, and praying for his forgiveness. O, I thought, if they had been in my condition, with their sins entirely removed from them, they would have no need for confession.

I was glad that I was not one of them. But how horror struck was I to hear with the ear of my understanding, the words- "I thank thee, Lord God of heaven and earth, that I am not as other men,nor even this poor publican." I began sinking into a horrible pit,and down I went until I rested upon this text -"I know in whom I have believed,"etc. 2 Timothy 1:12. This did not raise me up, but it kept me from getting lower down. The preacher came around and asked me how I got along I answered: Tolerably well, "But", said he, "I meant spiritual things." I did not know what to say, my mind was in gloom, but I could not say that I knew nothing about it for this text came into my mind-" He that denieth me before men, him will I deny before my Father and his holy angels." I answered him, I do not know what you call religion, but I know that I have an interest in the blood of the atonement. Something seemed to say to me, "Now you have done it; you are now what you have always despised-nothing but a hypocrite." I went home in company with other young people, but I took no interest in their conversation.

When we got nearly home I heard my old father and mother crying, my sisters having preceeded us and told the news. When we went in, as soon as mother could command her voice, she said to me, "My son, they tell me that you have made a profession, and so many of my children have gone back, you must tell it." I said, "Mother it is true." I then proceeded to relate what I had seen and felt, feeling that no one else had ever realized what I had, and so could not believe that anyone could credit what I said. To my joy, my mother told me her experience, and it seemed more wonderful than my own. This gave me great encouragement, for if no one else had any confidence in me my mother would fellowship me. The following Sunday, I attended a camp meeting, but could gather nothing from what was said that was in harmony with my feelings; but the Saturday following, I attended Crane Creek Church and heard Elder Dale, of Kentucky, preach. After preaching, Elder John Logan announced an open door to any who might desire to unite with the church. It seemed that no physical force could have kept me from going forward. I was heartily received by the brethren, was baptized, and so commenced the campaign with the Militant kingdom of the God of heaven, and -

"For her my tears shall fall,
For her my prayers ascend;
To her my toils and care be given,
Till toils and cares shall end.

Beyond my highest joy,
I prize her heavenly ways,
Her sweet communion, solemn vows,
Her hymns of love and praise."

In just about one year after I joined the church, she rid herself of the missionary innovation in all of its branches. Finding that money and not grace, gave a standing in these societies, and measured the degree of acceptability among those engaged in them to the extent of my ability, feeling to yield my life in defence of the principles of grace and the law which God had delivered to his church; and had I sixty years more to engage in the service of my king, I should devote them to a defence of the same glorious truth.

In about six months after I joined the church, I began to be impressed with passages of scripture, and notwithstanding I strove against the impressions. In about one year I began to speak publicly from texts, and in seven or eight years more I was ordained to the full work of the gospel ministry on September 22nd, 1846, by a presbytery composed of Elders Charles Vandeveer, Thomas H. Owen, John Harper, Jacob Castlebury, and John Driskill. For a time I served from three to four churches monthly, but owing to my being afflicted with neuralgia I left off attending any but the one where my membership was.

I shall now give some account of my home life. In the year 1834, I was married to Miss Matilda Evelyn Moore, of Schuyler Co., Ill. She was a worthy member of the Primitive Baptist church at the time of our marriage. She had that fatal disease, however, consumption, and departed this life September 22, 1836, in the full hope of a blessed immortality. She left me an infant daughter eighteen months old, which my dear old mother took charge of. This only pledge of our mutual affection was taken from me when nearly four years of age. I continued preaching and teaching school, and in the year 1841, was united in marriage to miss Christina Waymack, of Mc. Donough co.,Ill. I lived in harmony and great enjoyment with her until her decease, July 6th, 1863. She was a member of the church at the time of our marriage. We were blessed with eleven children, three sons and eight daughters, I desire to say of my departed companions that they were very suitable for an afflicted way-worn minister of Christ. They frequently urged me to attend my appointments notwithstanding their affliction, and the temporial wants of our family. December 6th I was married to Mrs. Nancy Morris, widow of Isaiah Morris, late of Fulton Co.,Ill. She had two daughters and one son while eight of my children remained at home, making eleven in all, and we enjoyed as much harmony and peace as any family of like size within my knowledge.

By reason of blindness and the many infirmities that attend old age I was forced to rent my farm in Scuyler County, and remove to Macomb, Illinois, where we expect to spend our remaining days. We take great pleasure in visiting the dear children of the kingdom in different localities and feel thankful to God that we can hear the "Sons of consolation" set forth in a lucid and forcible manner the glorious gospel of our salvation. My whole life has been hindered and hedged about with imperfections and weaknesses, and if I have comforted any of the Lord's poor, or have in any way helped to strengthen the church, all praise should be given to him who through his love and mercy has suffered me to live and comforted me by his holy spirit, and given me the high privilege of associating with those who trust in his name.

I regret exceedingly that I have not lived nearer the cross of my blessed Redeemer. I am ashamed to have neglected his entreaties and violated his commands, and feel that it is only because of his mercy and goodness that I have a hope that I shall yet realize the fulfillment of all the promises made to the heirs of grace. I am now in my 84th year, and soon shall pass away;and I entreat all the church, stand firm on the doctrine of grace, letting love abound in their hearts and bringing forth the fruits thereof to the honor and glory of our God. "Finally, brethren, farewell. Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you."

"May Zion's sons in peace abound,
And put their foes to flight;
While I am sleeping underground,
May they in love unite."

GOSPEL STANDARD JAN., 1837

A contrite heart alone can speak feelingly of contrition, a believer of faith, a pilgrim of a wilderness, a tried soul of temptation, a captive of bondage, or a soldier of wounds. Thus we want for our periodical, not pretty notions, but genuine experience; not merely explanations of hard texts, but the unravelling of the mysteries of vital godliness; not eloquent language, but soul feeling; not cut and dried phrases out of the dictionary, but a simple statement of the Lords dealings within. We want not scurrility and vulgar, personal abuse, but meekness of wisdom; not great swelling words of vanity, to bolster up an ungodly system, but sound speech so as to edify the church of God. And, therefore, we would invite those of our correspondents on whose communications a blessing has rested, to favour us with more such papers and would ask also others of the Lord's family, who have not yet sent us anything, to make the attempt. We want not fine language, nor well-turned periods, nor what is call good writing. We want unction and power, something to move and melt the souls of God's people. We want some depths of the heart turned up to view, and some of the secrets of the Lord with them that fear him laid open. And let our correspondents bear in mind the real wants of the Lord's family. They need not so much your opinions as your experience; not so much your views of a text, as an account of the Lord's dealings with your soul; not a heap of fine words that amount to nothing, but gracious feelings brought up from the bottom of your heart. Pour no rosewater, then, over your language; soften down no rough expression; polish off no strong phrase, if it convey the genuine feelings of your soul. You are not writing for gentlemen and ladies, but for mechanics and artizans, the poor in this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom. OBITUARY OF BROTHER NELSON N. NESTER

Nelson N. Nester, age 85 departed this life on earth Sunday, February 25, 2018 at the Lewis Gale Medical Center. He as born in Carroll County on June 27, 1932 to the late John C. Nester and the late Nina Webb Nester. He was also preceded in death by six sisters and two brothers.

Brother Nelson married Miss Alice Marie Turner on November 21, 1951. They were married for 66 years when Brother Nelson was called home, to suffer no more on this earth. Brother Nelson was a simple hard working man that would sit quietly taking all things in, but he stood strong in his faith.

He was the father of Gary Nester, Sharon Nester Harris and Grandfather of 3 grandchildren and 1 great grandchild. He is survived by his loving and devoted wife, children, grandchildren and one brother, Andrew Nester.

On Saturday March 1, 1986 Brother Nelson, Sister Marie and Brother Gary ask for a home with the church at Long Branch. They were received and Baptized on Sunday March 2, 1986 by Elder Amos Hash. Brother Nelson was ordained Deacon on April 4, 1987 by a presbytery consisting of Elders Amos Hash, O.K. Tench, Lane Carter, William Holland, Larry Hollandsworth and Hale Terry. He was chosen to serve as Assistant Clerk from July 4, 1987 till November 6, 1999.

Brother Nelson was a quiet, humble soul. He loved the fellowship with God's little children especially in songs of praise to our Lord. He had a special Love for hymn number 189 Jesus, thou art the sinner's friend, as such I look to thee: Now in the bowels of thy love, 0 Lord, remember me.

When I was reflecting on Brother Nelson's humble spirit these verses stood out to me.

Proverbs 16:17-20 "The highway of the upright is to depart from evil: he that keepeth his way preserveth his soul.[1] Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall." Better it is to be of an humble spirit with the lowly, than to divide the spoil with the proud.[20] He that handleth a matter wisely shall find good: and whoso trusteth in the LORD, happy is he.

Funeral services were held for Brother Nelson N. Nester Wednesday, February 28, 2018 at Bassett Funeral Home by Elder Mark Terry.

Humbly summited in love by Sister Betty Walker at the request of Long Branch Primitive Baptist Church.

HYMN

WHAT think ye of Christ? is the test
To try both your state and your scheme;
You cannot be right in the rest,
Unless you think rightly of him.

As Jesus appears in your view,
As he is beloved or not,
So God is disposed toward you,
And mercy or wrath is your lot.

Some take him a creature to be,
A man, or an angel at most;
Sure these have not feelings like me,
Nor know themselves wretched and lost:

So guilty, so helpless am I,
I durst not confide in his blood,
Or on his protection rely,
Unless I were sure he is God.

If asked, what of Jesus I think,
Though still my best thoughts are but
I say, he's my meat and my drink, [poor,
My life, and my strength, and my store,

My Shepherd, my husband, my friend,
My Saviour from sin and from thrall,
My hope from beginning to end,
My portion, my Lord, and my all.

Newton.

"And the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept: and he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh instead thereof; And the rib, which the Lord God had taken from man, made he a woman, and brought her unto the man. And Adam said, This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh: she shall be called Woman, because she was taken out of Man." Genesis 2:21-23.

Elder J. B. Farmer

Here is the account of God making, or creating, Eve, the mother of all living, whom He gave to be the bride and wife of Adam. This account, no doubt, was given by inspiration to the writer and written and preserved for the benefit of those who are given a heart of understanding. As with all scripture, it is of no private interpretation or is not to be understood with the carnal mind. We believe that no one has the ability in himself to rightly divide this or any other mystery, which belongs to God. Rather, we must wait upon God, Who only dwells in the light, hoping that He may be gracious to reveal some of His things unto us.

We are made to believe that this is the true record of the natural formation of the second person ever to breathe the breath of life. Also, that this is a true figure, showing the way which God brought the church, the bride of Christ, into being. From the holy record, it seems apparent that He accomplished this before He made the world. We are taught that the church, or body of Christ, with all her members, was foreknown of God and predestinated unto the adoption of children. Also, that each member's name was written in the Lamb's book of life before the foundation of the world. She was chosen in Him and given grace in Him before the world was, according to the scriptures. Also, that she was loved with an everlasting love and was created in Christ Jesus unto good works. It seems plain that all this was done before the church ever was manifest in the world.

It appears that Eve's life was the life of Adam, and that his life was her life, since she was made of his very substance. She was bone of his bones and flesh of his flesh naturally. Her life was totally dependent upon his life, even as the life of the church is totally dependent on the life of Christ. Before Eve was made, her dwelling place was in Adam, just as the church dwelt in Christ before she was created. It appears that the church stood in the same relation to Christ spiritually as Eve did unto Adam naturally. "We are members of His body, of His flesh, and of His bones," spiritually, if we are His, according to the inspired apostle. This being the case, it is no wonder that we are told that, "In Him we live, and move, and have our being." In another place we are assured with these words, "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations." Psalm 90:1.

The inspired psalmist said, "Tl eyes did see my substance, yet b unperfect; and in thy book all my m bers were written, which in continua were fashioned, when as yet there none of them." Psalm 139:16. I bel that God saw and knew Eve before brought her forth from Adam, as He and knew His people before He e created them in Christ Jesus. God k and loved His people before He e made them. "Known unto God are al works from the beginning of the wo Acts 15:18. Is this not what it mear be foreknown of God? He saw th knew them, loved them and determi to keep them as the apple of His and purposed finally to redeem ther Christ and bring them to glory. All was done before they were genera of Him and before He made the wo

"Before the mountains w brought forth, or ever thou hadst forr the earth and the world, even from e lasting, thou art God." Our God is e nal. He had no beginning of days or of life. But the church had a beginn Was not her beginning when she created in Christ Jesus before the fo dation of the world? Some have spo of God's people being eternal child and this may be true, in one sens properly understood. But we are tau that only God is eternal. However, if church is spiritual, which I believe is, she must have an eternal aspect there is no beginning or ending of lif that Eternal Spirit. Then what is it th eternal about the church? It appear me, that the church, being formed of body of Christ, has an eternal aspect by virtue of her eternal union with Him. In other words, the church dwelt in the Eternal Son prior to her being created. She is one with Him and will ever be one with Him by virtue of His life being her life. The church was formed of His living spiritual body and she is His living spiritual bride. Christ and the church are one flesh spiritually as Adam and Eve were one flesh naturally.

Another thing in the heading scripture seems precious. It shows from which part of Adam's body the rib was taken to form his help meet. It was located in his chest, near his heart, the seat of love. Does not this indicate the relationship of the true Bridegroom and His bride? Was not His every thought and action toward His bride in true love and affection and concern for her welfare? And because He first loved her, does not her love return to him in kind? Because of His great love for her, He was willing to lay down His life that she might live and not die. He, who had no sin, was willing to become sin that His bride might be made the righteousness of God in Him. He cleansed her with His own blood that she not have any spot or blemish or wrinkle or any such thing. She is made to be altogether pure and lovely in His sight. He has won the victory over all her foes, even sin, Satan, death, hell and the grave. At the appointed time of the Father, He will come and receive her to Himself for that great wedding feast. Then all will be love, peace and joy unspeakable, even forever.

How wonderful is the picture of the unity of Christ, the mighty Savior and His beloved bride. How safe for her to be continually in Him and under the protection of Him, to whom was given all power in heaven and earth. What boundless love is manifest between the two through all eternity. What a glorious and sure promise of eternal life has been given to His beloved. And what a great and earnest expectation does His pure and holy bride experience as she awaits and anticipates His coming in the fullness of His majesty and power. He is her life, her joy and her strength. He is her love, her hope and her salvation. He is her all in all. "But of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption: that, according as it is written, he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord." 1 Corinthians 1:30-31.

Written in love, I hope.

GROUP OF ELDERLY ELDERS

The above picture shows a group of elderly Primitive Baptist elders, taken possibly about 68 years ago either at Flat Swamp over in Pitt County or at Spring Green in this county. Only one can be definitely identified, and he is Elder George Roberson, second from right in the first row. It is believed the picture was made at an annual association of the faith. The one third from right in the front row is believed to be Elder P. D. Gold of Wilson. The gentleman third from left in the front row could be Elder Sylvester Hassell of Williamston.

VOICES OF THE PAST

ELDER TIMOTHY W. STALLINGS 1863

Belton, Bell Co., Texas

Dear Brother Beebe, Enclosed I send you the christian experience of Elder T.W. Stallings, which was written to Elder W.M. Mitchell of Alabama.

June 9,1875 Sarah E. Davis

Elder W. M. Mitchell, Dear Brother in Christ: After a long time, I undertake to comply with my promise in trying to write you a few things. I have thought, ever since we were together, that I would at some time let you know more fully the reason of the hope that I have in Jesus; and since it is your request, I cannot feel satisfied without telling you more than I have already, although I feel unworthy to address one I so highly esteem; for this reason I have been putting it off. But with the desire that God may direct me, I will commence, and try to let you know how I was, as I hope, brought into manifestation.

I first felt interested about my soul's welfare in January, 1863, while in the army in the state of Virginia. I never had up to that time, felt any uneasiness about the salvation of my soul. My thoughts had been, prior to this, that when I got older I would turn from my ways and serve the Lord. I had no doubt but what I could get into favor with God at any time. I used to go to the Methodist meetings in our neighborhood, to see and be seen as many young folks do, and heard then tell the people that they could turn to th Lord if they would; and I fully believe their doctrine.

One morning, while in the army, was detailed and sent off with seve other men to work, (I do not now remem ber what day) and while at work that da I became uneasy. I cannot remembe any thing that I had done, heard a c thought of, that caused the uneasines to arise in my mind, but it now seems t me that in less than a half hour I had clear view of everything that I ever did. had been a fiddler, horse-racer, an gambler, and many other vile practices from a boy up to that time, and I de lighted in those things even up to tha day. Now they all came up before m as though it were yesterday that I ha passed through those things. I have since then thought of the Man that tol me all things that ever I did, and if I ar not deceived, that Man was the Chris At the same time, I think I had a view c the holy God, who cannot look upon si with any degree of allowance. I was com pelled to leave the men I was with, an hunt some secret place where I coul bow down before God, for the first tim in my life, and try to implore His merc but it seemed like my efforts were a useless. I returned to my companions as I thought I dared not stay from ther and my duty; and when I did return, I fe so bad that I could not work. It appeare to me that such a wicked sinner as I wa could not be allowed to live long upo the earth. I know not how to describe m feelings better than to compare myse to a man lost in a desert. I could not fin the way home. I then and there felt that I was lost. But the trouble of my soul would not allow me to stop. I could not read for myself a single word of the Bible, though it was now my great desire to hear it read. Yet I was afraid to ask any one to read it for me knowing as I did that my companions knew so much about my past life. I did not want them to know that I ever had a serious thought. But finally I met with the opportunity of hearing Mr. McMurry (one of my regiment) read in the book of Ezekiel. He read but a short time before he came to these words, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." If he had been reading a letter from my home, and had read that my home was burned, and that my wife and children were all dead, I could not have felt any worse. Immediately I left the camp, went where no one could see me, and laid down upon the ground, and felt like I knew that the sentence of death was passed against me. I felt that I would surely be the next man that would die or get killed in General Lee's army; but I had to confess that it would be just in God if He should take me from time to eternity even where the fire is not quenched. There were some Primitive Baptists in our company, and I heard them talk of their hopes and fears. Their talk, as well as the Bible, seemed to condemn me. I have since thought, my Brother, that I was arraigned at the bar of God, to be judged according to the law, and my whole life in a waste howling wilderness was brought to judgement. And if I could have seen you then, Brother Mitchell, and you had been enabled to preach to me all the comforts of the gospel,! do not think it would have done me any good; for I could not see a Mediator between me and the offended God. As such, I viewed my case a hopeless one. I can say to you that I was like a man sick unto death. I grew worse and weaker every day. I was then moved in my feelings to try some of the "Doctors of Divinity". They told me that all I had to do was to pray, and exercise faith, and God would certainly smile upon me. I have since thought, my Brother, that I could as easily have made the sun rise at the hour of midnight, and make darkness flee away, as I could have done either. Time and space will not allow me to make mention of everything that I witnessed in not allow me to make mention of everything that I witnessed in this great struggle; I must only hint at them and pass on.

I will now come to that memorable day when our army had been engaged in battle several days, and I was hourly looking for the summons of death. On Sunday evening,(said to be the 4th of May, 1863) I saw our men in front of me forming a line of battle, and as they formed they commenced firing. It now came forcibly to my mind that this would be my last day upon earth. I then thought of brethren Ansel Parish and E. J. Williams, two dear old Primitive Baptist preachers of our country, who are, in the providence of God, yet spared and permitted to stand upon the walls of Zion, and cry aloud, and whom I now, unworthy as I feel to be, can claim as my yokefellows, who preached for our regiment while stationed at Savannah, Georgia, at the commencement of the war. O how I now lamented my carelessness and hardness of heart; for at that time I cared not for them, nor for their preaching, but could look upon them as being good men. My mind was directed back to Georgia with a view of all the good men that I had ever known. I would have given all the wealth of this globe, had it been mine, to have been with and like one of those men that I once took such delight in persecuting, and looked upon as being such fools. O, language is too weak; I never can employ language sufficient to express my feelings at that time. I fully believed that I should be the first man that would fall. I felt now that I was forbidden to ask God for His mercies. I engaged in that bloody conflict about two and a half hours, with twenty-seven other men of my own company. At dark the battle ended with us. Only myself and four other men came out unhurt, out of twenty-seven. When I came out, I went down to a ravine and drank some water, when it was suggested to my mind, Why is it that I have escaped unhurt, while so many of my dear comrades many of them far better men, in my estimation, than I, are gone, some lying cold and lifeless on the battlefield, and some wounded and weltering in their own blood? And the answer came to my mind, that God had heard my prayers. Instantly the heavy chains of trouble fell off me, and I was permitted to look up and see Jesus, Who had suffered the just for the unjust, and satisfied God's violated law for me; and I do believe, my Brother, that my joy at that moment would be as hard to describe, as would be my troubles that I had felt only a few hours previously. Aye, my joy was unspeakable and full of glory. But this undisturbed peace did not last long. In a little while I became fearful that I was not delivered, though the heavy weight of my trouble was gone; yet it seemed that my evidence of being pardoned was not sufficient. At the time of my great joy I would have been willing to tell every man in the army my feelings; but at this time I did not think that I should ever attempt to tell them to anyone, though in the course of eight or nine days I was moved in my feelings to tell the Chaplain of our regiment some things I hoped I had witnessed. He asked me if I desired to be baptized. I told him I did, and he baptized me. I did not then know the difference, as I hope I do now, between the different denominations. I never had read a word in the Bible up to that time. In the evening after I was formally baptized, I began to desire to read the Bible more than ever, for I greatly desired to know what the Lord would have me to do, though I knew I could not read, neither did I ever expect to; for confinement to study was one thing I never could bear. I will here state that I never had advanced in a spelling book as far as words of two syllables, but in justice to my parents I will here state that it was not their fault, for they tried hard to educate their children, and succeeded in giving them all a liberal education, except me, but, as before stated, the confinement to the study of books was the greatest punishment I ever had to endure, in fact, it seemed like more than I could bear, and when my parents would send me to school with my brothers and sisters, I would run away from them, and lie in the swamp all day, until they returned, when I would rejoin their company and go home. Sometimes my parents would punish me, and continue to send me off to school, but I persisted in my wicked course, and thereby failed to get my share of that great temporal blessing, an education, though numbers of people have said, since that time, that I had a good education; but what I here state I know to be true, and I know that God knows it. I would not, my Brother, make this statement, if it were not true.

Seven days after the man baptized me, I dreamed that I could read, and well recollect the words that I read in the dream, which I have since found in the scriptures — the fourth chapter of Isaiah. I dreamed three nights in succession that I could read the scriptures, and in the morning after the third night I asked one of my fellow-soldiers (who is yet living, and not more than thirty miles from my house) for his Testament. I opened it, and the first that my eyes fastened upon was the eighth chapter of Romans. I read it as easily as I ever had since, and I never have found any difficulty since then in reading, though I had read but few words before I became fearful that I was asleep, and that it was a dream, and I went out to see whether or not I could see the sun. When I saw the sun shining, and knew that I was awake, and could read, the joy of my soul was more than I can express; and I have since thought that if I had never read any scripture besides the eighth chapter of Romans, I had found enough to give me a clear description of the character of God and His people embodied in Christ; and inasmuch as the law holds nothing against Him, it holds nothing against His people. So I consider that witness, to wit, the apostle Paul, one of the princes that rule in judgement, rightly deciding in my case what I hope I was prepared in my heart to believe, enough of the scriptures to make me wise unto salvation, if a living child of God. I think, Brother Mitchell, I received great instruction from the chapter above mentioned. I continued to read the scriptures almost every hour that I was awake, and had the time to do so; but as I was in the army, I was nearly always watching, or on some other duty, and as such I had but little time to read.

On the 19th of October, 1864, I was wounded, being shot through the elbow, and the joint slivered. This was in the valley of Virginia, seventy-four miles above Staunton. I was captured, and carried four miles, and made my escape. I then walked two days and one night and reached Staunton. I had no assistance till I got there, neither had anything been done for my wound, which was by this time in an awful condition, and my sufferings great. The doctor made an attempt to amputate my arm, but I was so weak from fasting and loss of blood that I could not bear the operation; therefore my arm was spared, and to all human appearance it was impossible for me to recover, my sufferings were so great. Notwithstanding my sufferings were so great, my soul rejoiced. Though my body was racked with distressing pain, and I had but little to eat, yet I felt that my Saviour was with me. After a long time of intense suffering, both of body and mind, I started for home, and by the kind providence of God I was permitted to reach there. Right here could be written a volume, but I must pass on. I only make mention of these things to try to give you some idea of the trouble I had to pass through. Up to this time I had not heard an Old School Baptist preach, since I Hope, I had an ear to hear. All that I had heard were the preachers we had in the army, and they preached altogether about what men could do, and what they ought to do; for I am certain I never heard them declare the Lord's doings. I did my best to eat and live on what they furnished, but it was no food for me, and I did not know at that time but what that was the best I ever would get. But at length it was pleasing to my heavenly Master for me to reach my home, in Brooks County, Georgia. I was yet suffering intense pain with my arm. I was then moved to the house of my Wife's mother, who was an Old School Baptist. Now I greatly desired to hear preaching. The meeting time came, but I was not able to go. I asked my mother-in-law to invite the preacher home with her. So he appointed preaching at her house that night, which was Saturday. The preacher was Elder H.C. Tucker, an old consistent minister of the Primitive Baptist order, one that I had in youth, and even up to the time of my going into the army, looked upon as the most awkward and ignorant man of all God's creation. I had spared no pains in persecuting, mocking, and ridiculing him. I thought that he preached the most foolishness of anybody I ever heard. But when he began preaching that night, it seemed to me that there was the most music in his voice of anything I ever heard, and every word was to my soul as apples of gold in pictures of silver. He did not preach Jesus as a co-worker with man, but as He is described in the 17th chapter of John, as having power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as His Father has given Him. O what a feast it was to my poor soul! He told me what I had felt. O, the joy of my soul at that time was more than I shall ever be able to describe. My Brother, I do believe tonight that every child of God who is in a strange land, or in other words who may be in Babylon, could they hear what I did upon that occasion, must have come to the same conclusion that I did; for before Brother Tucker got through his sermon, I could adopt the language of Ruth, "Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." Nearly all the church (Bethel) was assembled at my mother-in-law's house, on that occasion. When Brother Tucker got through, and had sat down, he said he thought I had something to tell the church, if I would. I was so moved in my feelings that I could not refrain. I commenced talking, and directly forgot myself. I tried to tell them how I was found in a desert, and a waste howling wilderness, and at the same time expressed my desire to be with, and live with the Old Baptists. Brother Tucker arose and said that he wanted to give me his hand; and as the church was nearly all present,he said to the brethren that if they felt like he did they would manifest their fellowship for me by giving me their hand. They came forward everyone of them, and joyfully received me into the fellowship of the church; and as a sister had also been received, I was to be baptised with her the next morning. I went with them to the water, where we met the balance of the church, and they all seemed to rejoice at my reception, and gave me the right hand of fellowship. I was baptized by Brother Tucker, and went up to the meeting house and took my seat among the brethren. I felt like I had come through great tribulation and much distress, but felt like I had got home to my friends. The words of David were continually in my mind, "Bless the Lord, O my soul." I believed then, and do yet, that if I was a proper gospel subject, I was then, and not until then, admitted into Christ's kingdom. No minister can be a lawful administrator, except his qualifications are of God. After it was my privilege to hear an Old Baptist preach, it was an easy matter for me to decide that I had been in the wrong place. If the baptism of the Missionary Baptists is valid, so is their doctrine, and if God does not direct their preaching, He does not direct their baptism, "whatsoever is not of faith, is sin." The declaration of non-fellowship declared years ago by the Primitive Baptists cannot be in the way of any who are as hungry as I was. For I must believe that those who come through the fire are refined as silver is refined, and tried as gold is tried, and are driven in their distress to call upon the Lord; and after they are refined, He evidences to them that He has heard them. The children of our heavenly Father must all come through one process; they are then every way prepared to understand the difference between the trumpet that is in Zion, and the many uncertain sounds that are blown to imitate the true gospel trumpet.

Dear Brother Mitchell, I have been fully reconciled, ever since the year 1865, to believe that I am among the children of the Most High God, and my trouble is my fear of not being a fit subject to have a name among that peculiar people. At times the trouble of my mind is so great that it seems like I cannot march on any further, still I have a desire to say, "Let thy mercies come unto me, even thy salvation."

Dear Brother Mitchell, I shall have to close for fear I have written enough to weary your patience, yet the half is not told. I would like to say something to you about why it is that I have to preach; but as I cannot write myself, it would be taxing my wife heavier than I am willing to do; therefore I desist.

My dear Brother, I am sorry to hear that you are suffering so much, yet I hope that you may be spared a long time to comfort the children of our God. I would be glad if you could visit our country again. I desire to see you more than ever. I think, if I live long, and you do also, I will visit your state and spend some time with you and the brethren of your churches. May the Lord bless you in your afflictions.

I remain your unworthy brother in hope of eternal life.

Lanesville, IA, Nov. 22, 1867.

Beloved Brother Beebe: — The last two numbers of the "Signs" are so interesting and precious to me, I am constrained to take up my pen and write something, though very imperfectly, upon the delightful theme which the angels desire to look into, and upon which the brethren have dwelt so interestingly. The wonders and beauties of salvation are ever unfolding to the saved in the Lord, feasting them upon new delights, and teaching them more perfectly the way of the Lord. This is in fulfillment of that for which the apostle prayed: "That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him: the eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints." — Eph. i. 17, 18. The crowning excellence of all this rich and glorious grace is love — love unto all the saints. United with this love is faith in the Lord Jesus. Let us mention another hope — a good hope through grace. These fruits and graces of the Spirit are abiding in the saints. How remarkable do they appear through the Spirit-breathing columns of our family paper, as brother Durand has fitly called the "Signs of the Times," What sweet confirming evidences it brings me, that this is a heaven born and Spirit taught family — the righteous family which keepeth the truth.

sents much of the beauty and excellence in regard to its laws and order. This should claim the attention of all the subjects of this spiritual kingdom; and these ordinations and traditions should be kept in this kingdom as they have been delivered to us; for they are of equal authority and importance with the other oracles of God, and especially essentially to the peace of Zion. "And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God." —Gal. vi. 16. But when and where the rule is departed from, there confusion takes the place of peace, while the cause of truth suffers accordingly. We may compare this wisely designed and beautifully appointed order to a casket, in which the truth and all they who walk in truth are safely kept. Of these priceless jewels many dear brethren and sisters have written many precious things; all of whom are beloved for the truth's sake; but in the last two numbers of your paper especially, you, and brother Johnson, and brother Durand have written of them in a deeply interesting and instructing way, as the Lord hath give to you and them. For the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.— 1 Cor. xii. 7. And how glad we are all made to feel when we realize that we are sharers in these spiritual things, and partakers of this abundant grace. These are our Father's gifts and blessings, and they belong to all the children. What a favored family is this! How lovely to see and hear its teachers joyously pointing our to the children the riches their Father hath given them in Christ, and with brotherly sympathy faithfully accounting for the conflicts and darkness that meets them on the way. But yet we must experience these spiritual lessons before we can truly know them, and it is only thus that we grow in the knowledge of the Lord. Brother Durand's last letter brings fresh to my mind the time in my christian life when I verily, thought and earnestly contended that the mind and heart were changed, from carnal to spiritual when the sinner was quickened by the Spirit. Sorrowful experience afterwards taught me that in my case it was not so; and gradually my darkness gave way, until the light of truth revealed me to myself as born again. I can never express half the beauty and delight I then saw and felt in this new found truth. For the first time, I clearly understood that "that which is born of the flesh is flesh;" and "that which is born of the Spirit is Spirit." And though I still believed myself a quickened and saved sinner, I saw that all my quickened sensations and desires after holiness, all the new and happy change in me, sprang from the incorruptible seed, the Spirit born spirit, of which I was the happy posessor, and not from the changed powers of my old nature; for past painful experience taught me that this was not changed in its nature; but still corrupt as before. I found, not that my former self was made new, but that I was a new creature in Christ and that the life of Christ was made manifest in my mortal flesh. I clearly discovered that my delight in the law of God was after the inner man; which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness; and I as plainly, saw that the old man is that all the work of redemption and salvation is done for and in the sinner. But this misconception of the brethren's views of the doctrine of the "warfare" arises, I think from the brethren who object separating in their own minds the heaven-born spirit, "the new man," from the sinner; as if there was no connection between them; or as if the sinner was not equally related to, affected by and interested in both the new as well as the old man, Now the failing to discover this equal relation of the believing sinner to both, these natures, as the subject of two essentially different births, is owing, perhaps, to the priority of the fleshly birth. In this birth a man is born into the world, and hence the mind labors with the idea, that whatever the sinner did not receive in this birth cannot really be any part of himself. It is then assumed from this false premise that to be born again, implies that some part of the man who is born of the flesh must be born over, and by this process changed from flesh to Spirit. Hence comes the idea that the soul of the sinner is regenerated. But this would only be a change and reformation of the old man who is born of flesh, and conflicts with the word of the Lord which says, "A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you." Ezekiel xxxvi. 26. When this is done for the redeemed sinner, then he is born again. And he now walks in newness of life and serves in newness of Spirit. This is unspeakably more done for the sinner than a mere change in his old nature. And though Nicodemus may ask, "How can these things be?" yet we rejoice that the sinner who was born of the flesh is also born of the Spirit. John the Baptist was born of the Spirit before he was born of the flesh. Then, surely that which was born of the Spirit was as absolutely a part of his being as that which was born of the flesh: and this is as absolutely true of all who are born again.

I would gladly say more upon this absorbing branch of the doctrine of Christ, but the length of this admonishes me to close. May we all know the truth, which makes us free. With unabating love to all the dear brethren,

Elder David Bartley

ANTI-CHRISTIAN.

New Vernon, N. Y., February 6, 1833.

We copy the following article from the N. Y., Baptist Repository, it was copied by them from the S.S. Journal, and appears to be intended by both of those periodicals, as an illustration of the title with which it begins.

"ANTI-CHRISTIAN. - At a meeting of a religious representative body in Crawfordsville, Indiana, a few weeks since, a vote was passed, of seven to two, disapproving of Temperance, Missionary, Bible, and Tract Societies, and Sabbath Schools, and it was determined that the patronage of any of these institutions ought to subject the offenders to ecclesiastical discipline. The argument that carried this point was used in opposition to the introduction of a new vegetable into Scotland not many centuries ago -" Potatoes are not mentioned in the Bible." - S. S. Journal."

The church of God was early warned of the spirit of anti-christ which was in the world in the apostles' days; and lest they should be deceived by it, its most prominant features were depicted by the apostle John. Let us briefly compare the testimony given by inspiration of the Holy Ghost, with that given in the article above." And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God, and is that spirit of anti-christ, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world. Ye are of God little children, and have overcome them; because greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world. They are of the world, therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them. We are of God, he that knoweth God, heareth us; he that is not of God, heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth and the spirit of error."-1 John iv. 3, 4, 5, 6. The characteristics of anti-christ, according to the apostle, are, first; a failure to acknowledge that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, i.e. as the head over all things to his Church, which is his body, and the fullness of him that filleth all in all ; as God's King, set upon his holy hill Zion, to reign unrivaled as the only wise God, our Savior as the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace, on whose shoulder is the government of Zion. In short, to acknowledge that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, embraces all that his name implies, viz: Jesus, "for he shall save his people from their sins." Christ the annointed of the Father, anointed as Prophet to teach his children, " as never man taught." Anointed Priest, to bear their sins in his own body on the tree, and "by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." Anointed King, to be their only Lawmaker or Law-giver. To deny this, or any part of it, is anti-christian, either directly, by disputing his right to legislate over the church, or indirectly, by attempting to amend his laws, or add to them, even by the introduction (into Zion) of potatoes, or anything else to feed the flock of God upon, which Jesus the King has not provided. See Nehemiah, xiii. 15, 16. "I testified against them in the day wherein they sold vituals. There dwelt men of Tyre also therein, which brought fish, and all manner of ware, and sold on the Sabbath unto the children of Judah, and in Jerusalem." Again the apostle further describes the spirit of anti-christ, as being, first, "of the world;" secondly, "they speak of the world;" thirdly, "they are heard by the world;" fourthly, "they are for the world;" and lastly, "they hear not the apostles."

Such is the description of anti-christ given by the infallible word of God. Candid reader, where do you find these characteristics? Can you discover them in the conduct of those brethren who refuse to recognize those institutions which are unauthorized by the King's book, and are brought in by the merchants of Tyre! Or are they to be found in those societies which teach for doctrines the commandments of men! Have the brethren complained of in Indiana, denied that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, either by refusing to obey what he has commanded, or by consenting to do what he has not commanded? Are they of the world? Do the world hear them? Do they speak the language of the world? Or are they for the world, coveting other men's gold and silver, or are they denounced for refusing to do this? Ah, here lies the offence of the cross. "With such arguments as would prohibit the introduction of potatoes, where they could not be introduced scripturally, they have passed a vote, disapproving of temperance, Missionary, Bible and Tract Societies, and Sabbath Schools. Nay more, they have concluded that such departures from the law of king Jesus, ought to subject the offenders to the discipline of the church." We truly rejoice to learn that God has reserved to himself a remnant, according to the election of grace, in the state of Indiana, who have not bowed to the image of Baal.

Elder Gilbert Beebe

THE ETERNAL GOD

God (good), the eternal, self-existent One, whom Moses says created the heavens and the earth, can we poor weak imperfect mortals glance a thought halfway to a Being who has power to say let the heavens and the earth be, and where nothing was, they appear? His word also separated the land from the waters and caused the trees and all vegetation to grow out of the earth, each bearing seed after its kind. The beast of field, the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the air all are the result of His command. He said let there be light, and immediately the sun that lights this earth today was in the heavens giving light and heat to all creatures in all parts of God's creation. Last of all he created man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul. And God said it is not good for man to be alone, and among all the other creatures there was not one suited to be the companion of man. So the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon man and He, God, took a rib from the man's side and made of it a woman, brought her to the man and she was his wife, bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh. To these He said be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth. The Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden and caused to grow all manner of fruits necessary for man, and placed him there, forbidding him to eat of only one tree. But through the temptation of the serpent both the woman and the man ate of the fruit of this forbidden tree and are cast out of this pleasant garden to till the ground from which they had been taken, and the earth the Lord said, should bring forth thorns and thistles unto them. But the Lord God made coats of skins and covered them. In view of all these things, who could help saying great and marvelous are Thy works Lord God Almighty. Who would dare limit His wisdom or His power or question the fact that there is nothing impossible with God? Now man is a sinner for he has transgressed the law of his God, and sin is the transgression of the law. Man is justly condemned, separated from his God and there is no way possible to him by which he may return. But God before the foundation of the world had chosen in his eternal Son, Jesus Christ, a people for himself out of this race of this now fallen man, and so He will not be outdone by Satan but will Himself provide a ransom whereby His banished should not be expelled from Him. So He sent His beloved Son. In a most wonderful way he caused a virgin to conceive and bear a son, who was God as well as man, in whom dwelt all the fullness of the Godhead bodily.

Hence help is laid upon One who is mighty to save all that come to God by Him. He was made of a woman, made under the law, and all the sins of all His people were imputed to Him and He fulfilled all the requirements of the law for them, the just for the unjust, and sacrificed Himself on the tree of the cross, a sacrifice acceptable, well pleasing to God. He laid in the earth three days and three nights and then, O wonder of wonders, He burst the bars of death and came forth a triumphant conqueror over all the powers of darkness. How amazing must the events have been to all the dwellers at Jerusalem. He had told them that He had the power to lay down His life and power to take it again and that after three days He would arise. His enemies did not believe it, and His friends did not understand it. What consternation seized His enemies and what lying they resorted to, to keep the people from believing it; but exultant joy filled the hearts and souls of His friends; how they hurried about to tell each other the most glorious news their ears had ever listened to. How wonderful must have been the signs when the angel whose countenance was like lightning and his raiment white as snow descended and rolled away the stone and sat upon it; and that same body born of Mary, that died upon the cross came out of that grave an all conquering King. Who could but say again, great and marvelous are Thy works, Lord God Almighty. Just and true are Thy ways Thou King of saints. This risen Jesus walked and talked with His disciples for-forty days comforting them and establishing them in their faith in Him, and instructing them in the things of His earthly kingdom, charging them what and how they should preach as His servants, and also servants of His people, telling them that He would never leave them nor forsake them, and then in their full view ascended to His Father who sent Him. What an awe-inspiring scene it must have been to see a body of flesh and bones go up and up through the air with no seen power carrying it. What unspeakable joy must have filled their hearts when the two in white standing by said, "This same Jesus which ye see go away shall so come again in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." And this is the crowning glory of the Christian hope, Jesus, the beloved Son of God, the Saviour and Comforter of His people is coming again without sin unto salvation Paul says we are waiting for the adoption, to-wit: the redemption of our body. Paul in the 4th chapter of first Thes. 16th verse, says: "For the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of

"And when the servant of the man of God was risen early, and gone forth, behold, an host compassed the city both with horses and chariots. And his servants said unto him, Alas, my master! How shall we do? And he answered, Fear not: for they that be with us are more than they that be with them. And Elisha prayed, and said, Lord, I pray thee, open his eyes, that he may see. And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw: and, behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha." II Kings 6:15-17.

Did you ever wonder about the angels of God, especially those angels who protect and preserve the elect children of God? We see pictures of what some think angels must look like. And we read of and hear of angels described as some kind of human-like beings with large white wings. Many times they are depicted in the female form. But do those images really describe the angels of God, or are those kinds of thoughts purely fanciful? We desire that God should be merciful and show us the truth of the matter, that we should not be led about with every wind of doctrine and that we should be kept from error. May the Lord help us to see and to understand the truth to the praise of God's mercy and grace, and for our comfort and strength.

Elisha and his servant dwelt in a city, which was compassed about by the Syrian army --- a host of seemingly invincible military men with horses and chariots. They had come to conquer and to destroy that city. The servant of Elisha, upon seeing the host, greatly feared for his life and looked to Elisha for comfort and instruction about what they should do. When we are overwhelmed, our nature tells us to do something, and do it quick. We are told by the carnal mind either to stand and fight, or to flee for our lives. But the Spirit, in that small, still voice tells us, "Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord." The Spirit calms us down and gives us a vision that we could not see on our own.

ing? Where are you going? "I must go," was all I could say. And I went. And when I got to that little patch of woods I had to fall right on my face and I believe the Lord answered my prayer. And always in the communion service at other times I had felt something, that this is not all of it — this is not all of it. This being set apart for the office of Deacon is a very special thing, to be one that serves the Lord's people and to commune with them. Not only that but so many others things are wondrous - a precious office and station to fill. But yet I believe there was a burden on me also that I couldn't hide. I tried everything I could to keep from it.

But I was on the job at work and I had a quite busy day that particular day putting a roof on in construction. The man looking after the job was Elder Frank Pegram's grandson. We were putting plywood up on a roof and we had stacks set up in various places and we would move the ladder around in various places to hand the material up. Daddy was bringing the sheets of plywood over and I would pass them up on the ladder, walking them up the ladder. I'd carried about three sheets I guess up the ladder one at the time and I was going on probably my third or fourth sheet. When I was going up the ladder, where the extension ladder changes from one rung to two rungs, I slipped and I missed my footing and I felt myself falling. I was falling backwards, going backwards. At that instance a hand shoved me, not lightly but forcibly shoved me, back onto that ladder, my feet on the ladder. I still had the piece of plywood in my hand and I regained my balance. I turned my head to the right and I said, "Thanks." I thought my Daddy did it. But I looked and there was no one there. And my feet were about four feet, four or five feet off the ground at that time. So he wouldn't even if he had been there, he would not have been able to reach my back, I mean to tell you....(turned tape)... nailed it in place. I didn't say a word to them. When I came down off the ladder I looked at Daddy and I said, "Is there anybody around? Was there anybody around?" I looked around the house and there was no body around. I said, "I fell off the ladder and someone pushed me back onto the ladder." We were both overwhelmed to realize what had just happened. It wasn't any man that did that. I believe it was an angel from God. I can't believe anything else. That is what it was that saved me from no doubt being seriously injured if not death. There was a rough terrain coming off the ladder. No doubt I would have landed right across my chest or my stomach.

Along that time that all these things were happening there was this feeling that something was laid upon me, the Lord. I felt many things and there were a lot of disturbances going on at that time and a lot of tribulations, things in the church that disturbed me so much. I had not been a member all that long, but yet it seemed like everything was just falling apart. It wasn't long after that, it came to the place where I had to leave Bell Spur, but there are no ill feelings to this day at all, not with anyone there that I know about. Looking back on it, it had to be. I had to leave and I went to Long Branch. But there was a purpose there for me. Even though I didn't understand it at the time at all. The people were saying things about me. That they saw things in me that I tried to deny, I tried to hide. But yet I don't believe God just works on one end. I believe when He calls one to preach the everlasting gospel of the Son of God, he will show others as well — show others before. Many people were telling me that I was going to have to preach, that they believed that I was going to have to.

But there was a time and a season that it had to be. They had the Eastern Kehukee Association to meet, it was '98. Anyway several of the brethren were going down so I left. I asked if it would be okay if I went and they said, "Sure." I made my journey and went alone. A month before that, prior to that, at the Smith River Association, we had a meeting at the Parson's schoolhouse. Elder Goad and Elder Brumfield were there and they all spoke. They asked me if I had anything to say. I looked at them and I said a few words. I don't know what I said, but the next day some people came up to me and said they were so happy for me, that they heard that I had spoken and they knew that it was coming, that that day was coming. I just didn't know how to react. I didn't know how to respond to what they were saying to me. But the next month when the first weekend came, I was glad to go to the Eastern Kehukee Association, so I did. I got down almost to the interstate, past Elon College and my truck quit. It just died suddenly. It was running real good and all of a sudden it just came to a dead stop. I got it out of the road and called for a wrecker. I had to wait several hours and I called Daddy to come and get me because they were going to have to keep it a few days. The fuel pump had burned up. So you know what thoughts ran through my mind when that truck quit. That I had bought my ticket and that yet I could not escape. I had thought I could get on that ship like Jonah did and escape the call, because I feared they were going to call on me to speak if I didn't go. That wasn't the only reason I went, but that was a feeling in the back of my mind that they would call on me if I went and that would be my excuse and maybe if they put it off, they would forget about it. Maybe they would let it slide. But yet I know that was a preparation right there. I couldn't escape it. I had to go the way the Lord sent me, if I am sent at all. I am still filled with many doubts and fears. But they did, that weekend, they called upon me to speak and I already felt like that I had denied Him many times and I know that that scripture says that "if thou denyeth me before men, I will deny thee before my Father." That always did send great fear unto me, but who was I? Who was I? You cannot take any self-pride in this thing. If the Lord has called one to speak comfortingly to His little children to preach to them Jesus and Him crucified, being the way, the truth and the life and He is the only way to salvation — the only way that brought that salvation to His little children. Who was I, but just one who had to be led, guided and directed and it was not in me. It was not in myself to even begin to understand the things that must be, that the Lord has prepared. That He will open rivers in high places and fountains in mountains in the midst of valleys that that Gospel will be preached until He cometh again. It must be and there will be those vessels of mercy there to receive it. They will receive it because it was prepared for them. So a man that is called to preach that gospel, He will fill his mouth with the good news from a far country.

It seems like what I say is all cluttered. This is just a little. Just a little. It is hard to say everything. I didn't really go into a lot of the condemnation that I felt and still feel. There are some things that I wouldn't trade for anything, but yet I just feel fearful, a fearful thing to realize. I am afraid a lot of times when I tell something that people might be offended by what you say, and if they ever did like me, they won't like me anymore. But I hear others talk that they went along the same lines. If you hear one saying that they enjoyed the worldly pleasures, I was right there with them. I am ashamed - ashamed of it. Still that was my lot. I have to say, "I paid that which I vowed, Salvation is of the Lord." A lot of people would say about Jonah, "Oh, if he had just obeyed the Lord,...

(Inserted by Elder Carl Terry) ... things would have been so much better for him. But if he had went on and obeyed the Lord at the beginning, when he got down to Ninevah, what would he have told them people? He wouldn't have had anything to tell them, would he?

VOICES OF THE PAST

"VOICE FROM THE PAST" EXPERIENCE OF ELDER J.A. FAGG

I feel I want to write a part of my experience, hoping it will be of some benefit to someone and to my children when I am gone. When very young, I had fears of being lost, and afterwards went to the lonesome grove to pray. My burden continued to increase from time to time. At times I thought it was more than I could bear, and at other times it was not so bad. Finally I gave it all up for loss, but the very breathing of my soul was, "Lord, Have Mercy On Me A Sinner."

My father was a deacon of Piney Grove Church, and mother was a member of the same church. One Sunday they asked me to go with them to church. I obeyed, and while trodding along behind them, I prayed all the way for mercy. While Elder H.D. Mickey was preaching, I saw my mother sitting with sisters and my father sitting over on the other side with the brethren. I sat there thinking when they are going, they will go where the singing of angels are, when I am gone, it will be where there is neither eye to pity nor hand to deliver. I felt if I was sent to hell it would be just, and I wanted to beg Him for mercy. Suddenly it seemed to me the Heavens were opened and I saw from whence every blessing that I will ever need, comes from. I think I was permitted to drink of the water John spoke of, as clear as crystal. My burden was gone, and I said, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, let everything praise His name." On my way home I said, "Bless the Lord." In the meantime I had married and tried to live satisfied, but love sprang up for the church and I had a desire to be baptized but felt too unworthy to ask those good people for a home with them. Through much affliction, I was made willing to go and ask for a home with them. The weather was very cold when I was baptized, but when Elder J.A. Ashburn laid me beneath the wave and brought me up out of the water, I realized what Christ meant when he said, "My yoke is easy, my burden is light." I found this to be true; gathered into the fold to live and to die.

For twenty-seven years I have been a member of the church and my love for them has not grown cold, but still feel like saying with Ruth of old, "Where you live, let me live; where you go, let me go,I want your God to be my God." Before I joined the church, I had a desire to preach. One sister told me that I would preach sometime, because she saw me flying in the air and saw an angel come and give me a trumpet to blow. This gave me a great deal of trouble, because I did not feel fit for this place. I begged the Lord to call my neighbor, a school teacher (O.M. Bennet, a man that is worthy, as I felt) Later I had the pleasure to baptize that good man, his wife and his mother.

Finally everything that I turned my hands to was a failure, and feeling woe is me if I preach not the gospel. I had no rest day or night. The church met one Saturday night at my father's old home. One of the deacons asked if they had a right to invite me to take part in the service. Elders F.P. Stone, clerk of the Fishers River, and L.I. Gilbert from the Smith River stated that I had the right. This is when I made my first attempt in public. Every word I said was like taking a burden from my breast. The next day I went to Piney Grove Church and spoke three or four minutes. While I was speaking, one of the saints shouted, and said, "Bless the Lord." The same has been much comfort to me. The words seemed to me like apples of gold in pictures of silver. Let me say here that many preachers have hurt themselves by trying to stand too long.

I cannot include in this letter all the places I have met with disappointments, but I have my doubts and fears. I was soon invited from church to church, and attended with great pleasure. I never asked for liberty to speak; my church felt it. I never asked to be ordained; churches wanted my services. Frequently people requested me to baptize them. My church called for my ordination, and I was ordained by Elders J.A.Ashburn, E.M. Barnard, Paul Priddy and possibly others. Then my wife said if she had known that I was going to be a preacher, perhaps, we would not have been married. She wanted me to stay with her and the children. So I prayed to the Lord if He had called me to preach the gospel to make her willing for me to leave her and the children and go in His great name. One night she awoke me and said,: Jimmie, I have dreamed a dream and I am troubled almost to death. I saw you married to the prettiest woman I have ever seen. Are you going to forsake me and the little children?" She said that I was traveling in the air in a large circle with the woman. She asked me the meaning of her dream. I explained to her that it was the church that she had seen,and my dear brethren. I hope I am traveling with her. My wife was made willing for me to go; bless the good Lord.

Later, I had the priviledge of baptizing my wife, one of my sisters and my grandmother at the same time. Oh, how good the Lord has been to me. I have been trying to preach for about twenty-seven years and I feel the Lord has blessed my labours. My church is in peace and I have had the care of churches ever since my ordination. I had the priviledge of baptizing Elders Watt Tuttle, S.H. Reid, W. J. Brown, and G. W. Hill. I feel thankful for the priviledges of baptizing these worthy servants. I hope the Lord may continue to bless them to preach the gospel of peace.

Brethren, let us labor for the things that make for peace, and leave extreme views and hobbies off, for they do not edify the church of God. Things that bring strife and confusion to our minds and hearts are not of the Lord.

LETTER OF ELDER RUSTON TO HIS SISTER IN ENGLAND

New York City 1914

My dear sister Tilly:

There is a matter that has been troubling me for some time, and I think I should write home about it. I certainly should be glad if I were able to talk with father on the subject.

When I was admitted into the church fellowship by baptism a little more than a year ago, there were those who expressed a desire for me to speak sometimes in the meetings,(after having heard me speak in prayer to their comfort.)

The pastor called on me several times, and when I remonstrated he told me it was the desire of the members to hear me speak. I spoke in my feeble way, hoping I should not be asked again; but later our pastor was asked to speak at other churches, and told me that when he baptized me he believed he was baptizing a servant of the Lord Jesus Christ; that I had been a comfort to him and a help, and hoped I would speak when he was away with the ability that God gives. I spoke, though with much trembling, yet I was told by many that they believed I had been helped. This occurred several times. Recently Elder Durand, the oldest minister of our kind in the U.S.A., was here for the day, and I was asked to speak then. He gave me some words of encouragement and said he believed I was called to preach. Two Sundays ago our pastor was to preach at Philadelphia, and the people there asked that he bring me with him. I went, and was asked to speak morning and evening.

With my speaking I have sometimes had comfort, but generally I have a feeling that I have no ability and would much rather be a listener. I was hoping that my visit to Philadelphia would finish the matter; instead of that, to my surprise, after service last Sunday there was a meeting and our pastor said that it had been the request of the members that George Rustin be liberated by the church to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ according to the gift that God had bestowed upon him, wherever a door might be open. I was asked to relate my exercise of mind on the matter. I requested that the matter should be dropped indefinitely as it was a surprise, although I had feared it; that I was so young in the church I was sometimes afraid I should go wrong or express myself wrongly on the Scriptures. They would not take my advice in that and after I related my exercise of mind, they voted on the matter unanimously.

In joining the church which I love as the church of Christ, I am subject to them; and I desire to be. I say solemnly that I never sought this, and feel the seriousness of it; but I cannot help but confess that God has been my help and comfort in the past, and I hope he will be my stay in the future, whatever is before me. I have had many expressions of comfort at times from what I have said, but I desire God's commendation. The thoughts of preaching have troubled me for years, and I might have spoken to others of the trial of mind I was under but for that constant fear that I would only bring closer the time I dreaded.

Once while in the Royal College of Art in London, after having been called upon to speak at a student's meeting where I had to condemn the religion of today, and to speak of what I believed to be the truth,! was troubled and hoping to banish the thought from me. I turned to my Bible, and right before me was. "Son of man,! have made thee a watchman," etc.(Ezekiel 3:17)! closed the book in disgust, thinking I would avoid reading the Bible and read other books dealing in art. I saw the professor and asked him what I should read. To my surprise he said, "Read the Bible." He did not care about the Bible, and why should he say that unless there was a deeper cause?

When I returned to America it was a very rough voyage, and my mind was on Psalm 107 for some time. In my cabin there were three young men, who, seeing I was religious I suppose, suggested that I ought to go to the service. I said I would if they agreed to do the same. When we got there there were about ninety people, and no one to take the service. The young men in my berth immediately said I could take the service. I told them I had never done any preaching, and that what I might say might not suit them. They insisted; so I spoke from Psalm 107, praying that God would help me. The words were, "They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man, and are at their wit's end,"etc. I spoke for three quarters of an hour, but don't know if any were profited or understood what I said. I did not talk on these things here, wishing rather to hide them.

The day I was baptized the pastor spoke from, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few," etc. While I received much comfort from the preaching,! was very worried to think that he should have taken that text; and that Sunday evening I took the Bible to read, and before I knew it, I was reading the chapter from Ezekiel, "Son of man,"etc. (chapter three)I have tried to avoid the is matter. I know the seriousness of it, I have tried to interest myself in art, and forget that; but I cannot. I know in keeping of God's commandments there is great reward, but I know it is a hard road. Any who have had a father like we have had know it is not an easy path.

Oh, Tilly, it is difficult to go before people with nothing prepared, but simply cry that God will pity me. At Philadelphia at the evening service, the thought that there were four preachers present came to my mind and embarrassed me for a moment, but I am thankful that I was able to continue. To liberate or license a man to speak, means that he is subject to the church that sends him out, and they can withdraw that license if he should be unsound, He does not administer baptism or communion until he has given proof of his gift, and is ordained. I am but a child and feel helpless, but I do love my God and his people wherever they are.

With love from your affectionate brother,

George.

A SHORT SERMON ON WINE.

"DRINK no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities." Paul to Timothy.

NEW VERNON, N. Y., June 1, 1840.

Unpopular as this text may appear in this day of religious reform, in which the scriptures have fallen so far behind the spirit of the age, we having nothing of popularity at stake, may venture a few remarks upon it without the fear of losing the favor of the reformers of the day.

Paul, the writer of the text, was an inspired apostle, and wrote as he was directed by the Holy Ghost. Timothy was a minister of the gospel, and a bishop or elder of the church of Christ at Ephesus. It was therefore proper that Paul, as one of the twelve judges of the twelve spiritual tribes, should instruct Timothy bow he ought to behave himself in the house of God.

From the text we learn that Timothy was a man of frequent infirmity, and from the fact infer that although gospel ministers are required to be sound in the faith and practice of the gospel, they are men of bodily infirmity like all the rest of mankind.

Timothy could not be temperate in all things, unless he discontinued the use of water and used a little wine. We do not know that Paul required a tetotal abstinence from water: but he evidently believed that water was more injurious to the health of Timothy than wine would be; he therefore directed a discontinuance of the former and the use of a little of the latter.

Paul did not in this case, or in any other case, direct the use of much wine; but elsewhere forbids that the saints should be drunken with wine, wherein there is excess.

From the above considerations we infer that there is a very wide difference between the views of Paul and those of the modern false apostles of our age, as the latter hold that the use of intoxicating drinks, to any extent, is a moral sin; that they are not to be used in any case, to any extent whatever, without involving guilt and sin on the part of the person or persons using it. Paul, however, held with his Lord, that the use, not abuse, of all things was lawful and expedient, and an things were to be received and used by the saints with thanksgiving. Had our Lord regarded the use of intoxicating liquors as a sin, is it consistent to believe that he would have given Israel wine as a blessing, or directed the children of Israel to buy wine and strong drink; or would our Savior have changed the pure element of water into such wicked stuff as wine, and then, after the people had already well drank, caused the better wine to be served to the governor and the feast? Had our Lord approved of the doctrine of modern tetotal abstinence, would he have been called a wine-bibber or wine drinker. Again we infer, that the modern theory is not only without a divine warrant in the sacred pages, but is absolutely in opposition to the revealed laws of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. Any person, therefore, connected with the church of God, who shall violate the laws of Christ, by uniting in modern societies which are hostile to his laws, are guilty of disorder, and should be labored with as offenders; and if not reclaimed, excluded, as in all other cases of walking disorderly.

In rejecting the inventions of men on this subject, and adhering strictly to the bible, let no one suppose us to advocate excessive, or even habitual use of wine, or other intoxicating drinks; such is not the fact, either in theory or in our practice. But we do believe, and maintain, that the bible is a full, perfect and infallible guide for the children of God.

They no where countenance the excessive use of wine or strong drink, or of anything else; but they direct that we should use all things bestowed upon us by a bountiful providence, as not abusing them. It is a reflection on the wisdom and goodness of God, for men to attempt an improvement of the divine rule. The church is required to withhold her fellowship from drunkards; and if any in our connection be come intemperate in eating, or drinking, or otherwise, they are to be put away, if they cannot be reclaimed by gospel measures. It is disgraceful, and abominably wicked, for christians to indulge in an unbecoming use, or we would rather say, abuse, of what God has given us. Any person who cannot be reclaimed from intemperate habits, by gospel discipline, from a sense of their allegiance to their heavenly King, by the love of God dwelling in their hearts, by a sense of gospel order, by a desire to walk circumspectly, ought to be put away from the communion and fellowship of the church of Christ. To sustain them in the church by any other constraint than that found in the New Testament, is a perversion of the laws of Christ, and involves the sin of retaining in church connection, such as the laws of Zion have commanded us to put away. We care not for the slang of the enemy, in slanderously reporting us as wine-bibbers, gluttons, &c.; for so they accused our Lord; but when any of the household of faith give occasion to the enemy, to reproach them on this ground, it is trying indeed; therefore, suffer the word of exhortation.

Dear brethren, let us abstain from all appearance of evil; let us live soberly, righteously and godly in the present world. And although we are not at liberty to allow any man to judge us in meats, or in drinks, or in regard to a holy day, let us, as children of the light, as the followers of the Lamb, as the disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ, deny ourselves of all ungodliness and worldly lusts, and endeavor to show an ungodly generation that we, by the laws of Christ alone, are taught to walk worthy of the high vocation wherewith we are called. If our infirmities (we don't mean depraved appetites) require strong drink, there is no more harm in using it moderately, than milk or bread; providing we use it law fully; and it is as great a sin for us to refuse it when, like Timothy, our sickness, or natural infirmity requires it, as to refuse any other temporal blessing that God has given us. It is not in drinking a little wine that the evil lies; but in carnal indulgence, which inculcates an appetite for still greater indulgence, and so leads on to actual intemperance. In the use of wine and other strong drink, there is perhaps a much greater danger of cherishing an immoderate thirst, than in the use of many other things; we are therefore to be the more guarded-to use it with the greater caution; and if we cannot use it without exciting an inclination to use it excessively, it is our duty, as christians, to abandon the use of it altogether. By the same rule which required Timothy to discontinue the use of water, because it was detrimental to his health, we are required to abstain from wine and strong drink, when our infirmities require water instead of wine.

The strong man was immediately bound, and we shortly find Paul preaching the faith which before this manifestation of Jesus' power to overcome the stoutest rebel against his grace, he had hated. This faith Paul labored with all his might and main to destroy he afterward preached; Jesus, the only name given under heaven whereby we must be saved. King Nebuchadnezzar is another case where the strong man armed kept his palace until God deprived him of his reason, and he wandered for seven years with the beasts of the field, until he knew that the Most High ruled in the kingdom of men and gave it to whomsoever he would. (Daniel iv. 32.) At the end of seven years the Lord restored to the king his reason, and he broke forth in the following wonderful language: "I Nebuchadnezzar lifted up mine eyes unto heaven, and mine understanding returned unto me; and I blessed the Most High; and I praised and honored him that liveth forever, whose dominion is an everlasting dominion, and his kingdom is from generation to generation: and all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing: and he doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou?" And the king further said, "I Nebuchadnezzar praise and extol and honor the King of heaven, all whose works are truth, and his ways judgment: and those that walk in pride he is able to abase." Daniel iv. 37. So we find that there is no power today but Jesus, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace, that is able to bind the strong man in any of the fallen sons and daughters of Adam, for Jesus alone has the words of eternal life, and he gives eternal life and he gives eternal life to all of his people, even all who are included in the covenant of grace, for the works of the glorious new covenant are, "I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people: and they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest. For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." — Heb. viii. 10-12. How well suited is this to the needs of every quickened sinner, for Jesus bestows every grace, and they stand justified, clothed in his righteousness. May we ever extol the stem of Jesse's rod, and crown him Lord of all. We may well exclaim with the psalmist, "I will sing praises unto my God while I have my being." Jesus will divide a portion with the strong, and not one of his portion will he lose, for the Lord's portion is his people.

Dear brethren in Christ, do with this as you think best. I would like to get some subscribers for the Signs, but this town is full of Babel builders, who have turned their ears to fables, and therefore will not have the truth.

In hope,

THE COMMUNION RING

How many people today remember the communion ring? Some of my memories center around that sacred occasion.

On "Communion Day" my family would be up early to get ready. The chores had to be done and the lunch must be prepared. All of the children had to lend a hand.

When we arrived at the church, Papa would tie the horses under a shade tree off to one side. We all went into the house and singing was begun: It sounded so beautiful, all the different voices mingling together. I remember so well, my Mother's high tenor voice, which could be heard blending so beautifully with the other voices, the soprano, bass and alto. There was no need for musical instruments. There was music there that only those with a "hearing ear and heart" could understand. The hymns were in praise to God. No whispering and laughing was heard. It seemed like all the congregation felt the sacredness of the occasion.

After singing for a while the ministers went into the pulpit and the service began with a short hymn and prayer by one of the ministers.

After the preaching service ended, there was a short intermission. The people went outside and the men began carrying the church pews out in the yard. They placed them in a large circle, with a smaller circle inside. A table was placed in the center of the ring and the bread and wine was placed on it with glasses and plates.

I knew about the bread and wine. I had seen it prepared with great care by my Mother. I knew there was something very special about it.

The deacons sat on the benches in the inner circle and the rest of the members, together with the visiting members, sat in the outer circle. It was a very solemn occasion. I, as a small child, stood outside the circle right behind Mama. The silence could almost be felt. I watched as the bread was broken and wondered how the bread could be the Body of Jesus Christ when I had seen Mama bake it. At that time, I didn't know what the word, "Emblem," meant. I hope that it was later revealed to me the sacredness of the scene I had stood and watched. I could feel, even then, that there was something very precious taking place. Many of the people were in tears, all very attentive and quiet.

The deacons passed the bread around the circle with the same quietness which I saw in the congregation.

The wine was served with the same solemnity as with the bread. In my childish mind, I wondered about what I was seeing and wished I could be a part of it.

Now I have a Hope in my breast that I have had a small part, unworthy as I feel to be. I don't know if I have taken the communion unworthily, but at times I have been given a joy that cannot be described. I wouldn't trade the precious privilege of communing with the dear saints for all the wealth this world has to offer. That joy can't be bought nor sold, neither can it be described. It must be felt in the heart. My hope is that I am not mistaken in the whole matter and in the end be a cast-away. If so it will be just, for I know there's nothing good in me. I desire to praise this God who never makes a mistake. To Him be honor, glory and dominion forever.

PSALM 127.

Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain.

It is vain for you to rise up early, to sit up late, to eat the bread of sorrows: for so he giveth his beloved sleep.

Lo, children are an heritage of the Lord, and the fruit of the womb is his reward.

As arrows are in the had of a mighty man; so are children of the youth.

Happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them; they shall not be ashamed, but they shall speak with the enemies in the gate.

SAVED BY A SPIDER'S WEB

You have seen the spider weave his web in the summer sunshine. How fragile it looks! A breath of wind would almost break it, yet that weak thing of gossamer was once used by God to save a servant of His from the cruel hands of those who sought to kill him.

In the quiet village of Stambourne

there lived, in the year 1662, a godly preacher of the Gospel named Henry Havers. There was a great persecution at that time, and this earnest man was hunted from place to place by the soldiers who were sent out to take him a prisoner. He was preaching one day in the country to a number of eager listeners who delighted to hear the simple Gospel of God's salvation from the aged preacher's lips, when an alarm was given that a party of officers was on the way to arrest him.

There was no time to mount his horse to escape; he ran into an old house close by, and crept into an empty kiln, where he lay silently praying that God would save him from his enemies. No sooner had he entered his strange hiding place than a spider lowered himself across the mouth of the kiln and began to weave his web. Forgetting his perilous position, the man of God watched the busy spider complete his web, which reached from side to side of the narrow opening. Presently voices were heard, and he could hear the tramp of feet passing the kiln in which he lay. Right up to the kiln's mouth they came, searching for their prey.

"It's no use looking in the kiln," said one officer to another. "The old villain can't be in there. Don't you see a spider's web across the mouth of it? He could never have gotten in there without breaking it."

So off they went, leaving the man of God safe in the place which God had made a sure refuge to him, by means of a fragile spider's web. When all was quiet, he crept from his hiding place, and looking on the feeble thing which God had used as a shield to protect him, he exclaimed, "It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in princes."

MEMORIES IN THE NIGHT

How precious the memory that God gives us
That brightened my life for awhile
Their love and prayers sustained me
Through the times of affliction and trial.

The dear face often comes in the night time
Many dark and lonely hour they cheer
How sweet and tender memories
Steal o'er the lonely heart, lingering here.

How wonderful is His love and mercy
Expressed by His Saints here below
Such love through his lonesome journey
Causing light through the darkness glow.

Some dear ones who are in Heaven
Are kept in memories Sacred place
I must look with sweet anticipation
To see them there face to face.

I would offer to our Lord praise and honor
For the memory of their comfort and cheer

He sends me love by His sweet Angels
As I walk the lonely road down here.

Through the gloomy days of life they linger
They warm the heart with their love
In memory they are in the chest of treasures
With joy, I hope to meet them there above.

Together there I hope to behold Him
Who loved me so much He died
To give me a bright Home in Heaven
There forever to rest by His precious Side.

"And Elisha came again to Gilgal: and there was a dearth in the land; and the sons of the prophets were sitting before him: and he said unto his servant, Set on the great pot, and seethe pottage for the sons of the prophets. And one went out into the field to gather herbs, and found a wild vine, and gathered thereof wild gourds his lap full, and came and shred them into the pot of pottage: for they knew them not. So they poured out for the men to eat. And it came to pass, as they were eating of the pottage, that they cried out, and said, O thou man of God, there is death in the pot. And they could not eat there of. But he said, Then bring meal. And he cast it into the pot; and he said, Pour out for the people, that they may eat. And there was no harm in the pot." II Kings 4:38-41

Elder J. B. Farmer

As with all scripture, for there to be any understanding by any of His little ones, first, revelation must be given. If none is given, they can only see the natural side of things. Spiritual things are only spiritually understood. " The things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." May we be given that revelation to comfort our poor souls.

According to the inspired apostle, Paul, we are taught, "Be not carried about with diverse and strange doctrines. For it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace; not with meats, which have not profited them that have been occupied therein." God's people are taught as they are enabled to receive it. "The word of the Lord was unto them precept upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little and there a little" It appears that the first thing they are taught is the fear of God. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." The next thing they seem to be made to see and acknowledge is the sovereignty of God. Being made to see that He made all things for Himself, the heavens and the earth and all things in them, and that He sustains and controls all things, they are made to believe and to confess that salvation is altogether of the Lord by grace. They are made to confess their weaknesses and His power. They can claim no credit for anything good. The blessed apostle said that the will to do good was with him, but how to perform that which is good, he found not. He said, "By the grace of God I am what I am." And he said that, "it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed."

Being taught these things, and having their hearts established with grace, they are delivered from all sorts of false doctrines and teachings of men. The things, which sweep away the world, have no power to move one of God's little ones from the foundation rock upon which they are built. When any teachings are presented, they are made to judge them by the Spirit, which is given to them. They are made to hold to that which is good and to reject that which is evil. If they hear a false doctrine, it does not harm them, but passes harmlessly away from them. The Lord said, "if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them." The false teachings are death to them that are not taught of God. "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." They cannot even question whether they have a lie in their right hand.

I am made to believe that the account of the wild gourds, given in II Kings, is given by God for the learning and for the edification of His little ones. First we are told that there was a dearth in the land. Do we not see, even in this formed against them shall prosper. They are taught that there is nothing in heaven or earth that is able to separate them from the love of God which is in Christ, Jesus. They have been fully persuaded that they have the victory in Him. And they are given the hope that they shall not die, but shall live. They are given a hope of eternal life, which shall not be disappointed.

Even though men may cast death into the pot, God's people shall not come to harm. Because the meal, or the Bread of Life, Jesus, has been given to soak up the poison, to take unto Himself the curse, and to take away that curse. And by doing so, He has forever preserved them that He loved with an everlasting love. In hope of eternal life,

LINCOLN REARED AS A HARDSHELL BAPTIST

Rolling back the midsts of a cen tury and offering the deerskir bound records of Little Pigeon Baptis Church, near Lincoln City, Ind., as the missing link of Abraham Lincoln's reli gion, Thomas B. McGregor, assistan attorney general of the state of Kentucky has given to an appreciative Americ substantial evidence that Abraham Lin coln was reared in the simple faith of the "Hardshell" Baptist Church. There is no record of Abraham Lincoln's affiliatio with any church denomonation, but Mr McGregor's story of Thomas Lincoln moderator and pillar of the little Baptis church, proves conclusively, Mr McGregor says, that the Lincoln famil were Baptists. "The parents of Abrahan Lincoln deserve a fairer estimate tha has been allotted them by most of the biographers of Lincoln," said Mr McGregor, "and the story, as told by the records that are still to be found in the archives of Little Pigeon Church, nea Lincoln, City, Spencer Co., Ind., of the devotion paid by the parents of Lincol to him who guided the lad of Pigeo Creek in the hour of the nation's travai goes far to give them their true estimate In fact, they were well to do pioneers o their day, of sturdy ancestral stock

ELDER F. L. OAKLEY VERY DEAR FRIEND

You asked me, the 3rd Sunday in July to tell you my experience, but I felt so much like I had nothing to tell, and felt so cold every way, I thought I would not fool any more of God's people, for. I felt like I had deceived myself and others too, and would keep my little hope to myself. For it is bad enough for one to be deceived, much more so to deceive others who feels so dear to him.

With the help of God, I'll try, in a brief way to tell you what I hope the Lord has done for me. At the age of ten or eleven years I began to have serious impressions about my soul's future destiny. My father called us around the· family altar, and told us we had a sister who had seen her lost and ruined condition, and she felt she was going to hell. I began to think of my soul's welfare that night. I thought if I should die my soul would be lost. Oh! such thoughts as I had about going to hell to-burn forever and ever. I said to myself, "I'll try to live better, I'll do all the good I can." So I commenced to try to pray to God to make me a better boy, to live more up to my duty, and to keep me from sinning, etc. And many times when I was in the field at work I would try to ask God to have mercy on me. I went on in this way several years. But I couldn't see, as I was getting worse and worse every day. So. I was too young anyway, and I would wait till I got grown, then I would get religion. I thought I would go on and have as much pleasure as I wished, while I was young.

When I got grown it would be time enough to think on such·things. I commenced to go to dances and play cards for fun, (I didn't bet) till I commenced going to school at Gilliam's Academy.

My conscience would whip me for it, but I was determined to conquer. So I kept on till the Lord, as I believe, commenced a work in me. I remember the time so well. I was in the parlor at Mrs. Gilliam's, with a crowd of young folks, joking and and making merriment, when in a moment, I was seized with the worst trouble I ever had. I immediately went down in Mr. Gilliam's room and thought I would read the LANDMARK some to drown my troubles. That was my custom when I got lonesome and felt bad. But I soon found I couldn't do that. I went to my room and that didn't do any good. O! I had so much trouble I didn't know what to do. I felt like I didn't have a friend on earth. My best friends seemed to be enemies to me. They seemed to make light of my ways and actions. I wanted to be alone for I couldn't enjoy any one's company. Right here I want to use a little scripture that suited my case, and I believe suits every one when they are under conviction, whether I was in that condition or not. "She weepeth sore in the night, and her tears are on her cheeks. Among all her lovers she hath none to comfort her. All her friends have dealt treacherously with her. They are become her enemies." Lam. 1: 2. That explains how I felt. Among all my lovers I had none to comfort, and all my friends seemed treacherous, and seemed to be my enemies. A person cannot be comforted while in this condition. Though one may tell them it is conviction (which ought to comfort), they will not believe it. They feel they must die and hell will be fheir potion, and justly so. I am digressing. I thought I was going to die and that very soon, and the worst of it all was I felt like I was going to hell; but I knew it would be just. For I felt to be the worst, the vilest of sinners. I lost my appetite. I couldn't sleep but very little, and it was impossible for me to study. Many, many times have I stole out of the schoolroom to go off about one mile on a high hill, unmolested by any one, and there I would weep and try to ask God to have mercy on me a sinner. Many times when I would get to my secret place-I couldn't pray to save my life. Some worldly thing would set on my mind in spite of me. O, such feelings as I had, no one knows anything about it but the ones that have passed over. This was in the winter and spring of '91, I remained in this condition two or three months. It gradually wore away and I don't know when my troubles left me. That is one reason, Mr. Oakley, I in so slow to tell people the reason of my hope. For I hear others say they felt the happiest when their burden left, and if they had ten thousand tongues they couldn' t praise God enough. I seem to be different from anyone else. I commenced making promises and as often as I made then I would break them. I tried to live better, but I finally concluded I was mistaken about it·all, and I would go on in my old paths again. I thought if that had been conviction I would have known it.

And, Mr. Onkley, you said yesterday in your sermon made me think how I felt. You said you had felt this year like you wanted to put an end to your existence. When I was in my deepest troubles I felt like I wanted to do the same. But back to my subject. I soon found myself going to parties again, and doing other things that I had done. But my conscience would whip me every time, still I thought I will have my way, and I kept on, and while I was on the floor dancing I was taken sick, oh, so sick I had to leave. I promised the Lord that night if He would spare me and let me get well I would not dance any more. Next morning I was well, but I felt so mean. I am not certain, but I believe I went to one more party after that, but God has taken all such desires from me now. I have no desire whatever to participate in any more such sports.

Last 3rd Sunday in May a year ago I was made to feel the happiest I had ever been in my life. It was while Mr. Burch was preaching. It seemed he touched on all the points that I felt so justly accused. I felt like God had shown himself to me the second time.

I love the Primitive Baptists. so much, and I want to be with them, but I know I am too vile and sinful to offer myself. I have been groping my way about ever since. Sometimes I think I have a hope, and then I think I am mistaken about it all. If I wouldn't be so easy to get mad, and would be better every way then I might have some reason to hope. I think I have prayed, or tried so, much if I was deceived to undeceive me. For if I am wrong in everything else I want to be right on that. I could tell you many other things but guess I have told you more now than I ought; I feel like if I just could be good enough to live with the Baptists I would be the happiest man on earth. My will is to be right if I miss it. But when I would do good evil is always present. There is no good thing that dwells in the flesh, and where no good dwells, how can we expect to reap any good. When it goes well with you think of me. But that is the time we don't think of any one but self. If I had asked you to remember me when you get in trouble, you would be more apt to do it. Joseph told the Butler that, but he didn't do it. He didn't think of him till the king had a dream that no one could interpret. Then the Butler said, I do this day remember my faults.

I have written you only a part of what I have passed through. Have you, please tell me, had any such trials as these. If so, it will be a comfort to me to know it for I believe you are a christian. I have had impressions to join the church for sometime, but unworthiness keeps me back, I have felt it was a duty, but I have not performed I it, and I believe sickness has been sent on me to make me willing.

I had a lot of sickness in the spring, and I thought to myself "If I would join the church I would get well." I tried in my feeble way to ask God to give me back my health and if I felt impressed to join the church, I would try to do so by next meeting. Immediately I got better, and I felt so happy I praised the Lord, and I was willing then to join, but when I got to the church on Saturday after, somehow I could not go up. I must desist. Sometime, if it's the Lord's will, I'll tell you more about my impressions. Oh! I feet so bad to-day I wish I could tell you all.

Elder T. A. STANFIELD.
Lenox Castle, N. C.

Joseph Hart, penning poetry on pride in his skilful and descriptive way, says:

"Against its influence pray,
It mingles with the prayer;
Against it preach, it prompts the speech;
Be silent, still 'tis there.

"In every outward act,
In every thought within,
The heart it draws to seek applause,
And mixes all with sin.

"Thou meek and lowly Lamb,
This haughty tyrant kill,
That wounded Thee,
though Thou wast free,
And grieves Thy Spirit still.

"Our condescending God,
(To whom else shall we go?)
Remove our pride, whate'er betide,
And lay and keep us low.

"Thy garden is the place
Where pride cannot intrude;
For should it dare to enter there,
'Twould soon be drowned in blood."

May the Lord so mercifully bring us down to His dear feet that we may be favoured to know that all our unthankfulness, pride and sin is washed away in the blood of the Lord Jesus.

EXPERIENCE AND CALL TO THE MINISTRY OF THE LATE ELDER ANDREW N. HALL

Elder P. D. Gold, Dear Brother :

I have concluded, after passing through a great many troubles, tribulations, trials and afflictions, to send you some of my experience and impressions to preach in order that, when I am gone, my family, brethren, sisters, friends, and my foes, may know some of the dealings of my blessed Redeemer with me while here in the state of mortality.

I have had two experiences in my past life, one in the flesh, the other, I hope and trust, in the Spirit of God; one of the law, the other of the Gospel of the Son of God.

I was born of the flesh May 8th, 1816. I was the fourth child that my mother and father raised.My father's name was Durham Hall, and my mother's maiden name was Nancy Brown. Both of them were born and raised in Wake County, North Carolina, and both were Primitive Baptists. My father was a preacher for many years, and was absent from home a great deal of the time. I was raised to work on the farm in the week, and sporting in various ways on the Sabbath day was a habit that I looked forward to at the end of the week. I rolled sin as a sweet morsel under my tongue, believing I could get religion at my own time and desire. Whenever I would do my part, I thought, God would do His, and, thereby I could become a christian according to my own volition and free will. The choice was mine and it was all up to me, when I was ready.

About the time I was 15 or 16 years old, there came a preacher to my father's and he preached there in the neighborhood several weeks. He told the people about the punishment of the damned in hell and how we could all get religion and not go to that bad place that he talked so much about. I commenced the work, as I thought I would fast and pray, but did not know what a great sinner I was, for I had never truly been made to see myself and and the sin that lay in my flesh.

I went on for one week, trying hard to get religion. I thought I was getting on very well. I went to preaching on Sunday, took my seat near the preacher, and paid strict attention. After preaching I got in company with my playmates, and left off seeking religion. I thought when I was grown and settled, I would then seek religion. I would put this off for the time being.

I went on in this way until I was about 22 years old. About that time there came a camp meeting in the neighborhood which caused a great excitement among the people. I attended the meeting. There were a great many mourners, some singing, some praying, some shouting, and some talking to the mourners. All of this caused me to feel very solemn indeed. I took my seat some distance from the straw-pen altar. One of the preachers came to me. He told me my father was going to Heaven, but I would go to hell if I did not repent. He told me to go into the altar and get religion. I went. There he talked to me a great deal.

He said if I did not repent, I would certainly go down to hell. That aroused my feelings so much that I cried freely. I remained there until intermission. Then, they all went out to dinner, but I went to the woods to pray. I remained there (in the woods) until the evening sermon came on. The preacher cried out to the hearers, "Come into the altar and get religion." So I went again, I could cry freely. I remained there until sun-down. Then, there seemed to be a good feeling going over me, and I could not cry any more. I did not know whether that was religion or not. One of the preachers came to me, asked me several questions, but I gave him no answer at first. He told me he was my friend, and I ought to answer his questions. He asked me if I felt as bad as I had. I told him I did not. He told me to get up, that I had religion. I got up and it was soon reported in the congregation that Andrew Hall had professed religion. They drew down my name as one they had saved and as one of their converts. I remained there all night with them.

The next morning I went home and stayed two days, but I could not feel as I thought a christian felt; so I went back to the meeting again. About the first man I met after my arrival on the grounds was the preacher who told me I had religion. When I met him I burst into tears, I told him I had no religion. He told me that all doubted their religion at first. My reply to him was that I did not think I ever had any. He told me to back to the altar again and start all over as a mourner, that I would eventually get it.

Now it was reported all over the campground that I had come back, doubting my religion. Several then came around me, instructing me how and what to do. They said when they commenced singing, I must join them, and if anyone got happy, I must take hold of them, and that would cause me to feel happy. I was willing to receive their instructions, as I believed at the time that all preachers knew everything about the scriptures and what it took to constitute a christian.

Several months after all of this took place, I offered to the Baptist Church at Eno, Orange (now 1889 Durham) County. When I related my experience, they did not ask me any questions, but received me into fellowship. I was baptized the next Sunday, which was the third Sunday in October, 1838. I remained very well satisfied the most of my time until the next June, following.

One day, while thinking of my condition and how happy I knew I would be when I died, something seemed to say within me in an inward Voice, "No flesh can be justified that occupies the ground you do." There instantaneously was a touch in my heart which I had never felt before, for it was my first time I truly felt condemned before the Lord. It was so much like the poor publican, that I could not even look up toward Heaven.

I went on from Wednesday until Sunday, feeling more wretched and guilty before the Lord. I went to meeting on Sunday, but felt like I was such a sinner before the Lord that I wanted to go off to myself alone to try to pray. When the people went into the church (Meeting) house, I went down the road, then turned aside through the field in order to get out of their sight that I might pray to the Lord to have mercy on me a poor, lost, ruined, and hell deserving sinner.

When I finally stopped, I cannot tell whether I knelt or fell down, there was A POWER came over me that I had no more strength to resist than the shining of the sun, and there was a light which seemed to shine from heaven. In that light I saw the Lord. He seemed to be 25 or 30 feet from the earth. And in the same light I saw the judgement seat. I saw the dead stand before the Lord. His power seemed to draw a line of discrimination between the righteous and the wicked. and I saw but few on the right hand, only a remnant according to the election of Grace. But on His left hand I saw a large multitude with myself. I saw a large Book opened, and in that Book I saw my sins recorded. And the Lord seemed to look down on me in wrath and indignation for my sins. I tried to hide my face from His presence, but could not. I saw that I was destitute of the wedding garment, that Robe of His Righteousness. I saw that I had never had any religion whatsoever, but had been a poor deceived, destitute soul, and all that I had ever done in a religious way was absolutely nothing but sin and abomination in His sight. I thought that I heard the King say, "Bind him hand and foot and cast him into outer darkness, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."I verily thought that I was bound hand and foot, and I saw it just and right in the Lord to send me to eternal hell.

About the time I thought He was going to cast me down to Satan to be tormented forever,! said,"Lord,it is just!" After I saw and felt these things, the Lord seemed to withdraw Himself from me, and I got up and stood on my feet. I was dismayed with great astonishment for these things that I had seen and felt. I knew that I was in deep trouble.

All of this took place on the second Sunday in June, in the year 1839. I was about one mile from home, and when I got so I could walk, I went there, for I did not want to see anyone. I went up into the grainery loft of the barn and remained there until nearly night, thinking about these things I had seen and felt that day, also while trying to read the scriptures to see if there was any way for me to escape the wrath to come. I tried to beg the dear Lord to spare me until I could repent for I was such a sinner I was afraid He would kill me and send me to hell.

I went on in this way trying to repent. One night I thought I should die before day. I felt that all my days had been spent in sinning before God. I had professed religion and thought I was a christian. I saw that I was only a poor beguiled soul that had suffered myself to be deceived by such false teachers and leaders, that I had not taken the warning which the Lord had given me, when He said, "Take heed that no man deceive you." (Matthew 24:4) And I was without excuse.

And O, dear reader, my tongue can never express, nor pen describe the awful feelings and views I had of myself. It seemed that I felt the very pains of hell get hold of me and I was just on the brink of endless woe; that I felt those pains of hell in my breast. I expected to soon be with the rich man in hell. I was so much distressed that I could not rest anywhere. I walked the yard and even wished that I was a dog for I knew he had no soul to be lost or saved, and I did.

After some time in this way, I went in the house and felt some better. I lay down and went to sleep. I went on trying hard to keep the law. I would read the conditional promises in the old covenant and I tried diligently to keep them for I could see no other way by which I could be saved.

Thus, I went on doing all I could to keep the whole law, trying to do good and be good, as I thought, but failed in every point. I saw that the law is perfect, just and holy, and that it required perfect obedience in me, while I myself was all sin defiled in every part. My whole head was sick, my whole heart faint, from the crown of my head to the sole of my foot, even unto my head there was no soundness, and I was full of wounds, bruises and peutrifying sores. I saw that I was altogether an unclean thing and that all my righteousness was as filthy rags. I had read in the Scriptures these words, but we all are as an unclean thing, and all our righteousness are as filthy rags.(Isaiah 64:6.)This troubled me the more.

It seemed to me that I was under the very power and dominion of unbreakable sin and that it was a sin for me to even eat or drink. All that I said, thought, or did in every way was sin. I was afraid that I had commited the unpardonable sin. I would try to find out what it was, but could not. I wanted to be convicted, and I did not take that for conviction, but thought it was the foreboding of what I must suffer after death. And O, the thought of being banished from God's peaceful presence and from His glorious power eternally forever. All of it seemed to me that it was more than I could bear. I thought I was like Cain, that my portion was more than I could bear. Sometimes I could not work, but run into the woods, cry and pray, roll and tumble there upon the ground, wringing my hands and wishing I had never been born.

Sometimes I would see the little birds in the trees and wished I was one of them. I thought I was one of the most miserable beings on God's earth. I saw I was a sinner by nature, as well as by practice; that my depraved nature constituted wrath fitted for destruction. Sometimes I was afraid that God would open the earth, as He did for Korab and his company, when He swallowed all of them in a pit-(read Numbers 16:30) I saw that every imagination of my heart was evil. Oh! how I hated and abhorred my poor deceitful heart. Sometimes it would seem to be as hard as a rock, and again I could shed tears freely. I cried to the Lord to have mercy on me a poor, condemned hell-deserving sinner. I saw that the Ethiopian could as easily change his skin and the leopard his spots, as I could change my condition before God. I saw that unless the Lord Jesus saved me, I should be gone forever. I saw that there was salvation in none other; that there was none other name under Heaven given among men, whereby I must be saved. "I would cry and pray to Him to have mercy on poor me. But it seemed to me that He would not hear me. One day while trying to pray to Him to have mercy on me, I thought I heard Him say, "Depart from Me, Ye cursed, into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels". (Matthews 25:41). I thought I heard all the saints say "AMEN" to my sure damnation which I felt to be just and true.

Dear Brethren, my mortal tongue can never express my feelings at that time. While lying there prostrate on the earth, I verily thought that my damnation was sealed. I expected in a few moments to be in eternal hell to mingle my groans with the damned forever. But, there was a resolution in my heart to pray as long as I had breath, and thus I went on completely in despair and no hope. Some people who saw me at the time said I was deranged and going crazy and no doubt, I appeared so to them at the time for I was so much distressed that I did not know where to go nor what to do. Sometimes, I was tempted to destroy myself, but I feared to do this for I knew if I did, that hell would be my eternal portion. And O! how afraid I was of that place! I was so afraid at that time that God would suffer the devil to take me off this earth alive for I believed and knew of a certainty that I was the greatest sinner upon the face of this earth. I clearly saw the justice of God in my just damnation. His justice did shine as bright as a star. I saw no way by which I could escape the punishment due my sins.

One day, while I was lying face downward upon the earth, weeping and mourning over my condition, these words of strengthening scripture entered my mind and soul. "THEREFORE, BEING JUSTIFIED BY FAITH,WE HAVE PEACE WITH GOD THROUGH OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST."(Romans 5 :1.) My heavy burden of sin was instantaneously all gone. I rosed from the ground and felt calm and serene. It seemed that I viewed Christ on the cross, and through His mediation and intercession, I had peace with God. I felt like I was justified from all things, which the law of Moses could not do for me. Yet, I did not take this for religion at that time. I did not feel happy enough to shout. I only felt calm and easy-only having a hope for a hope, believing the Lord would bless me.

All these things took place on Wednesday before the 3rd Sunday in July, in the year of 184O, about 12:OO.That night I went to sleep. The next morning everything everywhere seemed to have a different aspect from what it did before I lost my burden of guilt. Then, I went on for several days, not knowing where I was, nor what I was. I could not feel I was a christian because I had such foolish and vain thoughts. I believed that a christian was perfect in both soul and body. I said to myself that I was not perfect in the flesh. I wanted my burden back again, but could not get it. And one day, being in so much trouble on account of myself, I went to the woods to try for my burden again. But, while prostrated on the ground, the Lord revealed His love to me again. I saw then and there that IT IS THE SOUL OF MAN THAT IS BORN AGAIN OF THE SPIRIT OF GOD and not the flesh. (At the new birth I was shown that it is the total corruption of the flesh that is revealed and subdued. I then believed it was religion).

So I went for sometime very well satisfied. But one day I was tempted to curse the cross of Christ, and the temptation had come with such power in my heart it seemed it would overpower me, and that I would be bound to curse His cross in spite of everything that I could do. And I would not have been guilty of such a thing for all this world. I would shut my mouth and put my hand over it to keep from cursing it. It seemed to me it was more than I could bear, for it seemed like my very heart would burst, for I did not believe that anyone could be a child of God and have such a temptation. This temptation continued to last for two-or three days. I thought of Christ's temptation when His father let the devil tempt Him three times in the wilderness, after He had fasted those 40 days.

One day I was in so much trouble and distress I had to leave my work and go off to myself to try to pray to the Lord to have mercy on me a poor tempted soul and while I was prostrated on the earth with my whole heart poured out in prayer to God to have mercy on me, it seemed I heard a still, small Voice say, "You have eternal life abiding in You". That banished all that temptation from my heart, and for the first time I believe I felt the love of God shed abroad in my heart by the Holy Ghost. I had read in the scripture prior to this time, "the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us". (Romans 5 :5) I believed I realized the truth of the scripture where it said Jesus was tempted in all points as we are, yet without sin, and He is able to succor them that are tempted.(See Hebrews 4:15 and 2:18.) I felt like the Lord had loved me with an everlasting love,(See Jeremiah 31:3.) For a short time I felt as clean of sin and temptation as if I had never been troubled with such things. I thought that all of my doubts and fears were gone; for I felt that perfect Love casteth out fear. I loved my Saviour God because He first loved me. I was then and there,if not deceived, for the first time, felt to be established in my faith and hope in Christ seeing and believing from the scriptures and my own experience that there are so many people deceived today in religion by such false teachers and preachers as I had been.

And for the love that I had been given for Christ and for the benefit of souls there was constrained upon me irresistably that I must attempt or try to preach the gospel to the people(this was no choice of my own)and warn them against these false teachers. When God convinced Saul of Tarsus that he was wrong, He convinced him that the Jew's religion was wrong; for that was the kind of religion he had at the time. He said, "I profited in the Jew's religion above many my equals in mine own nation, being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my fathers. I persecuted the church of God and wasted it".

Just so when God convinced me that I had no religion that could save at my first profession, He also convinced and showed me that the Arminian system of works was completely wrong. For I was just as well convinced of my own sin for professing that kind of religion as any other sin that I had been guilty of. And, if it could be the Lord's will, I hoped He would bless me to show others of their error as He did me, realizing there is an appointed time to be shown the truth, using me only as an instrument in His hand to them, according to His purpose, for I cannot of myself. It is the Spirit of the Lord alone that convicts, reveals and saves His people from their sins.(John 26.) So I was led to try to talk to the people.

But I was young, had but little education and with all I stammered. I would go to meeting and hear other gifted men preach, and I thought they were fulfilling their call, but the Lord required something at my hands, and His Word would come in my hear with such light and power when I would go to the woods and preach to the trees. I kept my leading of mind as long as I could to myself. If I ever was led to preach the gospel to believers, I was also compelled to warn the wicked for the Lord said to Ezekiel, "For they are impudent children and stiff hearted. I do send thee unto them. And they, whether they will hear or whether they will forbear, for they are a rebellious House etc.(Ezekiel 2:4,5.)

The first person to whom I revealed the weight of my burden was Brother George Latta, a member of the same church with me, who had been having meetings in the homes in the neighborhood during the week. I asked him if he would make an appointment at our church on the fifth day of January,1843, I would take a part with him in the meeting. He made the appointment for me, and when I got there, the most of the members of the church had come. I tried to talk to them the best I could, but made a bad out. As soon as I closed my remarks, Brother George Coggin, a member of the same church with me, to wit: Mt. Lebanon, arose from his seat and endorsed what I had said. He recommended it to the brethren, and said that he also had been under the burden(or weight)of speaking for eight years previous to the time, had fought it with all his might and could withstand it no longer. Then and there the both of us agreed to have an appointment the next Sunday if the Lord was willing.

So we both went out together, and he was an able minister of the New Testament. At my first attempt I could not even express a few of the things, I trust, the dear Lord had revealed or shown me, Sometimes I would have fair liberty, a little maybe, when I would feel some better. So the brethren at Camp Creek Church requested Brother Coggin and myself to give them an appointment at their church.

We went together on our appointment and I got my text a week before the appointment came on. "The Lord is good, a stronghold in the day of trouble; and he knoweth them that trust in Him". (Nahum 1:7.) I thought I had it just right so I could deliver it without any trouble; so we met on Sunday as prearranged. I went first and when I read my text, I could not see anything whatsoever in it. All I had studied up was completely gone from me and I was left there in complete darkness, so I sat down. Brother Coggin arose and was blessed to preach an excellent sermon. When he dismissed the congregation, I felt so ashamed and mean I immediately left the place as soon as I could get away without telling anyone farewell.

This taught me never again to memorize another sermon. I went home and remained in that mind for a few weeks. I had said to myself that I would never try another sermon or make the attempt. Then my leadings of mind returned on me with such power and weight, and I felt the Lord required more of me than I was able to perform, for I stammered so badly that I could not even express what little, I hope He had revealed to me. And I felt that some of the people would say, that fool Hall had better quit trying to preach for somebody else was called, but he answered. He can't preach and never will and he knows it. Now such was my trial.

Now all these things were against me, and I was in such great trouble,not knowing what to do.I thought the Lord ought to exempt me from this burden or weight, for I had not made my mouth nor my tongue. I could not help from stammering. I felt of myself that had no wisdom nor ability to preach the gospel of the Son of God.So I went out one night to try to pray to the Lord and beg him to excuse me and while I was on my knees, this scripture came to me like a still small Voice,"WITH STAMMERING LIPS AND ANOTHER TONGUE WILL HE SPEAK TO HIS PEOPLE TO WHOM HE SAID, THIS IS THE REST WHERE WITH YE MAY CAUSE THE WEARY TO REST AND THIS IS THE REFRESHING". I did not know at the time where this scripture was, but found it later as recorded in Isaiah, 28:11. Then and there I was brought to believe that if I would go on and do the best I could that the Lord would ultimately enable me to speak so that the dear people could understand what I meant. So, I went on trying to preach Christ and the resurrection for at least two years or more. Sometimes, I was given to enjoy myself very well, but at other times,was very much cast down.

In the year of 1845 I married and went in debt for land.I then thought I would preach on Sundays and labor and work in the week.So I went on in that way for some four years or more, and I became very worldly minded.I was brought to believe that I was not doing right.I was in debt and a poor man with a family to support.I was now in a great strait,as I thought, not knowing what to do,Yet,a feeling came over me in this way, "Woe is unto me,if I preach not the gospel!"(1st Corinthians 9:16.)

I was in so much trouble that my family nor anything I had in my possession was any satisfaction to me. Thus I went on from day to day until I was made willing to forsake all that I had in my feelings for the sake of Christ, His blessed Gospel and His Sacred Cause. And one night while I was on my knees in secret prayer, I promised the dear Lord I would try to preach more. I told my dear wife that I would have to travel and preach more than I had been doing and she said to me, "If you do, what will become of me and the children?" I said to her, "I am led with the mind to try and preach more, and if my leadings of mind are from the Lord, and I am blessed to follow them, as that weight was upon me, that she and the children would have sufficient food and raiment." And I told her, "that if the time should ever come when they should not have it, I would then stay home and quit preaching". That has been around 40 years ago, and we have been blessed with sufficient food and raiment to the present time. So, I followed my leadings and impressions of mind in trying to preach.

I was soon called to the care of four churches, and I attempted to preach on the account of death a great deal. I was made satisfied to attend my churches and conduct funerals. But in the date of 1859, I dreamed that I was preaching and thought I was very happy. And that I was preaching the language of the Heavenly Host, praising God and saying, "Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good will toward men." (Luke 12:14.) And I awake, and just as I had dreamed, so I was, for I was so happy and I thought I could not remain in the state of mortality long-for I was so happy that I became cold and speechless for a short time. I thought that some of the old saints that I believed their souls had been carried on to Heaven. And I felt like I would soon be with them. For it seemed to me that I was as nearly gone from this world as a man could be, not to go. But, after a short time, I revived again and went on praising the Lord; for it seemed to me that all the powers of my soul were blessing and praising the Lord. "Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, Bless His Holy Name".(Psalms 103:1)

And I went on after this, having sinking and reviving feelings from ten o'clock at night until about 3 o'clock the following morning. My wife sent for the doctor and neighbors to come for she thought I was going to die. They came and examined me and said there was nothing the matter with my system. He never gave me anything. I told him I was in no pain, but I felt cold. I never slept any more that night.

The next day I felt like I was going to die and be saved. When I was under conviction of sin,I felt like I should die and be lost, but now I felt like I should die and be saved. I sent out for two of my neighbors to come and make my will. They came and wrote my will. I gave my wife instructions how to have me buried for I believed that I should soon depart from this world. Although I was in no pain, I believe that I felt the powers of the world to come. I nearly lost my appetite for earthly food. I remained at home for one week. I then left home to fill some appointments with Elder John Stadler. We met at the Arbor Church in Caswell County, North Carolina, and after I was through trying to preach, Elder Stadler and the congregation sang a good hymn. It overpowered me for some short time. I was not able to stand on my feet. He got some camphor and rubbed my head with it. I revived and went home with him. He lived nearby. After we laid down J. J. Scoggin being in bed with me, that same cold feeling returned to me. He got up, went out and informed Elder Stadler of my condition. He came in and examined me and said I was as cold as clay. I told Elder Stadler that if I died, I wanted him to send me home to my family. I remained in that condition until late that night. Then I got warm, but never slept any more that night.

Next morning Elder Stadler came in and advised me to return home. I told him I did not feel able to go on with him to our appointments for I felt so feeble. I would try to return home to my family. I was about 35 miles from my home. So, I went on to Prospect Hill, and from there I went on down to Brother John Fuller's. And as I was on the way,It seemed to me that the shortness of time and the length of eternity, the worth of souls, and the fulness of the power of Christ to save His people from their sins, were all presented to my understanding at the same time. My tongue can never express, nor my pen describe my views and feelings concerning these things. For they were as plain to my view as the sun that shines on the ground, I was impressed and led to travel and preach more than I had ever done, and truly I felt I was full of power by the Spirit of the Lord.("I am full of power by the Spirit of the Lord, and of judgement, and of might, to declare unto Jacob his transgression, and to Israel his sin," Micah 3:8, so much so that I was ready to preach at anytime. And the impediment (stammering) of my tongue was partially taken away from me. "The heart also of the rash shall understand knowledge and the tongue of THE STAMMERER shall be ready to speak plainly."(Isaiah 32:4) I saw this as a miracle from God.

I could not hold my peace day nor night, when I had the opportunity of speaking to his people. The Lord has said "I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night: ye that make mention of the Lord, keep not silence". (Isaiah 62:6.) And I believe I was given to realize the truth of that scripture in my own case, for it seemed to me that what I saw and felt was enough to make the very stones cry out. Jesus said, "I tell you that if these should hold their peace, THE STONES would immediately cry out". (Luke 19:40) For I saw that the Church of Christ was complete in Him without spot, wrinkle or any such thing.(See Ephesians 5)

This revelation that I had of Christ and His fulness in the complete Salvation of His people stayed with me for several months. And I verily thought that preaching would never be any more cross to me, as it had been. I had the care of four Churches at this time, and there was a refreshing time with some of these churches. I was blest to baptize 25 candidates at one church within 12 months. But I was no longer satisfied to confine myself to a few churches, for when I saw the complete victory of God through His Son the Lord Jesus Christ over all His enemies, including sin, death, hell, the grave and Satan, my very spirit was stirred within me. And I felt like I wanted to proclaim it to the ends of the earth.

So I went on trying to preach the most of the time until my throat became ulcerated. The doctors said I had the clergyman's sore throat. I also was plagued with neuralgia very much and since that time I have not been able to travel and preach as I did before. One of the doctors advised me to stop preaching. I told him there was no discharge in this war until death, and that I wanted to die preaching Christ the Saviour of His people, and His resurrection from the dead. Dear brethren, I have been trying to preach the doctrine of Salvation by the Grace and Mercy of God about 40 years, and I am now 72 years of age. And when I die, I hope to be saved by the free unmerited Grace of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, from first to last.

SERVING CHURCHES
Elder D. V. Spangler

While serving churches on the eastern shore of Maryland I was brought in contact with a man by the name of Elmer Hastings, who attended my services, often. He manifested a great interest in the doctrine and fellowship of the church. He had a winter home in Florida, and would often travel by train from Florida to Wilmington, Delaware, from there he would drive his car to wherever our services was for that day, even before going to his home.

After the death of his first wife, Brother Hastings married Miss Olive Miller, who was of the Mennononite Faith.

Soon after this marriage they started attending my services at the churches I served in the area.

I perceived her reaction to the preaching, and it appeared to me that she was struggling against something, and I could not detect what the problem was. To me she appeared to be fighting against accepting the doctrine she was hearing.

As time went on I noted a change in her attitude, and instead of being in conflict with what she was hearing, she was accepting it, and soon she was drinking this doctrine as one who was very thirsty. It was a great blessing to me to watch the hand on the Lord in the matter. And on one occasion to my wife while returning from one of the meetings there that, she was not far from the church. Later on we were visiting in the home of Deacon Harry Ward, deacon of the Snow Hill Church, and during the service Deacon Frank Holland's wife united with the church.

The next night we gathered in the home of Deacon Bill Davis Sr. home for a spiritual gathering, and after the service, while talking with Brother Hastings, they informed me that they did not sleep much the night before, and if God so willed the matter, they expected to offer, the Snow Hill Church, at the regular service, Saturday nite, which they did. How strange are the ways of providence.

VISIT TO NORTHERN VIRGINIA IN 1934

In coming to you, my dear readers, with some record of my experiences with the ministers of the North and especially Elder George Ruston of the Particular Covenanted Baptist Church of Canada, especially do I want to refer to my forty fears of association with Elder George Ruston and his wife. In the year of 1934 I was invited by Elder Lefferts to visit the Virginia Corresponding meeting in Northern Virginia. I had never visited any of the Northern meetings. There I met with Elder George Ruston and many other ministers of the North including Elder Topping, Elder Bellows, Elder Charles Vaughn and Elder Lefferts, together with others.

Vividly in my mind I especially remember my association at this meeting with Elder Ruston. Elder Ruston used the text in Romans 8:31, "What shall we then say to these things. If God be for us who can be against us?" When called upon I used the text, "And the priest that bear the ark of the covenant of the Lord stood firm on dry ground in the midst of Jordan and all Israelites passed over on dry ground until all the people were passed clean over Jordan. I also announced the hymn

"Tis my happiness below
Not to live without the cross;
But the Saviour's power to know:
Sanctifying every loss."

Forty-five years later I visited the church at New Valley where I first visited in 1934, and held services with Elder John D. Wood, the Pastor, and used the same text that I used in 1934 and as far as I know, no service has been held there since. I did refer in this meeting to my association through all the years of Elder Ruston.

At the close of this Virginia Corresponding Meeting, the hymn was announced on Page 26 Hymn 65, composed by Charles Wesley. The hymn was raised, as I remember, by Grace Asten, a sister of Elder George Ruston's wife. The hymn reads as follows:

"Blested be the dear uniting love
That will not let us part.
Our bodies may far off remove
But we are joined in heart.

Joined in one spirit to one Head
We wait His will to know;
That we in His right steps may tread;
And follow Him below.

Oh, may we ever walk in Him
And nothing know beside Nothing desire, nor ought esteem
But Jesus crucified.

Closer and closer let us cleave
To His beloved embrace;
Expect His fulness to receive
And grace to answer grace."

In my mind today I can see that lovely congregation and the love felt throughout that meetinghouse. How small and insignificant I felt to be among these great ministers and I am thankful until today that I have lived in their fellowship while they lived.

In 1937 I was invited to visit the Particular Covenanted Baptist Church in Canada and accepted the invitation. It was an enjoyable occasion with the house on Sunday overflowing with people and I believe at that time there was without 60 members of the church there. Elder Ruston informed me that the church did not allow the use of the Old School Baptist Hymnal in their meetings but preferred a hymnal composed of paraphrases and the Psalms in meter form, Which I have learned from a Presbyterian minister is a product of the Presbyterian Church of Scotland, I have been informed I did not object and Elder Ruston informed me that this arrangement was not in harmony with his own feelings. Later I have learned, or heard, this rule had been abolished. That did not affect my love for them because that belonged to their church.

In the early 40's Elder Ruston resigned as an Associate Editor of the "Signs" giving his reasons for his resignation. In the 1950's he returned as an Associate Editor. As far as I know, neither time did he involve his church. He did, as I said, give a reason for his resignation. He returned as an Associate Editor without comment.

I was present in the meeting of the Particular Covenanted Baptist Church in Canada when Elder Alec McColl was received into the fellowship of the church. I was requested to return to Canada about a year after for his ordination.

In 1949 Elder Dodson incorported the "Signs of the Times" as a non-profit corporation and made a gift of it to the Old School Baptist. He also left in his will $2,000 and I have heard the New York Church furnished half of this money. I cannot vouch for this report.

PSALM 57:1-3.

Be merciful unto me, O God, be merciful unto to me: for my soul trustest in thee: Yea, in the shadow of thy wings will I make my refuge, until these calamities be overpast.

I will cry unto God most high; unto God that performeth all things for me.

He shall send from heaven, and save me from the reproach of him that would swallow me up. Selah. God shall send forth his mercy and truth.

OBITUARIES

BROTHER BERNARD COX

Bernard James Cox entered into his rest on June 21, 2018, at the age of 92. He was baptized in 1991 as a member of Old Union Church by his Pastor, Elder Hale Terry. He was a special member of the church, his love and care for the welfare and improvements of our meeting house were remarkable. He always took much pride and love for the upgrading of our facilities and the grounds of our church. Brother Bernard was so faithful to attend church meetings even though he struggled to get there, he missed very few meetings. He manifested a great love for the members of his church and others that attended. His greatest love was for his Lord and Saviour. The doctrine of Predestination and Grace was his meat and drink. He loved to sing and was blessed to hear good singing at the meetings. Brother Bernard was married to Sister Bessie Mae (Hollandsworth) Cox for 69 years. Unto this Union was born four children, Brenda Johnson, Sandra Rorrer, Donald Cox and Wayne Cox. They were blessed with 14 grandchildren, 3 step-grandchildren, 39 great-grand children and 1 great-great grandchild. Brother Bernard served his country faithfully in the Army during WWII and was wounded in combat. His funeral was conducted at Valley View Primitive Baptist Church on June 23, 2018, by Elder Larry Hollandsworth and Elder Raymond Goad. He was laid to rest in the Cox Family Cemetery to await the second coming of our Lord. May God reconcile us all to His holy will.

HYMN

Come, thou Almighty King,
Help us thy name to sing,
  Help us to praise:
Father all-glorious,
O'er all victorious,
Come, and reign over us,
  Ancient of Days!

Jesus, our Lord, arise,
Scatter our enemies,
  And make them fall!
Let thy almighty aid
Our sure defense be made,
Our souls on thee be stayed:
  Lord, hear our call!

Come, thou incarnate Word,
Gird on thy mighty sword;
  Our prayers attend:
Come, and thy people bless,
And give thy word success;
Spirit of holiness,
  On us descend!

Come, holy Comforter!
Thy sacred witness bear,
  In this glad hour:
Thou, who almighty art,
Now rule in every heart,
And ne'er from us depart,
  Spirit of power!

C. Wesley

Matthew 1:21 "And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shall call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins."

Elder Cleo D. Robertson

The name of this child was not left to Mary, Joseph or any other person. The angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream and told him that thou shall call his name Jesus. Jesus means Savior. His name also includes the word "US" which sets forth that His people are in His name and that they are in Him. The Apostle Paul writes in Ephesians 1: 3-6, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed US with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ; According as he hath chosen US in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love; Having predestinated US unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made US accepted in the beloved." All of the elect or God are included in the US. These were already His and He had loved them and chosen them in Him before He created the world. But "by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." So He came into this low ground of sin and sorrow to save His US from their sins. To do so means that He took upon Himself a body of flesh as we have except without sin. He was perfect and holy. He came under the same law as His US were under in order to fulfill and satisfy the law of sin and death for US. Therefore, "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus has made you (US) free from the law of sin and death. Now there is no condemnation to them (US) which are in Christ Jesus who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." He satisfied and cancelled the judgement of guilty that was against the US by His own suffering, death and shedding of His blood. He bore the sins of US in His own body on the tree and purchased and redeemed the US by His blood. As Isaiah prophesied that "unto US a child is born, unto US a son is given." Isaiah uses the present tense because it was sure and certain to take place and it covered each one of the US from the beginning of time to the end of time.

The US is the spiritual church of Christ which is His body and includes the elect of Jews and gentiles. Of the Jews He said He called His own sheep by name and leadeth them out - John 10:3. This did not include all natural Jews, but only His elect among them. For the Apostle Paul writes that "he is not a Jew which is one outwardly, but he is a Jew which is one inwardly." Also, "they are not all Israel, which are of Israel." In John 10:16, Christ says, "And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd." These are the gentiles. One fold, one church, one body in Christ, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all. Ephesians 2:11-18, "Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called Uncircumcision by that which is call the Circumcision in the flesh made by hands: that at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world: But now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ. For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; Having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace; And that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby: And came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them that were nigh. For through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father."

So the Gentiles were brought in and there is one fold. Christ said that the Father's will was that of all He had given Him He should lose none. So the promise that Jesus shall save His people from their sins was fulfilled.

May the precious Lord bless you with comfort and peace.

Call to the Ministry and Beliefs of Elder Marvin Brumfield

Told to Elder Jerry & Sherry Farmer, Elder Waymon Chapel, Elder James & Sylvia Howard, Elder Theron & Bobbye Jones, Elder Truman & Geraldine Bradshaw, Jamie & Frances Cooper, Randolph & Peggy Wells, Gene & Libby Howard, Gladston & Jottie Newman, George Hyslip, Rebecca Brumfield, and Bill & Judy Poindexter

On Saturday night during the sitting of the Little Vine Association August 25, 2001

I had a dream 17 years before I made my first attempt. In the first dream I had (or vision or whatever it was). Some of you may not believe in dreams or visions. This was a dream or a vision that I had of my home church. I dreamed that I was called upon and I could see it and I can see it today as plain as it was back many years ago. I was called upon, I got up and I opened the Bible. But I cannot tell you what the scripture was that I turned to. It seemed like I read what I turned to and it was the easiest thing I had ever done. But about three or four months later I had another dream exactly like the first one. Same place. I opened the Bible. I can't tell you where it was. It is just as plain today as it was then. I read something and was shut completely up. I couldn't even have a comment on it. What did it mean? Now I can see (if I am not mistaken) with the experiences I have had - you brethren who stand in the pulpit know - sometimes it feels like it is the easiest thing you have ever done. Sometimes you feel like you have been blessed. I feel like that was the first dream I had. Sometimes you go and you find you don't have a bit of feeling. Completely shut up. Now, Brethren, if that is not showing you something, telling you something, I don't know what it was. I have found it to be that way. I have seen in that thing, that one is just as important as the other. It just don't make me feel as good. But I am thankful to my Lord that I can see this thing and understand it and realize one is just as good as the other.

As I said I went many years. Sometimes it would get much stronger. Sometimes it would get to the place, I couldn't see how I could stand it any longer. Then is would kindly drift away and I would think, "It's gone, maybe you are completely out of it. Maybe you are okay now." Then later on it would come back again a little bit tighter. I would go for a few weeks wondering what is going to happen. What is going to take place? Here I would go again. I would have another series. I would feel like, maybe it is all gone, maybe it is something you just thought of or maybe it is something you made up for yourself. I don't know about you fellows, but during this time I was trying to work. My wife was trying to work. Later on, it seemed like I was going to die anyway. Maybe it would have been better if I had. I started going to doctors in Lynchburg and there at home. I finally ended up down in Duke Hospital with my wife trying to work and coming to see about me. Still, she didn't know what was wrong and I didn't know what was wrong. I just kept on with one thing and another and finally they run all the tests they could run on me and finally they just sent me home. I reckon I was just as bad when I got back as I was when I went from that standpoint, because I don't think the doctors have any medication for one who is called to stand before a portion people that we feel now that they must be the wisest people on earth. They know, I believe you know - you can say you know, they know the truth. The ones that have been brought into this thing by His love. You can say, they know the truth when they hear it. I can say one thing, I believe they are a people that have this new birth or born again, (if you want to use the word, born again). They don't have to go to the Bible to know when they hear the truth. If they hear the unsound, they know it. They don't have to go to the Bible to know these things. Why? Because they have been given something that the world does not have. That is knowledge, truth and a great love. This love will go with you through this world and the world to come.

But let's go back once again. The thing got so tight it seemed like I would knot be able to bear it. One week, along towards the end of the week, I said to my wife, "Let's go down to Elder Prescott's." He has been someone I could lean on but he's gone on now. I said, "Let's go down there and see them." But she still didn't know these things. So we went down there and spent the weekend. We went with them to church and Elder Prescott kind of felt what was going on. He could see it. He couldn't ask me to say anything down there but he asked me to return thanks at the table, so I did and I felt a little easier. So we came on back home Sunday afternoon and I still hadn't said anything to my pastor about it. So I said to my wife, "Let's go over to Elder Goad's." So we went over there and I told them what was upon my mind. So we all cried and talked about it. Elder Goad asked what had took place down there and I told him I had the blessing and he said, "Did you feel relief?" I said I felt a little. Sister Phyllis said, "Well, it is going to be a hard road. Nobody knows how it is unless they walk in these shoes." But these things have to be, whether we like it or whether we don't. These things take place in our lives and there is a purpose in it whether we will be able to understand them or not. His purpose will be fulfilled. So I talked to Elder Tench and he said, "Next weekend we will let you try." So I guess I made a try and I still try. But I told some of them the other night, I have had a good life. The Lord has been good to me although the road has been rough. It has not been easy for the last few years, but it has been the sweetest part. I told my wife, since I have come into the church with those I love, I hope, those that I hope I can live with, those that I hope I can sing with, those that I hope I can talk with, those that I hope I can share my burdens, troubles and tribulations and my good times with. I think about maybe that is the way Ruth felt when she said, "Entreat me not to leave thee. Where you lodge, I want to lodge. Where you are buried, I want to be buried." I hope I can live with you. My greatest desire, Brethren, is (I know I can't do it of myself) that I can be kept in such a way to be kept small enough (you cannot do this if you are not kept) to be as a little child and not to cause any trouble. But I hope, by the Grace of God, to be kept so low that I can always look up to my brethren and not down on them.

We have just had our 50th Anniversary and I gave a little speech before we started. I said when we got married, we didn't have much. We just had a little. I think I had $50 when we got married. I didn't have enough to buy Rebecca a ring. By the Grace of God over these years we have - not myself, we have - accumulated enough to buy her a ring. By the Grace of God I am what I am by the Grace of God. And I hope and pray that I will be kept and led in such a way that I can say with a true heart that I love you. You know we a have a little song:

Love is the sweetest bud that blows.
Its beauty never dies

We love our families but this is a love that reaches beyond this world. You know, I believe this love of God will carry you through these things that are coming. We have to face them. For the last few years - We hate to give our children up; we hate to give our grandchildren up. If you haven't experienced it, you will. And you won't know how it is until you walk in those shoes. But the greatest part, the most precious thing that I can think of, that I can see that this had to be. Losing our grandchild, this had to be. I am glad that the Lord has blessed me to believe that. It had to be exactly like the Lord had foreordained it to be. There was a purpose in it, a reason for it and I told the children, the family, this is the way it had to be. There is a reason and purpose in it and we might not ever see the reason for it or the purpose in it, but if we go back to what we believe, it had to be. And, Brethren, we have got to walk in that path the Lord has foreordained us to walk in whether we like it or whether we don't like it. We still have got to go down it. That path is laid out for every one of us, whether we believe it or not. He has laid our that walk and we have to walk in it.

The only way you are a believer is by the revelation of Jesus Christ and if it is not pleasing to Him to reveal this to you, you will never understand it and you will never see it. Because I have said this just recently, you might read the Bible from lid to lid a dozen times or as many times as you want to read it, and if it not pleasing to God to reveal it to you, it won't mean anything to you.

I have sit here tonight thinking about it, what we belive. Was it pre-determined in the mind and purpose of God for every one of us to be sitting here tonight exactly like this or was it just a haphazard thing. I was thinking about this thing sitting right over there. If we believe we can do even one little thing, just one little thing, we cease to honor Him and call Him a sovereign and almighty and all-wise and all-knowing God. If we believe we can do one thing to inherit the kingdom of God, we see Him as just another man. In the Book of Isaiah, He says, I am God. I am God! No one like me.

It is a wonderful thing.

VOICES OF THE PAST

THE RESURRECTION

Christ in most of His parables
Likened Spiritual to natural things
Did this in such a manner
That His Chosen might know and cling

To the things set forth in His teachings
Such as Faith and Charity and Love
Only they could know of these things
For They're taught by the Spirit from above.

He compares the Resurrections to a lowly little grain.
Except it be put in the earth and die
It cannot rise again.

God's people, like the little grain,
Cannot be raised up 'cept they die
Then they're made perfect like the Savior
And be with Him in the sky.

The good that Christ has instilled in His people
Will be taken with the soul from this clay
When death overtakes this old body -
But they will be re-united some day.

Those that are part of the First Resurrection
The second death shall have no sting
For Christ has borne their burdens
And will gather them under His wing.

I believe that Christ's is the First Resurrection
The second death is to be eternally damned
Both ordained for His glory
Both know and originally planned.

None can know of God's wisdom
Unless the Spirit makes known
For carnal reasoning cannot learn
Nor the natural mind be shown.

But the Holy Spirit visits us
Then how we praise and sing
And give all Honor and Glory
To Jesus Christ, our King.

On that final Judgement morning
He'll come for those for who He died
And take them home to Heaven
Where they'll be like Him and be satisfied.

Sketch of the Life of Elder Levi Rogerson

By request of the church at Smithwick's Creek, we will attempt to write a sketch of the life of Bro. Elder Levi Rogerson, our pastor. He was born in Martin County, NC around 1819 (according to best authority) and was the son of John and Dicie Rogerson. He grew to man-hood without any advantages of the world. According to his own statement he attended school only three days and only learned the alphabet. He was very wild in moral character caring but little for either Heaven or Hell. But the Lord as we believe in His Divine Mercy and good will towards sinners saw fit to send afflictions upon him which were so severe that his eyes were blinded, that he could not see the light of the sun by day or the light of the fire by night. However from these afflictions he was released and sight and health were restored by the all powerful God.

From this tenable experience he thought, "Suppose I had died, what would be my destiny? I will reform or repent my course of life. This blinding disease may again come in such form and with such severity as to cause death." Forming such a resolution he begins the work and continues it until he in his view could see but one thing that hindered his being as good as any man that ever stood on two shanks. While in this elated opinion, he visited a Methodist friend and he, leaving him, took of his religion and it's conditions and agreeing so well with his understanding of Christ and His mission that he said he would join the Methodist Church if it had been too inconvenient. After this, another disease came upon him and entered into his heart, breaking the mighty seal of self-conceit, and surely he said he thought this would immediately kill him. He then examined his condition to see where he would stand if brought before the bar of judgement and his eyes were opened to see not only the one thing needful but all things he ever did arose like mountains before him. Even his own prayers condemned him. While trying to pray it was forcefully impressed upon his mind "See what your prayers have done for you" and he resolved to pray no more. About this time the strong arm in which he had been trusting was severed from his body. He had no resolution to do any work, to him death appeared near at hand and he without the mantle of God or the Hope of Glory. While in this lowly condition, his wife said to him "Please go out and get me some broom straw as you are doing nothing. She said I took the reap hook and went to the place, on arriving, before beginning the work, it appeared best that I again try to pray before dying, and kneeling down near the path, the thought that suppose someone was to come along, they would ask what are you doing there? Rising up I took the hook and cut three bunches of straw, and to my surprise and understanding came a voice saying "I have called thee three times." Looking about to ascertain from whence came the sound, I could see no one, but at that time saw the plan of salvation. According to my view at the time it appeared as a narrow furrow made by a plow. At this time, the dreadful disease was cured and he was well and full of joy and praise. His whole heart was drawn out in thanksgiving and being filled with the love of God. He could say in the language of David, "Oh! that man would praise the Lord for His goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of man."

Brother Rogerson joined the church at Smithwick's Creek on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in January 1853 and was baptized the following day by Elder William Whitaker. He remained a member in full fellowship until his death, July 3, 1894.

His Call to the Ministry - When the impression was placed in his mind to speak for the cause of Christ, his education was so limited if a word had more than three letters he could not read it. In his call we afterwards heard him say that a passage of the scripture came to his mind and with that, other passages would connect and it was so impressed upon him day after day until his was to tell it to the Brethren that they might be rejoiced as he was. One of his favorite texts and one which seemed to give him great comfort was "Awake thou that Sleepeth, arise from the bed, thy God shall give thee light." This was impressed upon him while at work in the woods. He sat down and a long train of thoughts visited his mind concerning the Infinite Powers and boundless mercies of God.

Prayer meetings were at this time, held in the neighborhood of Smithwicks Creek. Brother Rogerson attended these meetings and participated in their deliberations very acceptable. This was in 1858. In June 1860 he was liberated by his church to exercise his gifts in the ministry within the bounds of his own church.

He was licensed to preach within the bounds of the Kehukee Association in Sept. 1860. Brother Rogerson was ordained to administer all the ordinances of the Church of Christ in March 1864 by Elders C.B. Hassell and William B. Perry. His preaching was a demonstration of the spirit and power and to the satisfaction of the brethren wherever he went. He was, with Brother Peele, chosen to the Pastorial care of the Church at Smithwicks Creek in Dec, 1874. The church at Bear Grass also chose him as their pastor in the same month and year, which positions he acceptably filled until the time of his death, which occurred at his house, July 3,1894 after a protracted illness. Elder Rogerson was twice married. About the year 1847 he married Mary A. Revels, who bore unto him nine children. His second marriage was to Patsy Corey in 1870. She bore unto him five children, two sons and two daughters.

Elder Rogerson was a hard working man always living by the sweat of his brow. He was very kind and neighborly and leaves many friends to mourn his loss.

His funeral was largely attended and services were held by Elder John N. Rogerson who talked from Second Timothy the fourth chapter, verses seven and eight.

Brother Rogerson's career on earth was long and mingled with many sorrows and some oppressions, but we feel tat he has gone beyond these chilling winds and gloomy skies. Beyond death's portals to a land where beauty never dies, where becomes immortal.

A SERMON PREACHED
BY WILLIAM BROWN,
AT THE PAVILION CHAPEL,
BRIGHTON APRIL 14, 1867

"My times [are] in thy HAND." Psalm 31:15

What a quieting and comforting thought this is, if we really believe it and are enabled, amidst all the changing scenes of life, to look up and say with David, "But I trusted in thee, O Lord; I said, Thou art my God. My times are in thy hand!" Let us look for a moment at God, as the God of providence, as the God of all things. Think how he formed this world, and all the best of heaven. Has anything been left to chance? Is not all in the most perfect order, and everything arranged - the sun, the moon, the stars, all moving in order, and in those movements, timed to a moment, like that beautiful eclipse we saw the other day. Who ordered it to happen just at that very instant? It was the Creator of all things, He who holdeth the waters in the hollow of his hand.

Let us look at God's purposes of the world, every event ordered from the creation of Adam till Christ shall come again the second time; all appointed, every human being who has lived or shall live; every event that has taken place in the lives of each, all has been appointed and that to a moment; everything great or small from the birth of Solomon, to the falling of a sparrow. Look at the first chapter of Matthew, at the genealogy there traced out, how exact it is; and then it says from Abraham to David are 11 generations, and from David till the carrying away into Babylon are 14 generations, and from the carrying away into Babylon unto Christ are 14 generations. All fixed, all lined out. The railway time is fixed, and when you go to a certain station you expect the time to be as stated, but here we see the weakness of man. We know not what event may occur to frustrate man's promise; but God makes no mistakes. HE sees the end from the beginning, HE knows the events of each future day.

"Not a single shaft can hit,
Till the God of love see fit."

What a comforting thought to a child of God, to know that though he may be tried like Job, God is sitting by as the refiner! If our eyes were but open to see it as at Dothan, when the prophet prayed, "Lord, open the eyes of this young man," and they were opened; and what did he see? O, he saw the city surrounded with chariots and horses of fire. And if our eyes too were anointed, what should we see? We should behold the angels of God encamping round about us, as a guard, and a wall of fire, and the promise is, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

Let us for a moment think of David. It is said in the Chronicles, "Now the acts of David the king, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of Samuel the seer, and in the book of Nathan the prophet, and in the book of Gad the seer, with all his reign and his might, and the times that went over him, and over Israel, and over all the kingdoms of the countries." How much there is in this verse! The God of David and the God of Israel, purposed and ordered all these times, and to poor David what times they were. God is the special God of Israel, but he is also the God of the whole earth. Not even the sparrow can alight upon the ground without your heavenly Father. We do not half realize this truth; if we did, what peace it would bring. God is directing all. Like the coachman with the reins, guiding all, holding in his hand even the enemy, and the even the devil cannot go beyond God's permission. Like Bunyan's lions, they are chained. They may frighten poor Christian, but they can do him no harm. The word is, "hitherto thou shalt go, but no farther." It is said, "The times that went over him;" so may we say of yea, poor child of God, it may be that now it is a time of grief with you. Is it not often so with the believer? "Many are the afflictions of the righteous;" but they and all that concerns them are in the hand of God, the great Physician, and he, like the skilful doctor, knows how to combine all the ingredients in the cup, and to make them work together for good. Poor dear child of God, have you a bitter cup to drink? It is mixed by God himself. The good Physician has mixed it with his own hand, and he knows every drop in the cup. When He was on earth, He appeared in this very character; and it was so good, he refused none; so skilful, that He never failed. In our hospitals some are found to be incurable, and they are sent away; but our blessed Lord loves to deal with such. And does not that just describe our ease?

"Loathed incurables we stand,"

And as poor lepers we cry out, "Unclean, unclean!" But how various are our afflictions, how diversified the "times that go over us!" Sometimes the enemy seems as if he would swallow us up, coming with his dreadful temptations; but he cannot put upon us more than our gracious God allows; he is chained, and though he may afflict, he shall not devour. When he came amongst the sons of God, and accused Job, the command was, "Save his Life" and your life, poor tempted one, is safe. The devil has no power over it, God has planted a hedge around you, and you are safe. The cloud that troubled the Egyptians helped and comforted the Israelites; and what you know not now you will know hereafter, and you will see that you have been led by the right way and the best way to the city of Habitation.

Whatever your trial, how much worse it might have been, or you might have been where hope never come! "Ah!" but you perhaps say, "If God had not deserted me, should not I be delivered?" That is no proof. There is a time and a set time to be delivered. God does not say when, only that it will be in the right time, he will help "right early." "Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them ALL." NONE shall swallow thee up. The good Shepherd will save his poor sheep, though it be so far gone that, as the prophet says, there may be only a leg or a piece of an ear. To all thy trials and temptations there is a limit, there is an end, and thine expectation shall not be cut off. The time will come when the spirit of heaviness shall be exchanged for the garment of praise. "Weeping may endure for a night; but JOY cometh in the morning." As the earth rolls round, as day and night follow each other, so it is with the child of God. The light will break in again. Perhaps thou art now in the dark, and saying, "When shall it be morning?" Wait. Remember, thy times are in his HAND.

Perhaps, poor soul, you may be tried and tempted to think there is no God, or that He has forgotten you. Well! You are not alone even here. Look at the footprints of the saints of old - at Joseph in the pit. What must have been his feelings? Don't you think the enemy would whisper in his ear, "Is there a God? Can he see me? If he did, would he allow me to be cast in here and left to perish?" O how he felt? His brethren called it the "anguish of his soul." Look at him again in Egypt, cast into prison, unjustly accused, and kept there for two long years. Was not this a trial! Of faith? How he must have felt as if he was left and forsaken of God! But what a PROVIDENCE in all these things, all to bring about the good of Joseph and the sustaining of the house of Israel, and the people of God. ALL was well ordered, and well timed, and Joseph saw it to be so in the end, and was well satisfied with "the times that had gone over him." But what joy when his deliverance came! Could not Joseph have preached a sermon from our text? I am sure he could. He knew it by experience, and that is the way to understand the word.

What histories we read of the Old Testament saints! David was at one time the young shepherd, looking after his sheep, then called of God to stand forth as the champion for Israel, and slaying, by the power of God, the giant who dared to defy that God. Then see him fleeing for his life for fear of Saul, and begging a few loaves of bread from the hand of a priest. Then behold him raised to the throne, and the Lord blessing him in all his ways. See him again, under the power of temptation, falling into the grievous sin which gave him broken bones for the rest of his life. Though God forgave him, and put away his sin, we are sure poor David never forgave himself.

We might go on with David's long history, and tell of the times that went over him; but what did he say at last, after all his trials and sore conflicts? "HE hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure."

Let us look for a moment at Daniel and the times that went over him. At one time in the den of lions, at another time clothed with scarlet and made third ruler in the kingdom. And after all the solemn visions that he saw, what was the word addressed to him by the angels? "Thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days."

Look at another picture - the three Hebrews in the fire; hear their blessed testimony of God. See them bound and thrown into the burning fiery furnace.

What a time was this to pass over them! But look at them again, and see another with them, even the Son of God. O, my dear friends, this is the life of a child of God; it is the life of faith - trials and deliverances both appointed, and both to the moment.

Look at the New Testament saints - at the disciples, when their dear Lord and Master was dead. What a time of Grief and desolation it was, and their faith so low they could only say, "We trusted it had been HE which should have redeemed Israel!" But O the joy when HE rose, when Mary clasped his dear feet and cried, "My Lord and my God"; and when the two going to Emmaus found the dear Stranger who had walked and talked with them, to find He was their dear and blessed Master! O what a time of joy to go over them! How they went back to Jerusalem to tell the joyful news to their brethren and sisters that they had seen the Lord. How little they would mind the long walk and the dark night; their feet would hardly feel the ground, and they knew where to go. They would not go to their worldly relatives or friends to tell the joyful news. No, it was to their brethren: "We have seen the Lord." O what joy! And that is just what we want again and again. And then the dear Lord did come, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and so he comes to us now and then, and turns our night into Day, and says to us, "Peace be unto you." And his promise is, "I will see you again." And did a covenant God ever break his word? Or can one promise fail? O no, our comforts may fail and darkness may come on, but light will break in again; for "our times are in His hand."

Some poor dear children of God cannot read their title clear to all these blessings. Many cannot. They cannot see they are the characters described. Their language is, "But am I a child?" The Lord suffers this for wise ends. It is one of the times that pass over you. Some are more subject to this than others. They are Little Faiths; and some remain so almost to the very last. Little Faiths, ready to halt, such is their character. We must not lay down a line for God, he DEALETH with his people as he will. Each has a case of his own, and each is led by the Lord, and ordered in the way he should go and in this the Lord is a Sovereign, and does as he will. Some pass through nitwit darkness, others less, having a smoother path, but those who have great faith generally have great trials; but the measure is, "As thy day, thy strength shall be." Let not the strong look down upon the weak and despise them, and let not the weak envy the strong or condemn them. These things ought not to be. The apostle would war against this evil. He speaks of God giving to every one "severally as HE will". The apostles were not all alike; they had different gifts; and the language of Paul, who might be called the greatest of them all, was, by the grace of God, "I am what I am." And this word fits us all. Let a poor child of God be in ever such darkness, if, like Paul on his voyage, neither sun nor stars for many days appeared, yet they shall not sink. Light will dawn again, for it is said, "Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart." It is living light, living seed that is sown. Like David, we may say, "Many there are which say unto my soul, Who will show us any good? Lord, lift Thou up the light of they countenance upon us". That is the good as child of God wants. When in our right mind we see and feel the emptiness of every worldly thing. But these seasons of darkness, as well as seasons of light, are among the "times that go over us."

This wilderness state is a state of warfare; we have many enemies to grapple with; we are called to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, and to put on the whole armour of God. What for? We don't want a buckler and sword in time of peace and security, but to defend us from our foes.

How exactly God times everything! At the set time, to a day and an hour, Noah was brought out of the ark. Must he not have had his trial of faith, and his many exercises when shut up and riding upon the waters? Don't you think he had his fears and misgivings? And would not the devil be there, tempting them that God had forgotten them? But no. Every day and every night they were watched over by a covenant GOD and Father. Each living creature there, a type of the church, was fed and sustained, and at the right time set free. So shall it be with every living child of mercy; and God has no dead children. They may feel lifeless, but there is the life, for it is hid with Christ in God. Dear child of God, you may feel in prison, but there is a door of deliverance for you, though you may not be able to see it; and the same hand that shut the door can open it. "My Times are in HIS HAND."

Sometimes the Lord appears in a most unexpected way. It may be in the midst of a conflict we are having with the enemy, when our great Saviour and Redeemer appears, and He not only vanquishes the devil, but as David says, HE prepares a table for us in the presence of our enemies." Berridge says,

"I think my foes all dead."

No, not so, they are alive. It is said, after the forty days of temptation of the dear Lord in the wilderness when on earth, that the devil departed from him "for a season." These seasons are in the hand of the Father; "My times are in his hands." It is as he pleases. Our dearest friends can do nothing for us, only as God will have it. How ready we should be to cut the knots of providence! But it must not be so. We must wait and look to a God of providence, and His grace for us. We can not expedite or frustrate these things. "My times are in his hands." Noah nor his sons might try to open the door of the ark, but it was shut by Almighty power, and when he shuts, none can open.

Are we in some great affliction passing through the furnace? Our friends try to comfort us, and sympathy is sweet and precious; but how little can the creature do, even the kindest and the best; but one word of heavenly peace and joy dropping on the heart, and how is the scene changed "My times are in thy hand." Dear Lord, I bless thee that they are. I would not have them in my own power if I might. God's tender care and watchful providence extends to everything. Where do I dwell? God knows, for he has fixed the very bounds of my habitation. Is it not a blessed and a quieting thought? How often, when I live in the country, I have looked at a little thatched cottage, where a dear old believer dwelt, and thought it one of the dwellings of the righteous, and angels watching over it, that no harm happen to that dear old lame woman now in GLORY.

Then, again, what is our employment? How do we get our bread? That, too, is ordered. GOD knows our daily life it may be our daily cross. The poor mother washing the clothes or dusting the house is still under the gracious eye of God. "Her times are in his hand."

To some GOD gives riches, to some he gives poverty. Some of his dear people can hardly get a mouthful of meat, and they may be tempted to think, "How can this be, when all is in my Father's hand?" Well, poor dear children of God, we don't know how it is, only we know this that "HE doeth all things WELL," and that what we know not now we shall know hereafter. Many are tried with ill health, and none can enter into that but those who have experienced it. Many of the family of God are on beds of languishing and pain; and whatever be our trials, our language is like David's, "how long, O Lord?" How long? Not the ten thousandth part of a second beyond the appointed time - beyond your Father's time; for your "times are in his hand;" and there would I leave them. Amen.

SOVEREIGN RULER of the skies
Ever gracious, ever wise;
All my times are in thy hand,
All events at thy command.

His decree who formed the earth
Fixed my first and second birth;
Parents, native place, and time;
All appointed were by him.

He that formed me in the womb,
He shall guide me to the tomb;
All my times shall ever be Ordered by his wise decree.

Times of sickness, times of health;
Times of penury and wealth;
Times of trial and of grief;
Times of Triumph and relief;

Times the tempter's power to prove;
Times to taste the Saviour's love;
All must come and last and end,
As shall please my heavenly Friend.

Plagues and deaths around me fly;
Till he bids, I cannot die;
Not a single shaft can hit,
Till the God of love sees fit.

- John Ryland

There are dear brethren who have thought that when Paul said, "And we know that all things work together for good to them who love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose," he meant only "all good things." I have always thought that he meant all the things that are connected with their experience of grace, from first to last, bitter as well as sweet, evil as well as good, as we distinguish the different things in our life and exercises, call the afflicting sense of sin, evil, and the pleasant emotions of love and hope, good. I have thought he included "the sufferings of this present time," and the vanity to which the new creature was made subject, not willingly, and "the bondage of corruption," under which we groan within ourselves, and the infirmities which cause our supplications, the intercessions of the Spirit within us, to be "with groanings which cannot be uttered," as well as the pleasant things that are given us by the way.

But let any candid man undertake to draw a line between those events, works, exercises, emotions, which he would name "good things," and those that he would call evil or wicked things. Then let him name those things which are on the dark side of the line, which are wicked, and which therefore he regards as outside of the purpose and predestination of God, and those things which are on the bright side, being good things, which do work together for good to them that love God. Well, does the division answer his mind? Look over the dark list. Is there no good at all mixed up with the evil in any of those wicked works? Joseph's brethren showed some good traits. Are they and their works all put on the dark side? They were kind to their father and to Benjamin, and when Joseph spoke roughly to them they felt sorry for what they had done to their brother, who was dead, as they thought. Besides, the very things in which they meant evil against Joseph, God meant unto good. Then that wicked thing worked for good, to save much people alive. Do you know just how to divide up those things so as to place them right? All through the Old Testament we find some very evil and wrong doings, which resulted in the opening of the eyes of others to the truth, and in bringing the doer of them down into depths, where he experienced true repentance and godly sorrow. Then the wicked men who with wicked hands crucified the dear Savior, who was delivered unto them by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, did "what God's hand and counsel determined before to be done." Those who have been made alive unto God hate and abhor wickedness in themselves and others. But would we dare to undertake to put this terribly wicked deed, and that of Joseph's brethren, and that of Cyrus, "the ravenous bird from the east," with many others, on that side of the line where those things are supposed to be which God did not predestinate? But some things seem to have just a little spice of wickedness in them, which is mixed up with a good deal of kindness and generosity and self-sacrifice. We would hardly know how to take forth the good from the evil in them. Sometimes the two are so mixed up and interwoven together that we cannot tell how to divide justly; we have to leave that to the Word.

But look on the good side, have we got that all right and sure? You have placed one of my works there, for you have been very kind to me, and so all the brethren have, far more so than I deserve. But if you knew how many evil thoughts I had when I was doing that work which you have placed among the good things, you would change it, I am sure. That time I was enabled to preach so that your soul was refreshed and comforted, you did not know how much of vanity, unbelief, doubt, evil thoughts, there was in my heart. The work was good in itself, and was a work of obedience and of faith. The sermon was the truth, and I believe it was by the Spirit I was enabled to preach it. But what a tangle of briers and thorns in my own heart I had to encounter and go through while preaching that truth to which the carnal mind is enmity. But you have put these things, and the kind act I did for that poor man, and the refraining from the utterance of the anger I felt once when reviled, all on the right side, and it really makes me tremble to see them there. You cannot sift the evil out of them, but I hope the blood of Jesus, that precious blood washed them and me clean before God. I am afraid after all that you have placed a smaller proportion of your own works on the good side, among the good things, than you have of any of your brethren.

We cannot divide between soul and Spirit, only as the Lord gives us that sharp, dividing word in our souls. We cannot take forth the precious from the vile, only as the Spirit makes us speak as God's mouth. Then we are always astonished to see so many things counted precious which we had thought were vile, and so many things which had appeared to us as pretty, and sweet, and good, now shown to be vile. When the King's "reign in righteousness" is felt in our hearts, then we no more call the vile person liberal, nor the churl bountiful, but we see things as they are in the sight of God. (Isa.xxxii. 1-7)

One thing we know, that all good is from God. He gives us every good gift and every perfect gift, and with him is no variableness nor shadow of turning. (James i. 17.) He works the good pleasure of his goodness in us, if it is ever there. We know also that there would have been no evil or wicked thing in the world if God had purposed that there should not be. His purpose must have embraced whatever transpires. We believe, also, and know, that in the end of all things his wisdom and power will have been justified, the highest good for his people will have been accomplished, and the most exalted glory of his name attained. Does any christian doubt this?

-Elder Silas H. Durand

One says, "If the advocates of the theory of unlimited predestination object to the application of their theory to all the acts and movements of beasts, birds and creeping things, as well as the acts of all men, as working together for good to Them who love God, they should cease to misapply Scripture to brace up their dangerous doctrine." That doctrine which is founded on the Rock does not need bracing up. But does the brother forget the many instances recorded in the Scriptures, in which the acts and movements of beasts and birds and creeping things, as well as the acts of wicked men, were especially directed by the Lord to the fulfillment of his wise purposes? Does he forget that there is a special covenant made for his people in the gospel day "with the beasts of the field, and with the fowls of heaven, and with the creeping things of the ground?" (Hosea ii. 18) What is there worthy of ridicule in the belief that even the mote which flies in the sunbeam, as well as the sparrow in the sky, is directed by the Lord? The frogs and insects were important in the execution of God's judgments upon Egypt. The frogs and flies and caterpillars filled the land of Eygpt, but their movements were so directed and controlled that not one not even one of the lice, could pass over the line that divided Egypt from Goshem. The Lord sent fiery serpents to punish Israel, raven to feed Elijah, and two bears (only two) to vindicate the character of Elisha as a prophet. The lion must slay the disobedient prophet, but could not tear his body not hurt the ass; yet he must wait quietly by until the other prophet should arrive to witness the fulfillment of God's word by him. (1 Kings xiii. 14.) Also in other cases it is recorded that lions were directed and controlled by the Lord.

(1 Kings xx. 36; 2 Kings xvii. 25; Daniel vi. 20.) It was not by chance that Herod was eaten by worms; the angel of the Lord was sent to smite him with that fearful judgment. Also the viper was directed to fasten upon Paul's arm, that the barbarians might know that he was an honest man. (Acts xxviii. 3-6.) The dove was returned by the Lord to Noah with the olive leaf, and the flight and time of every sparrow is so bounded and controlled that "one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father." - Matt. x. 29.

To me this is a most precious doctrine, It is glorious to know that in all events, and over all things, "the Lord God omnipotent doth reign." As in the case of Job, so in the case of all the Lord's people, he designs all their trials, and the cause and manner of them, and no enemy can go beyond the limits of God's purpose in his power to afflict, and all the wicked designs of men and devils shall result in the final good of the Lord's people, and in his own declarative glory. Jesus said to Pilate, "Thou couldst have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above." So Job recognizes only God's good hand in all the evil that came upto him through the devices of Satan, saying, "Shall we receive good at the hand of the Lord, and shall we not also receive evil?" So Joseph said to his brethren, "But as for you, ye thought evil against me, but God meant it unto good, as it is this day, to save much people alive." "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God" How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out." "For of him, and through him, and to him are all things, to whom be glory forever. Amen."

SUFFICIENT GRACE

(By W. I. Carnell)

"And He said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee." - 2 Cor 12:9. No words are more divinely sweet to me, no theme more grand and glorious; blessed is the man who receives such a message as this form the mouth of the Lord. No wonder the angel of the Lord said to the fearful shepherds on that eventful night: "Fear not, for behold I bring you glad tidings of great joy," when He had such tidings as this to tell those who dwell on the earth. This message, like all the blessed story of the gospel, is received with joy and gladness only by such of the sons of men as are taught of God to know their need of it, and their dependence upon it. When Saul of Tarsus was a vile persecutor of the saints, he would have found no comfort in such words; because he, at that time, knew nothing of the need of grace, and had no interest in its sufficiency. But before delivering this message God had prepared him to receive it and to trust and rejoice in it. "My grace is sufficient for thee." I confess that I have been very slow to learn this lesson, and I have been so forgetful that it has been necessary for me to learn it over again. Let us notice the circumstances under which Paul received this message, and if the Lord will, we will profit by the lesson. In the first part of this chapter, Paul tells us of the wonderful way in which the Lord had lifted him up, even unto the third heaven and into Paradise, and how he had heard unspeakable words which it is not lawful for a man to utter. And then to show that he, as well as we, was yet imperfect and subject to temptation and exaltation in the flesh, he said, "Lest

I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations there was given to me a thorn in the flesh and the messenger of satan to buffet me." The revelations to Paul had been so abundant and so wonderful that if left to himself he would naturally be exalted over them and lifted up with pride and self confidence, which would have placed him entirely above his poor weak doubting brethren. And would have rendered him unfit to preach to them and minister to their comfort. So to avert this great evil, and to keep him in fellowship with His Saviour, who was a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief, and in fellowship with His brethren, who must through great tribulation enter the kingdom of heaven, God mercifully gave to Paul a thorn in the flesh, and the messenger of Satan to buffet him. If this does not teach that God used the messenger of Satan to accomplish His righteous purpose in keeping Paul from being exalted above measure, I confess that I do not know the meaning of language, and would be pleased if some one would tell me what it does mean. And if God did this in His dealings with Paul, may He not do the same in His dealings with you and me? When Paul felt the piercing of that thorn in his flesh and was sorely vexed and annoyed with the buffetings of the messenger of Satan, he was greatly troubled and distressed about it, and like you and me, desired to be free from such tormenting and distracting afflictions. He could not see how it could work any good for him, or yield in him any of the peaceable fruits of righteousness, but thought it would be better for him if those things were removed, so he besought the Lord thrice that it might depart form him. But like the mother of James and John, and like it often is with your and me, "He knew not what he asked," and it was well for him that God did not grant his request, for if he had, Paul would have become exalted above measure, and would have lost the fellowship of his brethren, and worst of all he would not have tasted any more the fellowship of the suffering Christ, and would have been denied the consolation of his own words which say, "If we suffer with Him, we shall also be glorified with Him."

So instead of taking away the thorn and the messenger of Satan as Paul so much desired Him to do, the Lord said unto him "My grace is sufficient for thee."

How much better this was for Paul, and how much better for us who have, since that time, believed through grace. After this Paul spoke from experience when he said, "For we know not what to pray for as we ought." But God's answer to him was enough. It matters not how sorely you may be pierced by the thorn, nor how threatening and terrible may be the buffetings of Satan, "My grace is sufficient for thee," even if sin does reign unto death, grace will reign through righteousness unto eternal life. Grace is equal to every emergency. It is sufficient for you in all your trials and conflicts in life; there are no depths from which it cannot raise you, and no foe from whose hand it cannot deliver you. O, wondrous grace! If you are hungry, it is a boundless store of heavenly manna which is feely given without money and without price. If you are thirsty, it flows to you in a mighty river of living water. If you are naked, it will clothe you with the garment of salvation and with a robe of righteousness. If you are weak, it affords everlasting strength.

If you are rebellious, it is able to subdue all your rebellion and sweetly bring you to loving and faithful obedience. If you are poor, it abounds with the riches of heaven. If you are sick, it is the balm of Gilead and the oil of healing and gladness. If you stray, it brings you back to the fold. If you fall, it will raise you up, and when at last you go down into the dark valley and shadow of death, it will raise you from the dead and by its wonderful saving power you shall be caught up together with Jesus to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall you ever be with the Lord. Grace is sufficient for the old and the young, the high and the low, the rich and the poor, the wise and the simple. It is perfectly adapted to the needs of all ages, all classes and all conditions of human life in every nation, kindred, tongue and people. It saves the infant as it saves the adult. It saves the heirs of promise in heathen lands just as it saves them in gospel lands. It saved Abel and Moses, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, David and Solomon, and all the prophets of God. And all of God's elect, in the past ages, just as it saves them now. "It is of faith that it might be by grace to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed." - Rom. 4:16. "For the promise is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." - Acts 2:39. "My grace is sufficient for thee." It will never lose a single one of its subjects, but from every land and from every nation, kindred and tongue its trophies shall arise and come forth, singing a new song, saying "Thou art worthy to take the book and to open the seals thereof, for thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by Thy blood, out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation."

ELECTION

(By W. I. Carnell)

"Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect?" - Rom. 8:33.

That God has an elect people is a fact that must be admitted by all who profess to believe the scriptures. And yet the Bible doctrine of election seems to be little understood and generally ignored, despised and rejected by those professing the Christian religion. And the most satisfactory and effectual way devised by the wisdom of this world to conceal and evade this doctrine is to resort to the fallacious position that God has chosen an elect ground or character so that when a man steps over onto this elect ground or puts on this elect character he becomes one of the elect. But this, like every other Arminian scheme, leaves the work of God out of the matter and substitutes the work of man instead, for if a man can constitute himself an elect by stepping over on elect ground or putting on an elect character, then he thereby elects himself, so that he is his own elect instead of God's elect. And could he find salvation in such election then verily he would be his own savior. Just as the doctrine of men teach in every part of the economy of salvation. But it is God's elect and not man's elect mentioned in our text, and in all the holy scriptures. But to cover up the deformity of their false theology and deceive the hearts of the simple, those deceivers will admit that God did the choosing but contend that he chose character and that His election was not personal. But if election is not personal, and men and women are persons, then it follows that men and women are not chosen. So if men and women are not elected, what interest have we in election? It is true that all those who believe in Christ are embraced in God's election, and it is also true that all those who shall hereafter believe in Him are embraced in God's election, and have been embraced in it and in God's eternal purpose of redemption and salvation from the ages eternal, even before the world began. So to the Ephesians the great Paul said, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spirtual blessings in heavenly places in Christ. According as He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love" - Eph 1:3-4. This is God's choice; it was made before man was created, before he had done either good or evil, hence it is unconditional. The pronoun "us" in this text is a personal pronoun and refers to persons, hence it was persons and not character that God chose. But deceivers tell us that this choice included none but the apostles and that the choice was unto the apostleship and not unto salvation. But Paul was not writing to apostles nor about apostles; he was writing to the saints at Ephesus and to the faithful in Christ generally. Neither does he leave us to guess as to what end they were chosen unto but he tells us plainly that it was "that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love." If election was not mentioned in any other scripture, this one text furnishes positive proof of the doctrine of personal unconditional election, unto salvation. But to make it unquestionably plain, Paul said to the Thessalonian brethren: "But we are bound to give thanks always to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sancification of the spirit and belief of the truth." - 2 Thess. 2:13. Here the apostle makes it so plain that we cannot fail to get his meaning. How sweet and comforting that message must have been to those brethren coming to them as it did by devine inspiration. Oh, could I hear such a message spoken to me with the assurance that the mouth of the Lord had spoken it. My unbelief would give way, my doubts and fears depart, and then I could say, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." Then I would rejoice in God my Savior and triumph in the glorious election of His grace. God is immutable. He makes no mistake and no failures. If He has chosen a man to salvation that man will be saved. There are no uncertainties about it. The doctrine of election embracing men in unbelief is a doctrine peculiar to the church of Christ, but it is true just the same or else men must have believed before the foundation of the world, for we know, if the Bible is true, they were chosen before the foundation of the world. Truly we cannot know God's elect from others until He quickens them and thus begins a good work in them, which He will perform unto the day of Jesus Christ. When God sends forth His spirit into their hearts crying Abba Father, then they begin to cry, as new born babes in nature cry, so new born babies in Christ cry, mourn and repent, but as the children of men do not cry until they are born, even so the elect of God do not cry unto God until they are born of Him; then they cry day and night unto Him. "And shall not God avenge His own elect which cry day and night unto Him." - Luke 18:7. When Paul preached at Antioch, "As many as were ordained to eternal life believed" - Acts 13:48. But we have no account of any others believing except those who were ordained to eternal life, so it is to this day, whenever and wherever the gospel is preached. It is a stumbling block to the Jews and foolishness to the Greeks, but to them that are called both Jews and Greeks it is the power of God and the wisdom of God. All the dealings of God with men in their experience and the preaching of the gospel to them does not add one to the number of God's elect, but these things mark, call out, identify, instruct and comfort God's elect and none other.

The name sheep as applied to the people of God in the scriptures is of the same import as the word elect, representing the chosen people of God in every stage and condition of their being, and also signifies a peculiar relation to Jesus the great shepherd as the object of His peculiar care, while the rest of the human are represented as goats. Jesus came unto this world, suffered and died as a shepherd in the interest of His sheep. He said, "I am the good shepherd; the good shepherd giveth His life for the sheep." - John 10:11. These were his sheep when He came; not that they had given themselves to Him, but because His Father had given them to Him. So He said of them: "My sheep hear my voice and I know them and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand. My Father which gave them me is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand" - John 10:27-29. There is no difference by which we can distinguish the sheep from the goats, the elect from the non-elect, until the spirit of God enters into His chosen sheep and calls them out and separates them from the rest of mankind by a strange, mysterious experience in which the goodness of God leads them to repentance and causes them to believe. According to the working of His mighty power whereby He is able to subdue all things unto Himself, these were all the sheep of Christ by gift of His Father in the covenant and purpose of His grace. When He laid down His life for them on the cross, He represented them as their shepherd, mediator and redeemer, and He bore all their sins in his own body, met and satisfied the demands of justice and fulfilled the law for them and freed them from the curse of the law so that they are without charge. "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect?" "It is God that justifieth." Justifieth whom? The elect, of course. These are the people of whom Paul is speaking. Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died; died for whom? The elect, the sheep for whom He said, "I give my life." These shall all be saved, not one of them shall fail. The number of God's elect is unknown to mortals. But God knows them, every one. Jesus said: "I know my sheep," and Paul said: "Nevertheless, the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, 'the Lord knoweth them that are His.'" - 2 Tim. 2:19. While we cannot know the number of God's elect, it is evidently very great, beyond our calculations. The inspired John, after speaking of the 144,000 which were sealed from the twelve tribes of Israel, said: "After this I beheld and lo, a great multitude which no man could number, of all nations and kindreds and peoples and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes and palms in their hands." Rev.7:9

Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect?

AGREEMENT BETWEEN ELDER JOHN LELAND AND JAMES MADISON COMMEMORATED

An interesting and important event in American history was recalled on October 4, 1953, when the Leland-Madison Monumental Park was dedicated near Orange, Virginia. The site of the park marks the place where Elder John Leland and James Madison met to discuss their differences pertaining to the ratification of the Constitution of the United States. This was in 1788.

The Constitution, as it was drawn up by the Convention in Philadelphia in 1787, did not contain a guarantee of religious liberties and free speech. Elder Leland, and those he represented, opposed the ratification by Virginia unless such provisions were included. This was a large and influential group of citizens, and it was not likely that the Constitution would be ratified without their support.

The following is quoted from an article in a Washington newspaper by Dr. Joseph M. Dawson:

"Authorities agree that Leland was a key man in obtaining Virginia's ratification of the Federal Constitution. Without Virginia's favorable action, in all probability the Constitution would never have been ratified."

"The Rev. John Leland though a native of Massachusetts, owes his place in history to his activities in Virginia from the time he went to Culpepper in 1775 to his return to Massachusetts in 1791. In that 16-year period, he proved to be a statesman as well as a flaming evangelist. Elected to the Virginia Assembly, he collaborated with Washington, Jefferson, Madison and Mason in behalf of religious liberty. He also baptized more than 700 converts in the region between the Ketockton Mountains and the York River. He was affectionately called Parson."

"While Leland enjoyed the friendship of the leaders mentioned above, he opposed Madison's election to the Virginia Ratification Assembly because Madison's document lacked a Bill of Rights. At a picnic near Orange, the two men composed their differences and agreed on an amendment. Then Leland pledged his support, with the result that Madison was seated and Virginia ratified the Federal Constitution as amended."

"In the meantime Leland, on behalf of the Baptists, had written George Washington, saying, "when the Constitution first made its appearance in Virginia, we, as a society, feared that the liberty of conscience, dearer to us than property or life, was not sufficiently secured...Under the regal government mobs, fines, bonds and prisons were our frequent repast.'"

"Although Washington belonged to the Established Church of Virginia, he sympathized deeply, as evidenced by his reply" "If I have entertained the slightest apprehension that the Constitution formed by the conventions where I had the honor to preside might possibly endager the rights of any ecclesiactical society, certainly I would have never place my signature to it; and if I now could conveive that the general Government might ever be so administered as to render the libery of conscience insecure, I beg you will be persuaded that no one would be more zealous than myself to establish effectual barriers against the horrors of spiritual tyranny and every species of religious persecution."

The first amendment to the Constitution, referred to above, reads as follows. "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people peacefully to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

There is little mention in secular history of the part our religious fore-fathers took in securing this freedom for us, but we should be most grateful that in the purpose of God, He gave us men of courage to fight for and secure our priceless heritage.

Elder J. D. Wood

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 18, 1910.

Ray Kauffman - Dear Brother in Christ: - I promised you some time ago to write you at some time something of my early experience in the things of the kindom of God. In the spring of 1875 I became much troubled on account of my being a sinner in the sight of God, and I felt so grieved that my boyish pleasures and companions were no longer a joy to me. Sometimes the trouble would pass off for a while, only to return with more force than before. In the fall of the same year I became so distressed that I felt that there was no mercy for me, I thought that I must die and go to the place of eternal punishment, and the awful suffering of my soul I can never describe; I could not help begging for mercy, and yet felt that there was none for me. This continued until February, 1876, when it passed off, but I had no evidence that I could claim that Jesus loved me. I went on in that condition, wondering what my condition really was, until Monday after the second Sunday in May, 1876. In the afternoon, while at work on my father's farm, in Beaufort Co., N.C. I was thinking about my strange condition, when suddenly there came over me the most glorious and peaceful feeling I had ever experienced. I felt so sure that Jesus was my Savior that I stood there in the field and clapped my hands for joy. Then and there I had a peculiar view of the Primitive Baptist Church as the church of Jesus Christ, and I loved her, and felt that I wanted to live with that dear people of God. So on Saturday before the first Sunday in June, 1876 I went before the Sandy Grove Church of Primitive or Old School Baptists, near my father's home, and where my parents were both members, and told them of my desire, and they so kindly received me and tenderly cared for me that I could but feel sure that they loved me. Most of all of them are gone now to their eternal home, but I love their memory. How kind they were. For about one month and a half I had sweet and peaceful rest in the things of the blessed kingdom, then one day, very suddenly, as if some one had spoken to me, I heard, as I believe, the voice of my Savior, saying, You have got to preach. The thought pierced my soul to its very depths, and I sank down in sorrow, for I knew my inability to do such a wonderful thing as preach the glorious gospel of Jesus Christ. What I suffered under that impression I cannot tell you; it is beyond expression. I believed that the Lord was able, but O I was so weak and unworthy. But the first Sunday in September, 1876, being persuaded by others, I made the attempt to speak in the blessed name of Jesus, and have been at it until now, and as I write these things the tender love and sympathy of those dear old saints come into my memory and afford me comfort. They made appointments for me, and called for my services here and there, so I began to circulate among the churches away from home, and through the mercy of God have continued to this time, witnessing both to small and great of the eternal salvation of poor, helpless sinners through Jesus Christ and him crucified. I wonder sometimes at the kind consideration that I receive at the hands of the Lord's dear people. It is the mercy of God to me, and so I feel, as he gives me ability, to continue to publish the holy name of the Lord.

Now, dear brother, I appreciate your standing in the church; I, too, was very young when I was baptized, but the God of our salvation is sufficient for all things. I pray that he will keep you safely to the end. We are in usual health and hope that you are well. Hoping to see you next Sunday I will close. Write me soon.

John 1: 1-9

In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.

The same was in the beginning with God.

All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made.

In him was life; and the life was the light of men.

And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not.

There was a man sent from God, whose name was John.

The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe.

He was not that Light, but was sent to bear witness of that Light.

That was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world.

HYMN

God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea,
He rides upon the storm.

Deep in unfathomable mines
Of never-failing skill,
He treasures up his bright designs,
And works his sovereign will.

Ye fearful saints, fresh courage take,
The clouds ye so much dread
Are big with mercy, and shall break
In blessings on your head.

Judge not the Lord by feeble sense,
But trust him for his grace;
Behind a frowning providence
He hides a smiling face.

His purposes will ripen fast,
Unfolding every hour;
The bud may have a bitter taste,
But sweet will be the flower.

Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan his work in vain;
God is his own interpreter,
And his will make it plain.

"I form the light, and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil; I the Lord do all these things." Isaiah 45:7

Elder J. B. Farmer

This is a profound statement uttered by the God of all creation. It is over and above our natural thinking and understanding, as high as the heaven is above the earth. I am made to believe that we will never understand this or any other scripture, unless God is merciful to open it up to us and to make it plain. The natural, logical, reasoning mind of man is totally incapable of rightly dividing the work of truth. He has hidden these things from the wise and prudent, and has revealed them unto babes. Believing and knowing this, it is my desire that wisdom and understanding would be given in writing and in reading these things to the praise, honor and glory of God.

The sound Old Baptists, over the years, have been falsely accused of saying that "God is the author of sin" by some who do not understand what they believe. Since these Old School Primitive Baptists have been blessed to believe that God, in His wisdom and foreknowledge, predestinated all things, some of their detractors have jumped to the conclusion that they believe God is the author of sin. I do not know of anyone in our fellowship who believes that God is the cause of the sinful actions of men. Amazingly, there have been some, and even now there are some who call themselves Primitive Baptists who boldly proclaim that their god is the author of sin. They consider others who do not agree with them to be weak in the faith. Sadly, this false doctrine appears to be a device which has been used to try to excuse wickedness by saying that God predestinated it, so man could not keep from doing it.

To show this false accusation and false doctrine for what they are, we must understand what the word 'predestination' actually means. It literally means 'to have been before-horizoned.' It means that God saw all things as they would unfold before they ever came into existence. He saw it, declared it, and therefore fixed it forever. He declared the end from the beginning. "For he spake and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast." Psalm 33:9 "That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is past." Ecclesiastes 3:15. God has made things this way that men should fear before Him. God's predestination did not cause events, but rather fixed them in time. Events cannot be other than what God saw from the beginning.

We also must declare what sin is. Sin is the transgression of the law. It is not possible that God could transgress His holy law. The law is holy and just and good. It was given as the ministration of condemnation and as the ministration of death to a world of guilty sinners. And it was given to be a school-master to bring His elect to Christ, who is the end of the law for righteousness unto all who have been given the gift of faith to believe in Him.

Our dear deceased brother and faithful Elder, W.P. O'Neal made it very plain why it was impossible for God to cause sin. He said that since there is no sin in God, no sin can come from Him. We know from the scriptures that the God of righteousness cannot even look upon iniquity. There is no unrighteousness in Him, according to the scriptures. "He is the Rock, his work is perfect; for all his ways are judgment; a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he." Deuteronomy 32:4. Sin must therefore come from a source other than God. The source is man.

What is man, but a creature of God's formation? He was formed of the dust of the ground, and was made an earthen vessel. This creation was declared to be good and very good by his Creator. How may a thing formed and declared to be good, then turn and do evil? Some erroneously say that God made the man to sin, and therefore God is chargeable for man's sin. The truth is that God made man, knowing that he would sin, but that man is justly chargeable for his own sin. Before God destroyed the world with the flood, He declared that all flesh had corrupted itself. "The earth was corrupt before God, and the earth was filled with violence. And God looked upon the earth and, behold, it was corrupt; for all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth," Genesis 6:11-12. Man corrupted himself - not God. God is clear in the matter.

It is written, "The creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope, because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." Romans 8:20-21. The conclusion from this is that God made man good, but made him subject to vanity, and man fell according to his own lust. The apostle James said by inspiration, "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man; but every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. Then when lust has conceived, it bringeth forth sin and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death. Do not err, my beloved brethren." James 1:13-16.

Since God cannot sin, and since God has never caused, and shall never cause man to sin, what is His relation to sin? We are told in the scriptures that God hates sin and punishes sin. Nevertheless, He makes use of it when it furthers His will and purpose. The prophet said by inspiration, "The wrath of man shall praise thee, and the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain." Psalm 76:10. That which works together for God's praise and for the good of His people, He allows. And that which would go beyond His will and purpose, He restrains. Consider Joseph, and how his brothers hated him and purposed to kill him. They were restrained by the Lord in their purpose to kill Joseph, that he might go before them into Egypt to preserve life. There are many, many other wonderful examples given in the scriptures where the purposes of wicked men have been frustrated, and glory and honor has been rendered to God, who alone is worthy to be praised.

Then, with all these things in mind, what does the scripture at the head of this article mean? God said, "I form the light, and create darkness; I make peace, and create evil." What is the 'light' that He formed? I am made to believe that the 'light' here represents His people. Jesus said, "Ye are the light of the world." Matthew 5:14. They are children of the day. What is the 'darkness' which He created? I am made to believe that the 'darkness; here represents the wicked. Solomon said by inspiration, "The way of the wicked is as darkness: they know not at what they stumble." Proverbs 4:19. They are children of the night. It is apparent that God made both the 'light' and the 'darkness.' He made the 'light' to show forth His praise, and He made the 'darkness' for the day of evil. "The Lord hath made all things for himself: yea, even the wicked for the day of evil." Proverbs 16:4.

As 'light' and 'darkness' are opposites, I am made to believe that 'peace' and 'evil' are also opposites as represented in this scripture. To my understanding, to be in 'peace' means to be in a safe place of quietness and comfort and rest. God gives His people a 'peace' that passes understanding while in this life. He gives them 'peace' in the middle of the storm as Christ did with His disciples. He is their 'peace.' They are made to place their complete confidence and trust in Him, who cannot fail. The Lord Jesus made 'peace' with God the Father in behalf of the saints by presenting to the Father, His body, a living sacrifice, which atoned for all their sin. And the final end of His children shall be eternal 'peace' with Him in glory according to the working of His mighty power.

'Peace' is the opposite of 'evil.' To be in 'evil' is to be in turmoil, to be terrified with noise, to be in fear of certain destruction, and finally to be in the pain of eternal death. Ultimately, it would be for one to suffer in the place where the worm dies not and the fire is not quenched. According to the scriptures, this is what is in store for the wicked. God created this 'evil' for all those that hate Him and hate his people, and who are deceived to believe a lie and be damned. "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." Revelation 20:15.

Considering all these things, I am made to believe that the meaning of the word 'evil,' stated in this scripture, cannot possibly be 'wickedness' or 'sin,' as some contend, but rather must be the opposite of 'peace,' which is 'tribulation,' 'anguish' and 'eternal destruction.' 'Peace' is the eternal state of the saints. 'Evil' is the eternal state of the wicked. "To them who by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life; but unto them who are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile; but glory, honor, and peace, to every man that worketh good, to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile: for there is no respect of persons with God." Romans 2:7-11.

I trust that this was written in love, and in hope of eternal life.

CORRESPONDENCE

To the Household of Faith:

Dear Ones in Christ: I feel a need, to try to write a little concerning my time in this world of sin and troubles, and sorrows, which seems to follow me, every where I go. Not that I am a fit writer which I am surely not. But that I have a desire to write a few lines, not knowing what to call it, but I will try, the Lord willing to tell something about the way that I have been led along the way. I am an uneducated one, as far as the schools of this world, is concerned. Yet I feel to be much blessed, of the Dear Lord for the things, he has blessed me with, naturally as well as Spiritually, I hope, in this life. Not that I feel the least bit worthy, of the least one, for I don't. If I have any worth it surely is not this worthless one, for sin is mixed in all that I do, my time in this life has been filled with many downs, and a few ups, troubles and sorrows seems to have been my lot, for most of my life. I have wondered many times, did I deceive those Dear people when I beggared a home with them? I believe the year was 1981. Or yet, am I deceived in the whole matter? And, have I deceived, the people of God into thinking that I am something that I am not? That would be an awful note, if I have. I feel to fall short, in so many ways, that I can hardly stand what in myself I see. As far back as my memory extends, I have been a very timid and strange person, with a feeling of not really belonging anywhere. And as I journey on toward the finish line, I must say that I am not one whit better now, than I was from the beginning of my worthless life, the only difference is back then I didn't know that I was such an awful sinner as I am. Even my very name, I abhor, I must confess to all, my journey, has been one of many failings and shortcomings, that I am made to wonder where do, I go, from here. Only the Lord knows, I feel to be the least of all, if one of the Lord's little ones. I desire the prayers of the dear ones, if that is not asking too much. I would not live always, I ask not to stay, fair well all. Job said in 14:1-2, man that is born of a woman, is of a few days and full of trouble, he cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down: he fleeth as a shadow, and continueth not. Also in the book of Job 5:6-7 although affliction cometh not forth of the dust, neither doeth trouble spring out of the ground; yet man is born unto trouble as the sparks fly upward. It is my hope, that I have not hurt any of the Lord's little children, if I have, may it be charged to me, that I may know how sorry, I am, in the matter. I feel that I have wrote too much, and will leave this to the Dear Ones, in charge, to do, with this as they think best. With Godly love, and fear, I hope, in a precious savior, Jesus Christ: the Son; of the Living God: Amen.

Brother Horton,

Please find my check for two more years to the Signs. I have been receiving the Signs for over 40 years. I look forward to seeing it every month. I especially enjoy the experiences of the saints more than anything, but the other articles are edifying also.

Thanks for the hard work.

In hope,

VOICES OF THE PAST

CHRISTMAS

"Yule" was the old name for Christmas, and is from the same Anglo-Saxon root (geola) as the word jolly, and was the Pagan festival of the Winter Solstice. The Bible makes no mention of Christmas; and it does not tell us in what year, month or day Christ was born. And history says. "Not even the exact year, much less the exact month or day when Christ was born is known by mortals. The sixth of January was in the second and third centuries thought to have been the day; but it was decided by the Catholics in the fourth and fifth centuries that the 25 day of December was the day. As Rome, the centre of paganism, was made the centre of Catholicism, so the Pagan festivities of the Saturnalia, Sigillaria, Juvenalia and Brumalia, which occurred in December, were very conveniently and hilariously transmuted by a wordly Christianity into the festival of Christmas.

The Christmas holiday is very notable as a day of wordly myrth, drunkenness, blasphemy, murder and every other crime that is known or practiced by men and women. When Christmas day approaches many people seem to grow wild, so much so that the hearts of true Christians are filled with almost unbearable sorrow. Christmas parties, plays and dances are called for in the night where evil takes delight, and where our sons are enticed into drunkenness and vice, and our daughters are made a reproach to all for having been at a drunken party, dance or associating with drunken men, whose mouths are full of vulgarity and slander.

We do not object to the young people meeting in the daytime at the house of a friend, where drinking is not tolerated, for social enjoyment, singing, conversation and civil pastime. We commend this for both the old and the young, because it encourages and cultivates a taste for better things than vice and folly.

Parents, young men and young women, will you remember this kind and timely admonition from one who is very much interested in your welfare? Parents, rule over your children in love. Children, obey your parents, for this is right.

MATTHEW 2:1

Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judaea in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem.

The late James Cash "J.C." Penney Jr., who resided in New York city, the founder of the nationwide J.C. Penney stores, penned down the following biographical sketches of his paternal grandfather and his father, who were both Primitive Baptist Elders of days gone by.

My grandfather, Elder Eli Penney, was born on April 6, 1799, near Lawrenceburg, in what is today known as Anderson County, Kentucky. Records in my family would indicate that he was probably baptized on December 9, 1811. About 1829, he was licensed and later ordained into the ministry, and in a short time became well known in the Long Run Association in Kentucky. He was instrumental in the organization of the Lawrenceburg Baptist Church in 1834, and in July of the same year was ordained as a deacon. He was also a trustee of this church and served as Moderator for many years. In 1839, he, along with his wife and their five children moved to northwest Missouri. In 1841, he purchased a farm near Mirabile, Caldwell County, Missouri where he and his family settled and lived for more than twenty-five years. It was in Caldwell County that he established a small church known as Old Log Creek Primitive Baptist Church, and he became the church's first pastor, serving there for nearly thirty years. In 1868, he sold his farm in Caldwell County and moved to Hamilton, Missouri. He died there on May 31, 1871.

My father, Elder James Cash Penney, Sr. was born on December 29 1841, near Mirabile, Caldwell County, Missouri. At the age of nineteen he united with the Old School Baptist Church in Missouri. In 1861, when rumors of the Civil War became great, he was called upon to escort his Kentucky cousin, Mary Frances Paxton, back to her home in Kentucky, following her extended visit with relatives in Missouri. A romance developed between the two and he decided not to return to Missouri. They were married within a few weeks in Kentucky. He subsequently enlisted for service in the Civil War.

Family records indicate he was baptized and received into the fellowship of the Baptist Church in Lawrenceburg, Kentucky on August 16, 1863 when he was 22 years old. At the close of the war, he moved back to Missouri with his family. It was about this time that he felt the calling to become a minister and farmer. His pastoral charge was the Primitive Baptist Church at Log Creek, located about twelve miles from Hamilton, Missouri, where he preached for more than twenty years. I don't have an exact record of the date he may have been ordained into the church. He died on March 22, 1895 in Hamilton, Missouri at the age of fifty-three years. This is all the information that I have available to give you.

I appreciate your interest in my family and wish you every success in your endeavor.

Sincerely,

J.C. Penney

The foregoing correspondence was sent to the late Miss Emma Mahulda West of New Cambria, Missouri, who compiled an extensive book highlighting the lives of Primitive Baptist Elders of the past.

EXPERIENCE OF THE LATE ELDER S.O. PLYBON

Rocky Mount, VA

Dear Elders Spangler and Wood;

A brother sent me a copy of the June 1905 Landmark with my father's experience in it. Will you please print it in the SIGNS of the TIMES? He was born December 11, 1850 and died December 3, 1932. He was a Primitive Baptist minister fifty four years.

In bonds of love,
Posey L. Plybon

Elders Gold and Lester;

I have been requested to write my experience. I will try to tell in a short way what I hope the Lord has done for me.

In my youthful days my father and mother were both members of the Primitive Baptists, and would tell me there was a place of eternal punishment for the wicked, and there was eternal rest for the good people. I thought that since I had never sworn an oath and never was allowed to hunt and fish on Sunday, I was better than boys that did such things. My father died when I was fourteen years old, and it seemed he died so happy. I wanted to die happy too. I told him I would try to meet him in heaven.

One day mother sent me to the mill, and while I was riding along thinking of my condition, I saw myself a poor sinner. With tears in my eyes I cried, "Lord have mercy on me a lost sinner." I went on to the mill; and the miller asked me what was the matter. I told him nothing. When I got home, mother said, "Silas, are you sick?" I told her I was not, and she said that I looked very bad. I could not talk for crying.

I went on this way for about thirteen months. Sometimes I would go to the barn and try to pray, but it seemed that I got worse all the time, and I wished I had never been born into this troublesome world. There was a Methodist meeting about five miles away and I went to it. I thought I would see if I could get a word of comfort; but when I got there, the thought came to me that if I went into the house, I would go to crying. I did not want anyone to know anything about it. The preacher stood in the door and preached, but not a word for me. I went back the next day and took the back seat, and promised myself I would not shed a tear. They sang "Come ye sinner poor and needy, weak and wounded, sick and sore. Jesus stands ready to save you, full of pity, love and power."

I wept, brethren and sisters, for I could not see how He could save me - I was the vilest of the vile. I went home and sat down at the table. Mother asked, "Silas, what kind of a meeting did you have?" I said, "Right smart meeting, I reckon." And she wanted to know how many mourners were there, and I said, "Five I reckon." "Who were they?" I could not eat and got up and went into the house, picked up the Bible and sat down to read. My little brother and sisters came in; Mother called and told them to come out of there. I though she knew how mean and sinful I was, and did not want them to come in where

I was. I thought she would not countenance me, and what will I do? I went to the barn and got on my knees and tried to pray; but I still grew worse and worse.

Thursday morning I went to the meeting again, and at the intermission I went out and sat down by the house. My aunt came out and took me by the hand, told me I would be sick if I did not eat something. She gave me a piece of cake with honey on it. I dropped it and went to the spring. Then I went back to the house, went in and sat down. No one was in there. This was August 16, 1866. I remember two men coming in and talked with me. The next thing I remember, I was on my feet praising the Lord. I thought I would never see any more trouble, and felt I loved all of Adam's posterity. Mother would ask me if I wanted to join the church. I would tell her that I was afraid I was not fit to join the church. I would go to hear the Baptists, and would think O, if I was just fit to be with them. I thought it would be a sin to offer myself to that good people.

In about two years I joined the Methodist Church, but was not satisfied there. On Saturday before the fourth Sunday in May, 1876, I went to Lynville and offered to the church, and was received and baptized by Elder Zechariah Angel. On the 23rd of September 1878 I made the attempt to preach; and have been trying ever since.

I desire the prayers of all the people of God.

Jesus wept. - John 11:35

WILLIAM COWPER, HYMN WRITER

from John Gadsby's
Memoirs of Hymn-Writers and Compilers

Cowper (William) was born at Berkhampstead, Hertfordshire, Nov. 15, 1731. In his autobiography he says, "I cannot recollect that, until I was in my 32nd year, I had ever any serious impressions of a religious kind, or at all bethought myself of the things of my salvation, except in two or three instances." At 10 years old he was sent to the Westminster School, where, he says, he learnt Latin and Greek at the expense of knowledge much more important. "That I may do justice to the place of my education, I must relate one mark of religious discipline, which, in my time, was observed at Westminster. I mean the pains which Dr. Nicholls took to prepare us for confirmation. The old man acquitted himself of this duty like one who had a deep sense of its importance; and I believe most of us were struck by his manner and affected by his exhortation. Then, for the first time, I attempted to pray in secret; but, being little accustomed to that exercise of the heart and having very childish notions of religion I found it a difficult and painful task, and was even then frightened at my own insensibility. This difficulty, though it did not subdue my good purposes till the ceremony of confirmation was passed, soon after entirely conquered them. I relapsed into a total forgetfulness of God, with all the disadvantages of being the more hardened, for being softened to no purpose. At 12 or 13 I was seized with the smallpox. I mention this only to show that, at that early age, my heart was become proof against the ordinary means a gracious God employs for our chastisement. Though I was severely handled by this disease, and in imminent danger, yet, neither in the course of it, nor during my recovery, had I any sentiments of contrition, any thought of God or eternity. On the contrary, I was scarcely raised from the bed of pain and sickness before the emotions of sin became more violent than ever, and the devil seemed rather to have gained than lost an advantage over me; so readily did I admit his suggestions, and so passive was I under them. By this time I became such an adept in the infernal art of lying, that I was seldom guilty of a fault for which I could not invent an apology capable of deceiving the wisest. These, I know, are called schoolboys' tricks; but a total depravity of principle, and the work of the father of lies, are universally at the bottom of them. At the age of 18, being tolerably well furnished with grammatical knowledge, but as ignorant of all kinds of religion as the satchel at my back, I was taken from Westminster; and, having spent about nine months at home, was sent to acquire the practice of the law with an attorney." — At 21, he took possession of a set of chambers in the Temple; but, soon after his settlement there, was struck with such a dejection of spirits that none but those who have felt the same can have the least conception of. Day and night he was upon the rack, lying down in horror and rising up in despair. He soon lost all relish for those studies to which he had before been so much attached; they had now no longer any charms for him. He had need of something more salutary than amusement, but had no one to direct him where to find it. At length he met with Herbert's Poems, and though he did not find in them what he wanted - a cure for his malady, yet his mind never seemed so much relieved as while he was reading them. In this state he continued for nearly a year, when, having experienced the inefficacy of all human means, he was at length driven to God in prayer. "Such," says he, "is the rank our Redeemer hold in our esteem, that we never resort to him but in the last instance, when all creatures have failed to succor us. My hard heart was at length softened and my stubborn knees taught to bow." He went with some friends to Southampton, where he spent several months. Soon after their arrival, they walked about two miles from the town, and sat down upon an eminence, when, on a sudden, it was as if another sun had been kindled in the heavens on purpose to despel his sorrow. The weight of his misery was taken off, and his heart became light and joyful in a moment. He could have wept with transport had he been alone. But Satan and his wicked heart soon persuaded him that he was indebted for his deliverance to nothing but a change of season and scene. "By this means the blessing was turned into a poison, teaching me to conclude that nothing but a continued circle of diversion and indulgence of appetite could secure me from a relapse." Upon this hellish principle, away went all thoughts of religion and of dependence upon God. Having spent about 12 years in the Temple, in an uninterrupted course of sinful indulgence, he obtained at length so complete a victory over his conscience, that all remonstrances from that quarter were in vain. Though at this time little better than an infidel, yet, when half intoxicated, he was often employed in vindicating the truth of Scripture, while in the very act of rebellion against its dictates. At one time he went so far as to assert he would willingly have his right hand cut off, so that he might but be enabled to live according to the gospel. This inconsistency of his was visible to others as well as to himself, insomuch that a deistical friend of his cut short the matter by alleging that, if what he said were true, he was certainly damned by his own choosing. At length he appears to have spent nearly all his money, and begun to be apprehensive of want. Through the influence of a relative, he was appointed Clerk of the Journals of the House of Lords. He acknowledges that he was totally unfit for the office, and yet he labored hard to make himself master of the duties. But God had designed other things for him. "To this dilemma," he says, "was I reduced, either to keep possession of the office to the last extremity, and by so doing expose myself to a public rejection for inefficiency, or else to fling it up at once, and by this means to run the hazard of ruining my benefactor's right of appointment, by bringing his discretion into question. In this situation, such a fit of passion has sometimes seized me that I have cried out aloud, and cursed the hour of my birth, lifting up my eyes to heaven at the same time, not as a suppliant, but in the hellish spirit of rancorous reproach and blasphemy against my Maker. I made one effort of the devotional kind; for, having found a prayer or two in that repository of self-righteousness and pharisaical lumber, 'The Whole Duty of Man,' I said them a few nights, but soon laid them aside." He now began to look upon madness as the only chance remaining, and earnestly wished for it, that he might be excused from appearing at the Bar of the House of Lords. The day of decision drew near, and then came the great temptation - the dark and hellish purpose of self-murder. He thought perhaps there was no God; or the Scriptures might be false, and if so, God had nowhere forbidden suicide. At any rate, his misery, even in hell itself, he thought, would be more supportable. Accordingly, in Nov., 1763 he purchased half an ounce of laudanum, resolving to use it as soon as he was convinced there was no other way of escape. He went into the fields, to find a house or a ditch in which to die; but his mind was changed. He thought drowning would be better. He took a coach to the Tower Wharf, intending to throw himself into the Thames from the Custom-house Quay, but the water was low, and there was a porter seated upon some goods. He returned to the coach, and put up the shutters. Twenty times had he the vial to his mouth, distracted between the desire of death and the dread of it, and even at the time it seemed as if an invisible hand swayed the bottle downwards. A convulsive agitation seemed to deprive him of the use of his limbs. He reached the Temple, and prepared himself for the last scene. He poured the laudanum into a small basin, set it on a chair by the bedside, half undressed himself, lay down between the blankets, and, shuddering with horror, reached forth his hands towards the basin, when the fingers of both his hands became so closely contracted, as if bound with a cord, that they became entirely useless. He could indeed have guided the basin to his mouth with his hands, as his arms were not at all affected, but the circumstance struck him with wonder, and he lay down to muse upon it, when he heard his laundress's husband coming in, which frustrated his design for that time. The next morning was to place him at the Bar of the House, and he was determined not to see it. He went to bed and slept till 3 o'clock, when, taking his penknife, he endeavored to force it into his heart, but it would not penetrate. The clock struck 7, and instantly it occurred to him that there was no time to be lost. He took his garter, and, forming a noose, fixed it about his neck, but twice did the iron and framework of the bed break under his weight. The third effort was more likely to succeed. He fastened the garter to the top of the door, which was a very high one, and, pushing away the chair, hung at his whole length. While he hung, he heard a voice say distinctly, "'Tis over!" but it did not at all alarm him nor affect his resolution. He hung so long, that he lost all sense and consciousness of existence. When he came to himself again, he thought himself in hell. The sound of his own groans was all that he heard. The garter had broken, and he was lying on his face. The stagnation of blood under one eye, and a red circle round his neck, showed plainly that he had been on the brink of eternity. His laundress must have passed the door while he was hanging on it, as she was in the adjoining room. On hearing him fall, she went into his bedroom to ask him if he were not well, and said she feared he had been in a fit. He sent for his relative, and related to him the whole affair. His words were, My dear Mr. Cowper, you terrify me. To be sure, you cannot hold the office at this rate." And thus ended his connection with the Parliament Office. "To this moment," he says, "I had felt no concern of a spiritual kind. Ignorant of original sin, and insensible of the guilt of actual transgression, I understood neither the law nor the gospel. I was as much unacquainted with Christ in all his saving offices as if his blessed name had never reached me. But now a new scene opened upon me. Conviction of sin took place, especially of that just committed. The meanness of it, and its atrocious nature, were exhibited to me in colors so inconceivably strong, that I despised myself with a contempt not to be imagined or expressed, for having attempted it. This sense of it secured me from the repetition of a crime which I could not now reflect on without abhorrence. Before I arose from bed, it was suggested to me that there was nothing wanted but murder to fill up the measure of my iniquities; and that, though I had failed in my design, yet I had all the guilt of that crime to answer to. A sense of God's wrath, and a deep despair of escaping it, instantly succeeded. The fear of death became much more prevalent in me now than even the desire of death had been. My sins were now set in array before me. I began to see and feel that I had lived without God in the world. As I walked to and fro in my chambers, I said within myself, 'There was never so abandoned a wretch - so great a sinner!' All my worldly sorrows seemed now as if they had never been; the terrors of my mind, which succeeded them, seemed so great, and so much more afflicting. One moment I thought myself shut out from mercy by one chapter, and the next by another. The sword of the Spirit seemed to guard the tree of life from my touch, and to flame against me in every avenue by which I attempted to approach it." If for a moment a book or a companion turned away his attention from himself, a flash from hell seemed to be thrown into his mind, and he said within himself, "What are these things to me who am damned?" He feared he had committed the unpardonable sin, and no argument that could be used in extenuation of his guilt could gain a moment's admission. Life appeared more desirable than death, only because it was a barrier between him and everlasting burnings. He took his Prayer Book and endeavored to pray out of it, but immediately experienced the impossibility of drawing nigh to God unless God first drew nigh to him; and, with the most rooted conviction, he gave himself up to despair. "I felt a sense of burning in my heart, like that of real fire, and concluded it was an earnest of those eternal flames which would soon receive me. I laid myself down, howling with horror, while my knees smote against each other. In this condition my brother found me, and the first words I spoke were, 'O brother, I am damned! Think of eternity, and think what it is to be damned!'" At length he was visited by Martin Madan, who spoke to him of sin and salvation, which seemed to cause hope to spring up. But he says, "What I had experienced was but the beginning of sorrows, and a long train of still greater terrors was at hand. I slept usual three hours well, and then awoke with ten times stronger an alienation from God than ever. Satan plied me close with horrible visions, and more horrible voices. My ears rang with the sound of torments that seemed to await me. Then did 'the pains of hell get hold of me,' and before daybreak the very 'sorrows of death encompassed me.' A numbness seized the extremities of my body, and life seemed to retreat before it. My hands and feet became cold and stiff; a cold sweat stood upon my forehead; my heart seemed at every pulse to beat its last, and my soul to cling to my lips as on the very brink of departure. No convicted criminal ever feared death more or was more assured of dying. At 11 o'clock my brother called upon me, and in about an hour after his arrival, that distemper of mind I had wished for so ardently actually seized me. While I traversed the apartment in the most horrible dismay of soul, expecting every moment that the earth would open and swallow me up, my conscience scaring me, the avenger of blood pursuing me, and the city of refuge out of reach and out of sight, a strange and horrible darkness fell upon me. If it were possible that a heavy blow could light upon the brain with-out touching the skull, such was the sensation I felt. I clapped my hand to my forehead, and cried aloud through the pain it gave me. At every stroke my thoughts and expressions became more wild and indistinct; all that remained to me clear was the sense of sin and the expectation of punishment." - It was now found necessary to confine him in a lunatic asylum, where he remained for about eight months. "All that passed," he says, "during these eight months, was conviction of sin and despair of mercy." At one time he seemed even to regret that he had not given every scope to his wicked appetite, and even envied those who, being departed, had the consolation to reflect that they had well earned their miserable inheritance. Soon after his confinement, he threw aside his Bible, as a book in which he had no interest or portion. But now the happy period which was to shake off his fetters had arrived. He flung himself into a chair, and, seeing a Bible, ventured to open it. The first verse he saw was Rom. iii.25. The full beams of the Sun of Righteousness immediately shone upon him. He saw the sufficiency of Christ's atonement, and his pardon sealed in his blood. He thought he must have died with gratitude and joy. His eyes were filled with tears, and his voice was choked with transport. For many succeeding weeks tears were ready to flow if he did but speak of the gospel, or mention the name of Jesus. Rejoicing day and night was his employment. He was too happy to sleep much, and thought it was lost time that was spent in slumber. "My doctor," he says, "ever watchful and apprehensive for my welfare, was now alarmed, lest the sudden transition from despair to joy should terminate in a fatal phrensy. But the Lord 'was my strength and my song,' and was 'become my salvation.' I said, 'I shall not die, but live and declare the works of the Lord; he has chastened me, but not given me over unto death.' 'O give thanks unto the Lord, for his mercy endureth for ever.' In a short time Dr. Cotton became satisfied, and acquiesced with the soundness of my cure; and much sweet communion I had with him concerning the things of our salvation. He visited me every morning while I staid with him, which was twelve months after my recovery. The gospel was the delightful theme of our conversation. No trial has befallen me since, but what might be expected in a state of warfare. Satan indeed has changed his battery. Before my conversion, sensual gratification was the warfare with which he sought to destroy me. Being of a naturally easy, quiet disposition, I was seldom tempted to anger, yet that passion it is which now gives me the most disturbance, and occasions the sharpest conflicts. But Jesus being my strength, I fight against it; and if I am not conqueror, I am not overcome." In 1765 he removed to Huntingdon, and in 1767 to Olney, where he contracted a close friendship with John Newton. Here it was that the Hymns by Newton and Cowper, called Olney Hymns, were written. When Newton removed to London, Cowper wrote, "The vicarage-house became a melancholy object as soon as Mrs. Newton had left it; when you left it, it became more melancholy; now it is actually occupied by another family, I cannot even look at it without being shocked. As I walked in the garden last evening, I saw the smoke issue from the study chimney, and said to myself, 'That used to be a sign that Mr. Newton was there; but it is so no longer. The walls of the house know nothing of the change that has taken place; the bolt of the chamber door sounds just as it used to do; and when Mr. P - goes up stairs, for aught I now or ever shall know, the fall of his foot can hardly perhaps be distinguished from that of Mr. Newton. But Mr. Newton's foot will never be heard upon that staircase again.' These reflections, and such as these, occurred to me on this occasion. If I were in a condition to leave Olney, I certainly would not stay in it. It is no attachment to the place that binds me here, but an unfitness for every other. I lived in it once, but now I am buried in it, and have no business in the world outside my sepulchre. My appearance would startle them, and theirs would be shocking to me."

Cowper subsequently endured many severe trials, but he entered into his rest April 25, 1800. Early in the Friday morning a decided alteration for the worse was perceived to have taken place. A deadly change appeared in his countenance. In this insensible state he remained till a few minutes before five in the afternoon, when he gently, and without the slightest apparent pain, ceased to breathe, and his happy spirit escaped from that body in which, amidst the thickest gloom of darkness, it had so long been imprisoned, and took its flight to the regions of perfect purity and bliss. In a manner so mild and gentle did death make its approach, that though his kinsman, his medical attendant, and three others were standing at the foot of the bed, with their eyes fixed upon his dying countenance, neither of them could determine the precise moment of his departure. A short time previously the king, George III., had granted him a pension of £300 a year, but it came too late. Maunder, in his "Biographical Treasury," the most bigoted biographical work I ever read says, "Cowper fell into a terrible state of nervous and mental debility, but was restored by the skill and humanity of Dr. Cotton." How different is this from Cowper's own account, as given above! — It does not appear that Cowper ever stood up to preach. He says, "I have had many anxious thoughts about taking orders, and I believe every new convert is apt to think himself called upon for that purpose; but it has pleased God, by means which there is no need to particularise, to give me full satisfaction as to the propriety of declining it; indeed, they who have the least ideas of what I have suffered from the dread of public exhibitions, will readily excuse my never attempting them hereafter. In the mean time, if it please the almighty, I may be an instrument of turning many to the truth, in a private way, and hope that my endeavors, in this way have not been entirely unsuccessful. Had I the zeal of a Moses, I should want an Aaron to be my spokesman."

The following may not be altogether without interest or use. It is extracted from one of Cowper's letters:

"You never said a better thing than when you assured Mr.__ of the expedience of a gift of bedding to the poor of Olney. There is no one article of this world's comfort with which they are more unprovided. When a poor woman, and an honest one, whom we know, carried home two pairs of blankets, a pair for herself and husband, and a pair for six children, as soon as the children saw them, they jumped out of their straw, caught them in their arms, kissed and blessed them, and danced for joy. An old woman, a very old one, the first night she found herself so comfortably covered, could not sleep a wink, being kept awake by the contrary emotions of transport on the one hand, and fear of not being thankful enough on the other."

Cowper's hymns are well known. The hymn commencing, "breathe from the gently south, O Lord!"has been usually ascribed to Newton; but Southey, in his edition of Cowper's works, says,

"This hymn is here restored to him (Cowper) on the authority of Mrs. Johnson, the widow of his excellent kinsman." And I believe there is no doubt that it is Cowper's, though at one time I doubted it. The omission of the "C." must have been an error of the printer's. The hymn commencing, "God moves in a mysterious way," is, perhaps, one of Cowper's best. Some say it was written while taking a solitary walk in a field, feeling depression coming upon him; and others say it was written one night when he had ordered a man to drive him to a certain place by a river that he might drown himself; but as the man could not find the spot, though he had always been well acquainted with it, Cowper saw the Lord's hand in it, and the snare was broken. I believe the former to be the true version.

COLLECTION OF HYMNS BY COWPER

HYMN OF REDEMPTION
Zech. 13:1; 1 John 1:7

There is a fountain, fill'd with blood
Drawn from Immanuel's veins;
And sinners, plunged beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains.

The dying thief rejoiced to see
That fountain in his day;
O may I there, though vile as he,
Wash all my sins away

Dear, dying Lamb! thy precious blood
Shall never lose its power,
Till all the ransomed church of God
Be saved, to sin no more.

E'er since, by faith, I saw the stream
Thy flowing wounds supply,
Redeeming love has been my them,
And shall be till I die.

Then in a nobler, sweeter song,
I'll sing they power to save,
When this poor, lisping, stamm'ring tongue
Lies silent in the grave

Gen. 5:24

O for a closer walk with God,
A calm and heav'nly frame;
A light to shine upon the road
That leads me to the Lamb!

Where is the blessedness I knew
When first I saw the Lord?
Where is the soul-refreshing view
Of Jesus, and his word?

What peaceful hours I then enjoyed!
How sweet their memory still!
But now I find an aching void

The world can never fill.
Return, O holy Dove! return,
Sweet messenger of rest!
I hate the sins that made thee mourn,
And drove these from my breast.

The dearest idol I have known,
Whate'er that idol be,
Help me to tear it from they throne,
And worship only thee.

So shall my walk be close with God,
Calm and serene my frame;
So purer light shall mark the road
That leads me to the Lamb.

HYMN OF CONFLICTS AND DELIVERANCES

1 Pet. 1:6,7

'Tis my happiness below,
Not to live without the Cross;
But the Savior's power to know,
Sanctifying every loss.

Trials must and will befall;
But with humble faith to see
Love inscribed upon them all,
This is happiness to me.

Trials make the promise sweet;
Trials give new life to prayer;
Trials bring me to his feet,
Lay me low, and keep me there.

Did I meet no trials here,
No chastisement by the way,
Might I not with reason fear,
I should be a cast away?

Bastards may escape the rod,
Sunk in earthly, vain delight;
But the true-born child of God
Must not, would not if he might.

HYMN OF THE CHRISTIAN

I thirst, but not as once I did,
The vain delights of earth to share;
Thy wounds, Emmanuel, all forbid
That I should seek my pleasures there.

It was the sight of thy dear cross,
First weaned my soul from earthly things;
And taught me to esteem as dross
The mirth of fools and pomp of kings.

I want that grace that springs from thee;
That quickens all things where it flows;
And makes a wretched thorn like me,
Bloom as the myrtle, or the rose.

Dear fountain of delight unknown!
No longer sink below the brim;
But overflow, and pour me down
A living and life-giving stream!

For sure, of all the plants that share
The notice of thy Father's eye,
None proves less grateful to his care,
Or yields him meaner fruit than I.

Luke 1:37

For with God nothing shall be impossible.

HYMN OF PRAISE
Isaiah 12

I will priase thee every day,
Now thine anger's turned away!
Comfortable thoughts arise
From the bleeding sacrifice.
Here, in the fair gospel field,
Wells of free salvation yield
Streams of life a plenteous store,
And my soul shall thirst no more.

Jesus is become at length
My salvation and my strength;
And his praises shall prolong,
While I live, my pleasant song.
Praise ye, then, his glorious name;
Publish his exalted fame!
Still his worth your praise exceeds;
Excellent are all his deeds.

HYMN OF THE CHURCH
Isa. 60:18-20

Hear what God the Lord hath spoken
O my people faint and few;
Comfortless, afflicted, broken,
Fair abodes I build for you.
Scenes of heartfelt tribulation,
Shall no more perplex your ways;
You shall name your walls, salvation,
And your gates shall all be praise.

There, like streams that feed the garden,
Pleasures without end shall flow;
For the Lord your faith regarding,
All his bounty shall bestow:
Still in undisturb'd possession,
Peace, and righteousness shall reign;
Never shall you feel oppression,
Or the noise of war again.

Ye no more your suns descending,
Waning moons no more shall see;
But your griefs for ever ending,
Find eternal noon in me;
God shall rise, and shining o'er you,
Change to day the gloom of night;
He the Lord shall be your glory,
God your everlasting light.

HYMNS OF ENCOURAGEMENT

His master taken from his head,
Elisha saw him go,
And in desponding accents said,
"Ah! what must Israel do?"

But he forgot the Lord who lifts
The beggar to the throne;
Nor knew that all Elijah's gifts
Would soon be made his own.

What! when a Paul has run his course,
Or when Apollos dies,
Is Israel left without resource?
And have we no supplies?

Yes! while the dear Redeemer lives,
We have a boundless store,
And shall be fed with what he gives,
Who lives for evermore.

John 21:16

Hark, my soul! it is the Lord;
'Tis thy Saviour, hear his word;
Jesus speaks, and speaks to thee,
"Say, poor sinner, lov'st thou me?"

"I delivered thee when bound,
And, when wounded, healed thy wound;
Sought thee wandering, set thee right,
Turned thy darkness into light."

"Can a woman's tender care
Cease towards the child she bare?
Yes, she may forgetful be,
Yet will I remember thee."

"Mine is an unchanging love,
Higher than the heights above;
Deeper than the depths beneath;
Free and faithful, strong as death."

"Thou shalt see my glory soon,
When the work of grace is done;
Partner of my throne shalt be!
Say, poor sinner, lov'st thou me?"

Lord, it is my chief complaint,
That my love is weak and faint;
Yet I love thee and adore:
O, for grace to love thee more!

When darkness long has vailed my mind,
And smiling day once more appears;
Then, my Redeemer, then I find
The folly of my doubts and fears.

I chide my unbelieving heart,
And blush that I should ever be
Thus prone to act so base a part,
Or harbor one hard thought of thee!

O! let me then at length be taught
(What I am still so slow to learn)
That God is love, and changes not,
Nor knows the shadow of a turn.

Sweet truth, and easy to repeat!
But when my faith is sharply tried
I find myself a learner yet,
Unskillful, weak, and apt to slide.

But O my Lord, one look from thee
Subdues the disobedient will;
Drives doubt and discontent away,
And thy rebellious worm is still.

Thou art as ready to forgive,
As I am ready to repine;
Thou, therefore, all the praise receive;
Be shame, and self-abhorrence, mine.

HYMN OF TRUST
Mark 4:39

The billows swell, the winds are high
Clouds overcast my wintry sky;
Out of the depths to thee I call,
My fears are great, my strength is small.

O Lord, the pilot's part perform,
And guide and guard me thro' the storm;
Defend me from each threatening ill,
Control the waves, say, "peace, be still."

Amidst the roaring of the sea,
My soul still hangs its hope on thee;
Thy constant love, thy faithful care,
Is all that saves me from despair.

Dangers of every shape and name,
Attend the followers of the Lamb,
Who leave the world's deceitful shore,
And leave it to return no more.

HYMN OF PEACE AND JOY

Sometimes a light surprises
The Christian while he sings;
It is the Lord who rises
With healing in His wings;
When comforts are declining,
He grants the soul again
A season of clear shining,
To cheer it after rain.

In holy contemplation
We sweetly then pursue
The theme of God's salvation,
And find it ever new;
Set free from present sorrow,
We cheerfully can say—
E'en let the unknown morrow
Bring with it what it may.

It can bring with it nothing,
But He will bear us through;
Who gives the lilies clothing,
Will clothe His people too:
Beneath the spreading heavens
No creature but is fed;
And He, who feeds the ravens,
Will give His children bread.

Though vine nor fig tree neither
Their wonted fruit shall bear;
Though all the field should wither
Nor flocks nor herds be there;
Yet God the same abiding,
His praise shall tune my voice,
For, while in Him confiding,
I cannot but rejoice.

Far from the world, O Lord, I flee,
From strife and tumult far;
From scenes where Satan wages still
His most successful war.

The calm retreat, the silent shade,
With prayer and praise agree;
And seem, by Thy sweet bounty made,
For those who follow Thee.

There, if Thy Spirit touch the soul,
And grace her mean abode,
Oh, with what peace, and joy, and love,
She communes with her God!

Author and Guardian of my life,
Sweet source of light Divine,
And (all harmonious names in one)
My Saviour, Thou art mine.

What thanks I owe Thee, and what love,
A boundless, endless store,
Shall echo through the realms above,
When time shall be no more.

HYMN OF RESIGNATION

O Lord, my best desires fulfil,
And help me to resign
Life, health, and comfort to Thy will,
And make Thy pleasure mine.

Why Should I shrink at Thy command,
Whose love forbids my fears?
Or tremble at the gracious hand
That wipes away my tears?

No, rather let me freely yield
What most I prize to Thee;
Who never hast a good withheld,
Or wilt withhold, from me.

Thy favor, all my journey through,
Thou art engaged to grant;
What else I want, or think I do,
'Tis better still to want.

But ah! my inward spirit cries,
Still bind me to Thy sway;
Else the next cloud that veils my skies
Drives all these thoughts away.

Luke 2:13-14

And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying,

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.

HYMN OF REPENTANCE

The Lord will happiness divine
On contrite hearts bestow:
Then tell me, gracious God, is mine
A contrite heart or no?

I hear, but seem to hear in vain,
Insensible as steel;
If aught is felt, 'tis only pain,
To find I cannot feel.

I sometimes think myself inclined
To love Thee, if I could;
But often feel another mind,
Averse to all that's good.

My best desires are faint and few,
I fain would strive for more;
But when I cry, "My strength renew"
Seem weaker than before.

Thy saints are comforted, I know,
And love Thy house of prayer;
I therefore go where others go,
But find no comfort there.

O make this heart rejoice, or ache;
Decide this doubt for me;
And, if it be not broken, break,
And heal it, if it be.

HYMN OF FAITH

Sin enslaved me many years,
And led me bound and blind,
'Till at length a thousand fears
Came swarming o'er my mind;
Where I said in deep distress
Will these sinful pleasures end?
How shall I secure my peace,
And make the Lord my friend?

Friends and minsters said much,
The gospel to enforce;
But my blindness still was such,
I chose a legal course;
Much I fasted, watched, and strove,
Scarce would show my face abroad,
Feared almost, to speak or move,
A stranger still to God.

Thus afraid to trust his grace,
Long time did I rebel;
'Till despairing of my case,
Down at his feet I fell;
Then my stubborn heart he broke,
And subdued me to his sway
By a simple word he spoke,
"Thy sins are done away."

Gen. 12:14

The saints should never be dismayed,
Nor sink in hopeless fear;
For when they least expect his aid,
The Savior will appear.

This Abra'm found, he raised the knife,
GOD saw and said, "Forbear;"
Yon ram shall yield his meaner life,
Behold the victim there.

When Jonah sunk beneath the wave
He thought to rise no more;
But God prepared a fish to save,
And bear him to the shore.

Blessed proofs of power and grace divine,
That meet us in his word!
May every deep-felt care of mine
Be trusted with the Lord.

Wait for his seasonable aid,
And though it tarry, wait:
The promise may be long-delayed,
But cannot come too late.

Of all the gifts thine hand bestows,
Thou Giver of all good!
Not heav'n itself a richer knows,
Than my Redeemer's blood.

Faith too, the blood receiving grace,
From the same hand we gain;
Else sweetly, as it suits our case,
That gift had been in vain.

Till thou thy teaching power apply,
Our hearts refuse to see,
And weak, as a distempered eye,
Shut out the view of thee.

Blind to the merits of thy Son,
What mis'ry we endure!
Yet fly that hand, from which alone,
We could expect a cure.

We praise thee, and would praise thee more,
To thee our all we owe;
The precious Saviour, and the power
That makes him precious, too.

HYMN OF GRACE

Almighty King! Whose wondrous hand Supports the weight of sea and land;
Whose grace is such a boundless store,
No heart shall break that sighs for more.

Thy providence supplies my food,
And 'tis Thy blessing makes it good;
My soul is nourished by Thy word:
Let soul and body praise the Lord!

My streams of outward comfort came
From Him who built this earthly frame;
Whate'er I want His bounty gives,
By Whom my soul forever lives.

Either His hand preserves from pain,
Or, if I feel it, heals again;
From Satan's malice shields my breast,
Or overrules it for the best.

Forgive the song that falls so low
Beneath the gratitude I owe;
It means Thy praise, however poor;
An angel's song can do no more.

HYMN OF REVELATION

The Spirit breathes upon the Word,
And brings the truth to sight;
Precepts and promises afford
A sanctifying light.

A glory gilds the sacred page,
Majestic, like the sun:
It gives a light to every age;
It gives, but borrows none.

Let everlasting thanks be thine
For such a bright display
As makes a world of darkness shine
With beams of heavenly day.

My soul rejoices to pursue
The steps of him I love.
Till glory break upon my view
In brighter worlds above.

PSALM 23

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want.

2 He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters.

3 He restoreth my soul: he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake.

4 Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.

5 Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over.

6 Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.

Sister Pauline passed from this life April 6, 2018 at the age of 93. She was preceded in death by her husband, Warren Hale; son, Gary Hale; parents, Earnest and Rita Lawrence and two brothers, James and Fred Lawrence.

Surviving are her loving and caring daughters and sons-in-law, Sandra and Gerry Shank, Carol and Bennie Ellis and daughter-in-law Debra Hale. Grandchildren, Missy Shank, Jennifer Shank, Angie Ellis, Amber and Kenny Bailey and Randall Hale. A brother, Bill Lawrence and wife Doris, along with two great grandchildren.
